Resolved, That in the death of brother Garrison, the Fraternity have lost a zealous and faithful member; one who lived among us for many years, and ever maintained an untarnished reputation among men and masons, for his fidelity to the principles of Masonry, and honesty of purpose in all the relations of life.

As a member of the Church he was ever faithful to his trust, and seemed to act alone from principle.

As a citizen, he was honest and upright in his dealings; never swerving from duty, but always ready to perform the part of a good citizen.

May his exalted virtues ever remain verdant upon our memories, to stimulate and strengthen us as Masons and Christians, to lead as exemplary life, that our souls may finally be prepared for "that Spiritual building, that house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

Resolved, That his bereaved family have the heart-felt sympathy and condolence of this Lodge.

H. P. WOOTTEN,
W. B. CONYERS,
J. M. RENWINE, } Committee.

MISS GLYCERIAN GILLESPIE, daughter of James S. and Mary A. Gillespie, died Oct. 6th, 1860, at Oak Grove, near Washington, Miss, in the eighteenth year of her age. She was early instructed in the solemn truths of the good Book. She embraced religion at an early age, at Spring Hill, Miss., and was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. For some time before her death, her friends would frequently find her engaged in earnest prayer; and when God called her, she went murmuring, "sweet Jesus." Just blooming into womanhood, she possessed all the qualities that distinguish the refined lady. She was a fond and dutiful daughter, a kind and indulgent sister, and a loving friend. The week preceding her death she suffered intense pain, though she bore it all with Christian fortitude, and was never heard to complain. Kind and attentive friends stood around her dying bed, administering to her last earthly wants, and sending up fervent prayers for her easy access to the spirit world. She passed away so gently that it seemed a quiet slumber instead of death, though it cost us many heart-struggles as we gazed upon her lovely countenance, and knew that we were never again to behold it upon earth. In our heart's wild agony we frequently cry out,

"Oh! for the touch of a vanished hand,
And the sound of a voice that's still."

But a moment's reflection brings the thought that those hands are now clasped in prayer to God, and that sweet voice is swelling in notes of music to the praise of our great Creator.

S. W. G.

SARAH LOUISA, daughter of Edward and Eliza B. Bryan, 12th, 1835, she was born in Lawrence Co., Ga., March 1860, aged 24 years and six months. [illegible] grange female college while that institution was under the supervision of Rev. J. T. Montgomery, and graduated July, 1853. At the age of fifteen, while in Lagrange, she professed conversion, and joined the M. E. Church, under the pastoral care of Rev. J. P. Duncan. After she left school the allurements of the world proved too strong for her then unformed character, and she was led off by them. This estrangement did not continue long. She returned, and re-consecrated herself to God, and ever after kept her vows. She possessed rare endowments: was capable of grappling with error; a heart, warm and generous; religion permeating her whole life, she felt that she was not her own, that she had been bought with a price," and that the chief end of life was to do good. The Church at Greenwood, Fla., where she worshipped, was completed through her influence. The Washington City church received her sympathy and aid. The Sunday School was a field in which she earnestly labored. Long will her large circle of acquaintances remember her sweet earnest spirit. Many were her days of suffering, but through them all she exhibited the meek, submissive spirit of a true disciple of Christ. A few months since, her anxious friends carried her to Philadelphia, to consult the physicians of that city. When they, after examination, told her that her days would soon be numbered, she received the intelligence as calmly as if it had been the announcement of an ordinary event of the day. She said to a sister who was with her: "Tell mother to grieve not for me, my faith is strong, God will save me."—Just before she departed to be an angel, she motioned to a friend to come to her, and whispered, "Oh, I shall soon be with Jesus Christ, and see him as he is." After she had lost the power even to whisper, she was asked if she was still willing to die. She looked up, and by a motion of the head answered in the affirmative; a few moments afterward, the assurance was repeated. Thus she fell asleep. A few months since, her father, a veteran of the cross, passed away, like a summer's sun in a cloudless sky. She has joined him in the fearless land. Those of her family left behind are journeying to that same bright world.

J. M. CAMPBELL.

MRS. ELIZA DE FRANCE, consort of P. W. DeFrance, Esq., died in Carroll Parish, La., September 27th, 1860, in the 29th year of her age. She was a native of Hinds Co., Miss., but came to this parish with her parents in 1847. To a large circle of friends and relatives in both States, the sad intelligence of her untimely death come with a bereaving sadness that language can poorly express. The trite aphorism that death loves a shining mark, was never more truly and sadly illustrated. A heart warm with all generous and kindly impulses, a hand open as day to melting charity, a character brightened and purified by all christian graces. Many a long weary day shall come and go ere the void she has left can be filled, or the lovely beauty of her life in the relations of wife, mother, daughter, sister, and friend shall cease to awaken loving hearts to the deepest emotions of sorrow. Her last moments, as indeed her whole life, was soothed and sustained by the unfaltering trust of the Christian's Hope. Oh, the sweet counsel, the sacred admonitions, the blessings—as from the glory land,—that fell from her dying lips on the weeping circle that stood round her. The sadness of soul at the severing of the dearest ties that can bind to earth, was soothed by the trust in a Savior's love, and the comforting assurance of His blessed Word. With her, the mortal has put on immortality. The gale is here; the loss is to the bowed and stricken hearts of aged parents, loving husband, tender children, and idolizing relatives and friends. Her warm heart is stilled in death, her loving smile and gentle voice have gone forever, but we have the memory of her saluted virtues, and the example of her holy life, to cheer us through this vale of tears to the union of the great hereafter.

C. A. D.

ROBERT R. TATE, son of Benjamin G. and Mary Tate, was born in Limestone Co., Ala., Sept. 24th, 1821, and died of erysipelas, in Adams Co., Miss., Oct. 7th, 1860. Mr. Tate had been afflicted most of his life, which prevented his mingling much with society abroad. He was remarkable for his modesty and unspotted morality, and having enjoyed for thirty years the prayers, example, and religious training of a truly pious mother, he was long the subject of religious impressions. He inherited a fine estate from a deceased uncle, whose name he bore, and having no family of his own he appropriated his income to the comfort of his aged parents, and an only sister and brother. During his last illness, which lasted over two weeks, his mind was almost wholly occupied with the subject of religion. Within a few days of his attack he sent for one of the preachers of Fayette circuit to receive him into the Church. He said that he was converted ten years ago, and had been a man of prayer ever since, but his remoteness from church and also from church privileges, and especially his extreme diffidence, had prevented his making a public profession of religion. This fact, no doubt, interfered with his spiritual progress, and the non-profession of a man so universally esteemed and confided and confided in, was a loss to the world. Ten days before his death he had his numerous family of servants called, and gave them a very appropriate and feeling exhortation to seek and serve the Lord and make sure of heaven. I was invited early to the year to take his plantation into my mission, and almost intended for as hospital was soon converted into a commodious house of worship, and he was never absent from his chapel when I was there, and he gave me full liberty to introduce every doctrine and ordinance of the Church among his servants. No man, whether in or out of the Church, seemed to take more interest in the religious instruction and christianizing of his colored people than he did. His oft-repeated protestations of faith in Christ, and hope of heaven, made to the family and visiting brethren during his sickness, were of the most satisfactory and consoling kind. He had glorious visions of sweet-heavenly music, and though usually remarkable for his calmness, his religious joy was several times quite elevated. He earnestly desired to see the pastor of his servants, and I was glad to be with him the night before his death, and hear him witness a good confession. His mind was clear to the last, and he seemed to die easy, and in great peace. By the request of the family I remained and preached his funeral, before the burial, to a deeply affected audience, all of whom felt that they had lost one of their best neighbors, and the county one of its best citizens.

J. G. JONES.

EUNICE REBECCA ANN, daughter of Elisha G. and Priscilla Cropper, died in Magnolia, Pike county, Miss., Oct. 6th, 1860, aged 6 years, 7 months and 23 days.

J. W. B.

FRANCIS ALBION CENTENARY, son of Joseph W. and Ann E. Houck, died in Greensboro, Ala., Oct. 5, 1860, aged 21 years, 3 months, 2 days.

MARTHA W., wife of Dr. Samuel W. Vaughan, Sen., died in Summerfield, Ala., on the 3d ult., in the 48th year of her age. The subject of this notice was a native of North Carolina. In early life she removed with her parents to the State of Tennessee, where she was married to him who now mourns this heavy calamity, Dec. 24th, 1829. For a number of years she lived in Alabama and in this community, where she made many friends and strong ardent friendships. This mysterious providence has greatly obscured the light of a happy home, and hangs upon the brow of a devoted husband and a large family of children the mantle of sadness and gloom. The social, domestic, and religious character of this excellent lady cannot receive a merited tribute in the compass of a short obituary, nor will the writer attempt it. In all the relations of wife, mother, mistress, and neighbor, few have been more successful and faultless.—The older children wear the impress of her skill and perseverance in the performance of the difficult and delicate duties of a mother. The younger ones must feel their loss to be irreparable. She was reared by pious parents, and honored her religious training. She was converted to God and joined the M. E. Church in early youth, and continued faithful and consistent to the last. For a considerable time her health had been delicate and declining, which impressed her that her end was nigh. She lived much in connexion with God and the land of spirits. It was a daily practice with her to retire from human observation with her Bible, and commune with the Savior in his Word. It was not without a hard struggle that she became resigned to part with husband and children, but by a gracious revelation of light, and the promise of a "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," the victory was complete. While good Bishop Andrew comforted and prayed with her for the last time, she became ecstatic and praised God almost with her expiring breath. The way through the dark valley was cheered by the sunlight of glory. It would be pleasant to write the dying words, and the warm-hearted exhortations and counsels to weeping ones, but these are treasured up in grateful remembrance by those to whom they sacredly belong, and will not soon be forgotten. We are all passing away!

W. M. MURRAH.

☞ Nashville Advocate please copy.

COLIN S. TARPLEY.—The following preamble and resolutions of the third quarterly conference of Jackson station, Miss. Conference, were recently adopted:

The death of Brother Colin S. Tarpley is an event of melancholy interest to the Church and quarterly conference at Jackson, Miss. Perhaps we do not detract from any surviving member by saying we could have sustained their loss better than his. A man with every qualification which fitted him for usefulness; endowed with capacity beyond the average ability of men; with an experience embracing largely a knowledge of human nature and life; and enriched with the treasures of general reading, and mature thought, and above all, with that "wisdom from above," which hallowed his affections, governed his actions, gave birth and animation to his hopes, and quickened his zeal; he stood ever ready for every good word and work, and well it becomes the Church to stand mourning by his grave, for in a large sense he was the life of the Church. He both planned and labored for her religious prosperity. In the conference we miss the wisdom of his counsel; in the class-room we miss the light of his joyous and chastened experience, the encouragement of his steadfast faith. In his religious intercourse he was often heard to lament the lack of steadfast piety in his christian life; but in the latter years of his life the Spirit consecration was upon him. He realized and felt that the problem of christian experience was alone to be solved in a heart of hallowed affections, and that it involved the limits of entire devotion to God. As a distinguished citizen and an eminent jurist, we might justly honor him, and with his fellow-citizens mingle a common grief, and rejoice to pay tribute to his worth and memory. But as a christian, brother Tarpley has, to us, higher and holier endearments, in the purity of his character, the fellowship of a common faith, and a life of enlarging labors and usefulness; and as a church, we cherish above all the memory of his christian character, and shall strive to emulate his virtues. But while we are called to go mourn his loss, the triumph of his death encourages us to morn confidence in the God of his salvation.

Be it therefore resolved, That this quarterly conference record with unfeigned sorrow the death of our much beloved brother, Colin S. Tarpley.

2. That we tender to his bereaved family our deepest sympathy.

3. That this preamble and resolution be spread upon the minutes of the conference, and be forwarded to the New Orleans and Christian Advocates for publication.

THOMAS GREEN,
WHITFIELD HARRINGTON,
} Com

THOMAS B. BRABSTON.—At the fourth quarterly meeting conference for Warren circuit, Mississippi Conference, held at Asbury Church, on Saturday, 13th October, 1860, the following preamble and resolutions were passed:

Whereas, it has pleased the Great Head of the Church to remove by death our beloved brother, Thomas B. Brabston, who was highly esteemed by his brethren, and all who knew him, as a devoted Christian and efficient steward of the Warren circuit, Mississippi Conference,—

Therefore be it resolved, that by the death of brother Brabston, this conference has lost a worthy member and the Church a faithful steward; that we deeply sympathize with the bereaved family of our deceased brother, and commend them to the prayers of our Church and to the grace of God, that this sad affliction may be overruled to their eternal good.

Resolved 2d, That these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of the conference, and that a copy be forwarded to the N. O. Advocate; also, that a copy be sent to the family of our beloved brother.

L. PEARCE, P. E.

J. F. BOLLE, Sec.

FANNIE R. LITTLEPAGE, consort of Rev. S. C. Littlepage, of the Texas Conference, departed this life, at the residence of [illegible] county, Texas, on the evening of Aubers county, Alabama, in the [illegible] parents (Welch and Rebecca Kidd) to Louisiana in Chambers county, Texas, in 1855. She embraced religion under the ministry of Rev. James L. Wright, in 1848, and on the 1st day of June, 1859, was married to her now bereaved husband. From the day of her conversion to her death, I am told, her walk was consistent with her profession. She possessed a meek and quiet spirit, had clear perceptions of the plan of salvation, and delighted in the services of the sanctuary. She was well qualified for the station which she was called to fill, and in becoming the wife of an itinerant, had counted up the cost, and resolved upon the sacrifices she must necessarily make. She was with us upon his circuit but a short time, but many friends will long cherish her memory. She was not to her right mind during the latter part of her sickness, and consequently gave no parting evidence of her triumph, but her every day walk, and her strong, unyielding faith in the Redeemer, often expressed more by actions than in words, even up to the day of her sickness, drive away all doubt, and fill our hearts with strong consolation. "When mortality shall put on immortality," and when "we shall know as we are known;" I doubt not we will rejoice and bless God through all eternity for what we now esteem our sorest bereavements. We ought to bow submissively to His will, knowing that every thing is intended for our good; and, though it is natural for us to mourn, we should not forget that her condition is infinitely better than ours, for what we enjoy by faith she enjoys by sight—what we hope for she claims as already hers—while we labor and toil in the militant church, she rejoices in the church triumphant. Our tabernacle is crumbling, and will soon be "dissolved;" but decay and dissolution are unknown in heaven. Who, then, can weep under such circumstances? Who can repine? or who would say to our sister, "Return again to earth?" Rather may we strive to be "also ready," when the summons shall call us away. Sister Littlepage left a little one five weeks old.—May his life be spared, and may he be a comfort to his friends and a blessing to the church.

Springfield, Sept. 12, 1860. J. L. CRABB.

MARY ALABAMA, eldest daughter of Doct. R. L. and Cynthia L. Armstrong, was born near Summerfield, Ala, Nov. 23d, 1855, and died near Pleasant Hill, La., August 24th, 1860. Mary was loved by a large circle of friends, and now sleeps beside her mother and three sweet little sisters. In her last illness when in conversation about the reward of the righteous, and of our duty to pray to our Father in heaven, she answered, "I never neglect that duty; and, dear Pa, I have always thought your life was spared in July last, in answer to my prayer, for when we all thought you were dying, I went to the grove and prayed so earnestly to God to spare you that I felt assured he would, and when I returned you were asleep, and I have always thought your recovery was in answer to my prayer."

R. L. A.

MRS MARY HARRIS, daughter of Joshua and Barbara O. Willis, and wife of Eli Harris, was born in Louisa county, Va., Dec. 29th, 1817, and died very suddenly July 14th, 1860. At a camp-meeting near West Point, Ga., at the age of 16, sister Harris was happily converted, and joined the M. E. Church, and remained a pious and consistent member. So suddenly was she called away that her friends had no opportunity to learn from her, then, the state of her mind; yet a constant life of piety gives full assurance that her end was peace. She was a punctual attendant at the house of God, and showed by her christian walk and godly conversation that there is a reality in our holy religion. A dutiful child, a kind wife, an affectionate mother, and a worthy friend, she was loved by all who knew her. She leaves parents, husband, and children, with a large family connexion, and many friends, to mourn her death.

W. F. A.

MRS. RHODA SCOTT died in Jackson, La., on the 12th of September, 1860. A dear sister and mother in the Church has been suddenly called away to her rest and home in heaven.—Sudden grief and consternation were felt when we heard that she lifted up her hands and fell dead!" But she had been almost forty years preparing for this change, and for months had waited for the summons from the Lord. Mrs. Scott had been favored with a long life, was in the enjoyment of excellent health—was blessed with many children, in whose prosperity she rejoiced. Early in life she began to serve the Lord; she loved her Savior and all his people, delighted in secret prayer, and in the ordinances of God's house; and now, we doubt not, is with the redeemed in glory. She was a faithful and honored member of the Presbyterian Church; but loving all who loved her blessed Lord, she was highly esteemed by all who knew her.

JOHN WILLIAM, only child of James S. and Jennie S. Harris, was born July 5th, 1859, and died July 31st, 1860. Only those who have lost an only child, and that a promising little boy, can fully appreciate the deep sorrow and affliction through which our beloved brother and sister was called to pass, when they said for the last time, "Farewell little Willie!" May the consolations of the gospel comfort them.

A FRIEND.

MRS. MARTHA R. BLACKMAN was born April 27th, 1829, and was about 31 years of age when she died. She was the daughter of Samuel R. Curtis, and was married June 23d, 1853, to R. Blackman. She professed religion when quite young, and was one among those who from youth had served the Lord. Consistent and faithful, her influence was felt for good. She left two daughters, and only a few days elapsed before one of her children followed her to the home of the blessed. So, mother and child were laid to rest near Godfrey's church, Sumter Co., Ala.

H.

DEMARIS THOMASON, consort of John D. Thomason, departed this life at her residence in Franklin Parish, La., Sept. 19th, 1860, in the 52nd year of her age. She embraced religion in 1855, and joined the Methodist Church, in which she lived a consistent member until the day of her death, which came not unexpected to her, for she was severely afflicted for two years with consumption, which she bore with patience and christian resignation, and being perfect through suffering, when the summons came she was fully ready to depart and be with Jesus.—She leaves a bereaved companion, several children, and a large circle of friends to mourn; but their loss is her infinite gain.

J. C. PITTS.

EDUCATIONAL.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.—THE next term of this Institution will open on Monday, the first of October, 1860.

FACULTY.

REV. JOHN C. MILLER, M. A., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
REV. W. H. SCALES, M. A., Professor of Mathematics.
REV. JOHN J. WHEAT, M. A., Professor of Greek.
GEORGE H. WILEY, M. A., Professor of Latin.
A. R. HOLCOMBE, M. A., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. J. E. SUNDSTROM, M. A., Professor of Modern Languages.
REV. A. G. MILLER, M. A., } Principals of Preparatory Department.
WM. N. POTTER, M. A. }
R. D. NORWORTHY, M. A., Tutor.
LEWIS FITZHUGH, Tutor.

Tuition per session of five months, payable in advance.
In Preparatory Department.....$21 50
In College Department.....35 50
Matriculation Fee on entering College Department.....5 00
Music, extra.

Board can be obtained at the Steward's Hall, or in private families at prices varying from ten to fifteen dollars per month. This institution having an able Faculty, extensive buildings, large library, cabinet and apparatus, commends itself to all desiring a thorough classical or scientific education.

Centenary College is located at Jackson, La., twelve miles East of Bayou Sara.

For information apply to Rev. C. C. Gillespie, No. 112 Camp-street, Dr. John C. Keener, New Orleans, or to the undersigned, Jackson, La.

JOHN C. MILLER, President.

Aug 5, 1860. 1y

STATE FEMALE COLLEGE, NEAR MEMPHIS, TENN. The 8th semi annual session of this Institution will commence on Wednesday, Sept. 12, 1860, under the supervision of the Rev. C. Collins, D.D., assisted by an efficient corps of teachers.

In selecting a President, Dr. Collins was our first choice. He is emphatically a professional teacher. To his profession he has devoted the flower of his youth, and the full maturity of his manhood. He comes to us endorsed by the best of all indorsers—twenty-three years of successful experience at the head of Colleges of the highest grade; he comes indorsed as just the man for the place, by such Southern men as Bishop Andrew, Bishop Paine, Bishop Early, Rev. J. B. McFerrin D.D., Rev. Dr. Rivers, President of the Wesleyan University, Florence, Ala., Rev. Dr. Keener, P. E. of the New Orleans District, La.

Pupils of the South, the State Female College has claims upon you of no ordinary character. Its beautiful and healthful location in the midst of a community noted for its refined and christian character; its admirably arranged and neatly furnished Boarding House; together with its experienced and skilful Faculty, present such an imposing array of advantages as justly entitle it to be styled a "School of the highest grade and a delightful home."

Many of our patrons were present at the recent Examinations; and all, as far as we can learn, were delighted with the school and all its arrangements.

During the past year there were two hundred and twenty in attendance.

Parents may rest assured that the Boarding House will be conducted in the best style.

Catalogues containing full information may be obtained by applying to C. COLLINS, President, or at the Book Depository, South side of Court square, Memphis, Tenn.

S. WATSON, Pres.,
W. K. POSTON, Sec.
Board of Trustees.

Aug. 13, 1860.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, BROOKHAVEN, Lawrence county, Mississippi. Rev. J. P. Lee, A.M., President, assisted by competent teachers.

The Exercises of the Second Collegiate Year will begin September 12th, 1860, and end June 19th, 1861. Friday, June 14th, Annual Examination begun.

Sunday, June 16th, Commencement Sermon.—17th and 18th, Examination on closed, Night Concert.—Wednesday, June 19th, Commencement Day.

For further particulars apply to

Rev. J. P. LEE, President and Secretary.
Rev. M. J. WHITWORTH, Proprietor.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.—The Exercises of the Institute will be resumed on WEDNESDAY, 10th October. As the number of Pupils is necessarily limited, those who wish to secure places will do well to apply as early as practicable.

W. H. S. MAGRUDER.

Aug. 5, 1860.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, CORNER OF Camp and Common streets, entrance No. 80 Common street,—established in 1856,—open day and evening the entire year.

A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation and Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.

Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.

For catalogues containing full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address,

GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE.—The Twenty Third annual Session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, OCTOBER 1st, under the superintendence of the following corps of Instructors:

Rev J. M. Bonnell, President, and Professor of Modern Science Rhetoric, &c.
Rev. C. W. Smith, Professor of Mathematics.
Rev. F. H. Forster, Professor of Ancient Languages.
Rev. W. C. Dana, Professor of Natural Sciences.
C. Schwartz, Professor of Modern Languages and Painting.
Miss M. E. Carleton, Assistant in Academical Department.
Miss C. M. Semple, Assistant in Primary Department.
P. G. Guttenberger, Senior Professor of Music.
W. S. B. Matthews, junior ditto.
Miss L. Guttenberger, and Miss M. A. Matthews, Assistants in Music.

Mrs. S. Schwartz, Teacher of Ornamental Branches.

$10 will meet the annual expenses of a Student-for board and Tuition, it no extra studies be taken. The expense of furnishing a room varies from $5 to $12.

In addition to the regular College classes, there will be henceforth Leitcher [illegible] Primary Department, all under the charge of Mrs. Schwartz, the Assistant of the Faculty, on all [illegible] to the President, or to

W. C. BASS, Secretary.

Macon, Georgia, Aug. 21, 1860. 4t

BASCOM FEMALE SEMINARY, Grenada, Miss. This Institution, with a neat Boarding Department, and superior educational facilities, will commence its next Session, Sept. 24th 1860.

Rev. S. D. OGBURN, President

Aug. 28, 1860.

The Male Department of Centenary Institute, Summerfield, Dallas county, Ala., will re-open first Monday in October next, under its former Principal,

The Rev. C. C. O. CONNERLY, M.A.,

Assisted by Major F. M. Hopkins, Rev. Hardin Brown, M.A., and J. J. Canett, M.A. These gentlemen are all experienced in Teaching. The prospects of Centenary were never so bright. Young men will be carefully and thoroughly prepared for the Junior Class of our best Colleges. Our village is unparalleled in its social and religious surroundings.

For further particulars, apply by letter to the Principal,

C. C. B CONNERLY,
Summerfield, Ala.

Sept. 13, 1860. 4t

PROFESSIONAL.

R. M. TEVIS. C. V. FLY.

TEVIS & FLY, Lawyers and Land Agents, Hallettsville, Lavacca county, Texas, will practice their profession in the counties of Lavacca, Gonzales, Cowitt, Victoria, Calhoun, Jackson, Colorado, Fayette, Caldwell, and Guadalupe, and to the Supreme Court at Galveston and Austin.

Special attention will be given to the collection of foreign debts to the Federal Courts held at Galveston and Austin, to the investigation and quieting of land-titles, paying taxes, and buying and selling lands in any portion of Western Texas.

REFERENCES.

R. C. Estes, New York City.
Henderson, Terry and Co., New Orleans.
T. H. McMahan and Gilbert, Galveston, Texas.
D. Ayres, Galveston, Texas.
Rev. James C. Wilson, Texas Conference.
Rev. A. Scoville, Texas Conference.
Rev. Wm. H. Seat, Texas Conference.
Hon. O. R. Singleton, M. C. from Mississippi.
Rev. C. O Gillespie, Editor New Orleans Christian Advocate.

May 10, 1860.

JAMES J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama., will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties. [au24]

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY - AT - LAW, BATON Rouge.

REFERENCES—Henderson & Cairns and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta....., Baton Rouge.

FUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Clinton, Louisiana, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, and East Baton Rouge.

References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., W. and C. Leichford and Co., Broadwell & Haynes, and Pritchard & Flewur, New Orleans. mar 7-1y

W. P. WINANS. J. T. HEATH.

WINANS & HEATH, ATTORNEYS AND COUNsellors at Law, Shreveport, La. Office—Market street. Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO, ATTORNEY - AT - LAW, Harrisonburg, La., will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

W. A. BROADWELL. A. F. HAYNES.

BROADWELL & HAYNES, COMMISSION MERchants (formerly Bro

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X. NUMBER 46. WHOLE NUMBER 500.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE. OFFICE—112 CAMP ST.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

GLASGOW—SCOTLAND—JOHN KNOX.

Mr. Editor: Glasgow is the commercial metropolis of Scotland, and in point of wealth, population, and commercial importance, it is ranked by some as the third and by others as the second of the great cities of the United Kingdom. After spending a few delightful days in Edinburgh, we visited this place during the time of the annual session of the "National Association for the promotion of Social Science;" but owing to the crowds that attended, we were not able to gain admittance. As your paper is published in our great Southern commercial metropolis, and read by many who are interested in the Glasgow trade, I have thought that a few items of information might be acceptable to them. With an estimated population of about four hundred thousand, a sixth of the entire population of the kingdom; with a situation extremely favorable to the development of manufacturing industry and trade in every department, wealthy and enterprising capitalists, an intelligent and industrious people, and other advantages, Glasgow is in the full tide of prosperity, and bids fair to keep pace with the most flourishing manufactory and mercantile communities of modern times. A few years ago its factories for spinning and weaving cotton, silk, and flax were estimated at 118, and the number of operatives at 27,264. The iron furnaces in the vicinity of the city were 83, producing on an average 130 tons per week, and in all about 550,000 tons during the year. There are also extensive potteries, glass works, distilleries, etc. The consumption of cotton is about 1900 bales per week. The embroidering of muslin, or the sewed muslin manufacture, is carried on extensively; one firm alone giving employment to 30,000 persons! Large numbers of steamboats and ships are built here, and launched into the Clyde—a beautiful river, on the bosom of which, in 1812, the Comet, the first steamboat in Great Britain, made its first excursion. The St. Rollo chemical works are the largest of the kind in the world. They cover sixteen acres of ground under roof, and the principal chimney stack is 435 feet high from the ground, and standing as it does upon an elevated site, it is by far the loftiest object in the city. The great prosperity of the city is attributed mainly to the public spirit of the moneyed men, who have invested large sums in developing its natural advantages; and in removing the obstacles that impeded its progress. The broomielaw, or harbor, is a noble basin which has been excavated at an immense expense. It is some four hundred feet wide, and upwards of a mile in length, with capacious quays and sheds. Vessels of all sizes may here find room to discharge their cargoes with convenience and despatch. In this and other works for the improvement of the navigation of the river more than two millions of pounds sterling have been expended. The Broomielaw bridge is a fine structure of seven arches, faced with Aberdeen granite. It is 500 feet in length and 40 wide, which is seven feet wider than London bridge. The stranger who stands upon this bridge and looks up and down the river will gaze upon a scene of activity and beauty not often surpassed in the crowded hives of human industry; and when he is informed that a hundred years ago the population of Glasgow was only about 28,000, he will see that a rapid increase of population and of prosperity is not confined to American cities.

While walking up and down Argyle street, the great commercial thoroughfare, which is said to be three miles long, we were strongly reminded of New York. The shops partake of the character of the American stores; though they are neither as large nor as handsome. The street is crowded day and night, and there is much noise and confusion as there is in our large American cities; but here we see much more filthy, squalid poverty and vice in the public thoroughfares, and everything has a coarser and more gloomy appearance. This is owing, no doubt, to the humidity of the climate acting in combination with the smoke of the manufactories, and the habits of the great number of laborers and artizans who find employment here. Passing along Buchanan street, which is compared with Regent street in London, and Broadway, which is called the Oxford street of Glasgow, we meet with some stupendous piles of business houses, elegant shops, splendid mansions, churches, and other public buildings, which could not our way into the "West End" of Glasgow, abounding in fine "Crescents," "Terraces," "Squares," "Places," etc., in which are situated the residences of the local aristocracy, who live as far as possible from the noise, filth, and misery of the lower classes. The West Park or Kelvin Grove is in this locality, a beautiful place of resort for health and recreation to all the inhabitants who have time to visit it. On a hill near this park, we visited two churches, one connected with the Establishment and the other with the Free Church. These, with all the other principal churches of the city, were on this occasion left open for the inspection of the strangers who were attending the meeting of the before mentioned association. I have never seen any place of worship, even in London, with a more beautiful interior, or better adapted for the purposes of worship, than this connected with the Free Church of Scotland. Dr. Caird, author of the famous sermon on "religion in common life," is the preacher at the other church.

The general impression is that the people of Scotland are more moral and religious than the people of England or of Ireland are, and during my brief visit to Scotland I saw no reason to change my opinion. Judging, however, from some of the speeches delivered at the Social Science meeting, it seems that the Scotch are losing ground in these respects. In Glasgow the different branches of the Presbyterians have 76 places of worship, Baptists 6, Methodists 5, Roman Catholics 8, Episcopalians 5, and various other denominations have churches. Strange as it may appear, the Mormon imposture has found its way to Scotland, and is represented by six congregations! one of them being in Glasgow. Methodism has never succeeded well in Scotland. From the last census it appeared that all the different branches of Methodism within the limits of the country could only furnish 82 places of worship and 23491 sittings in the chapels. The reasons for this want of success are various; but mainly, I suppose, it is owing to the fact that there was less necessity for Methodism in Scotland than there was in England. Dr. and Mrs. Palmer, of New York, who spent several weeks in Glasgow last winter, and whose labors resulted in the awakening and conversion of hundreds of souls, and also in a great increase of spirituality to some of the churches, attribute the "declensions and multiplied discouragements of the Wesleyans in Scotland, to the neglect on the part of many preachers of that peculiar doctrine of Methodism—entire holiness of heart and life." How this may be I cannot say, but it is very clear that the doctrines of Calvinism are still professed by the great majority of Christians in Scotland.

One of the greatest objects of curiosity to the stranger in Glasgow is the Cathedral, which was erected by John Achaius, Bishop of Glasgow, in 1136, in the reign of David I. This is a noble structure, of the Gothic order of architecture, with a crypt, and several ancient chapels and relics of the middle ages. It is 319 feet long, 63 wide, and the steeple is 225 feet high. Before the triumph of Protestantism in Scotland, it was famous as the shrine of St. Mungo, and as we passed through, a headless figure, carved in stone, was shewn to us, representing the "saint," attired in his sacerdotal robes, lying on his back, and looking as though not only the chisel fingers of time had been busy about him, but as though he had received some hard blows from the stern iconoclasts who wrested this and many other of the religious edifices of Scotland from the adherents of Popery. An artist who was copying a picture from one of the Cathedral windows, very politely pointed out to us St. Mary's Well, which was once supposed to possess extraordinary virtue, but which is now only looked upon as a relic of darker ages. The Cathedral is now occupied by the Kirk of Scotland, and has been fitted up in the modern style, with pews well furnished with Bibles and Psalters, and on each Sabbath, instead of the imposing ritual of Romanism, a simple service is performed, and the Word of God is expounded to the people.

We have but a few minutes to linger in the Cathedral, or the immense churchyard, by which it is surrounded, before we pass outside of the churchyard wall, and cross the "Bridge of Sighs," over which thousands of sorrowing hearts have passed, while following the lifeless remains of their departed friends to the great Necropolis beyond. This city of the dead was anciently called the "Fen Park," and believed to have been one of the dark retreats of the Druids. It is situated on the sloping sides and summit of a bold rocky eminence, which shoots up to a height of from two to three hundred feet, presenting with its winding pathways, its rich shrubberies and numerous monuments, a picturesque and striking appearance from a distance. After registering our names at the lodge, we pass on a short distance, and stay a few minutes at the foot of the first flight of steps, where we find a small space of ground enclosed with walls, and shaded by trees, which is set apart as a burying ground for the Jews. Among many striking inscriptions in Hebrew, as well as in English, we noticed the following lines:—

"O weep for those who wept by Babel's stream,
Whose shrines are desolate, whose land a dream;

Tribes of the weary foot and weary breast,
Where will ye flee away, and be at rest?
The wild dove hath her nest, the fox his cave,
Mankind their country—Israel but the grave."

"The sin of Israel is written with a pen of iron and the point of a diamond." Of this scripture we were reminded by this, and praying that the blindness may pass from the ill-fated race, we pass on.

There are multitudes of tombs and inscriptions that claim our attention as we pass by, but towering high above all the rest in size as well as in importance is the monument to the memory of John Knox, the great leader of the Protestant Reformation in Scotland; situated on the highest part of the Necropolis, and elevated upon a lofty pedestal, stands a full length statue of the Reformer, represented as dressed in a Scotch cap and cloak, facing the city, with a stern yet dignified countenance, and holding a copy of the Holy Bible in his hand. There are inscriptions on each of the four sides of the monument. From the side facing the city, the following is copied:—

"JOHN KNOX.

"To testify gratitude for inestimable services to the cause of religion, education, and civil liberty, to awaken admiration of that integrity, disinterestedness and courage, which stood unshaken to the midst of trials, and in the maintenance of the highest objects.

FINALLY,

"To cherish reverence for the principles and blessings of the Great Reformation, by the influence of which our country, through the midst of difficulties, has risen to honor, prosperity and happiness,

This Monument is erected to the Memory of

JOHN KNOX,

The chief instrument, under God, of the Reformation of Scotland, on the 22d day of September, 1828. He died rejoicing in the faith of the Gospel, at Edinburgh, on the 24th Nov., A. D. 1622, in the 67th year of his age."

Other inscriptions do honor to the memory of Patrick Hamilton, the first of the Scottish martyrs, who was burned at St. Andrews, in the 24th year of his age; also Alexander Kennedy, who suffered at Glasgow, in 1538, and George Wishart, who suffered in 1546. It is also stated on this monument that John Knox and others compiled the first Confession of faith, and the first Book of Discipline, which were presented to the Parliament of Scotland.

There are many fine monuments of polished granite, from the quarries of Aberdeen and Peterhead, and some of marble, of exquisite workmanship, but none that interested me like that of Knox, though it seemed to me far inferior to others as a work of art. Mr. Gavin, Dr. Wardlaw, Dr. Chalmers, and others, whose virtues are celebrated here, did a good work in their day, but their conflicts and labours were not to be compared with those of the great Scottish Reformer. Born in 1505, the same year in which Luther entered the convent, at Erfurth, he imbibed at an early age the principles of the Protestant faith, and in the midst of difficulties and perils that would have crushed an ordinary spirit, he battled for the right, until the cause that he had espoused was triumphant in his native land. At the fall of the Castle of St. Andrews, he was taken prisoner by the French, who compelled him to labor two years as a slave in the galleys, but he succeeded in escaping to England, and after some years he returned to Scotland, and was one of the principal instruments in laying the foundations of the Protestant Church, and of the prosperity of the Scottish people. With such monuments as these to be seen and read by the people, and with their minds imbued with the thrilling traditions and histories of their land, we can easily account for the attachment of the Scotch to the Church of their fathers.

JOHN HAYLEY.

October 20, 1860.

WORLD'S CONCERT OF PRAYER.

It is recollected that a proposal was received from a mission among the heathen to hold a prayer meeting for the world's conversion near the beginning of the year.—A proposal is now made by the missionaries [illegible]

The missionaries of the Church of England, of the Established Church of Scotland, of the Free Church of Scotland, of the London Missionary Society, of the Baptist Society, and of the Wesleyan Methodist Society, have an organization known as the Calcutta Missionary Conference.

This body have issued a circular on this subject:—

CIRCULAR OF THE CALCUTTA CONFERENCE.

"To all that in every place call upon the name of Jesus Christ our Lord, both theirs and ours: grace be unto you, and peace, from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

The "signs of the times" in which our lot is cast;—the wonderful openings for the Gospel in China, Japan, and Central Africa; the restoration of peace to India; the remarkable movements in Italy and Turkey—the sects, respectively, of the Western and the Eastern anti-Christian tyrannies; the stirrings in many places among the scattered remnants of Israel, "beloved for the fathers' sake;" the blessed and glorious revivals of religion in the United States of America, in Great Britain and Ireland, in Sweden and other parts of the continent of Europe;—have all combined to creating, in many hearts, the joyful hope of the gracious Lord's speedily accomplishing mighty works for the glory of his own great name.

But, "for these things he will be inquired of" by his believing people; and especially He will honor and answer fervent, united, Peniel-like prayer. Yet that prayer must be accomplished with lowly prostration and deep humility of soul, for we are "not worthy of the least of his mercies," with heart-felt confessions of sins,—all sin, private and public, special and general, secret as well as presumptuous,—our personal or individual sins—our sins as families,—our sins as nations,—our sins as churches; and with ardent thanksgivings for past long-suffering patience, faithfulness and love, amid all our negligence and indifference, our forgetfulness and ingratitude, our provocations and affronts.

In these and such like exercises of devotion, we humbly yet fervently desire to join with all that "fear the Lord," and speak often one to another," in every land; and, in order that the union may be general, we send forth this timely notice, earnestly beseeching that no unworthiness on our part may prevent any of his people from agreeing with us in this proposed season of prayer and supplication on each day from the 1st of January, 1861, to the 7th inclusive.

And "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us: that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations. Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. O let the nations be glad, and sing for joy; for thou shalt judge the people righteously, and govern the nations upon earth. Let the people praise thee, O God; let all the people praise thee. Then shall the earth yield her increase; and God, even our own God, shall bless us. God shall bless us; and all the ends of the earth shall fear him."

"Even so, come, Lord Jesus; come quickly; Amen."

Signed by authority, and on behalf of the Calcutta Missionary Conference.

ALEXANDER DUFF, Chairman.

Calcutta, July, 1860.

THREE SOURCES OF HAPPINESS.

The righteous have rich enjoyments flowing from at least three sources.

In the first place, the memories of the past are pleasant, often delightful; for they are memories of days spent in doing good, thus honoring their Redeemer, and blessing their fellow-men. It is characteristic of human nature, that the nearer we approach to the end of life, the oftener we take the retrospect. The more frail the memory becomes as to passing events, the more frequently it calls up those of other days; and these memories become the more tenderly interesting, because they are associated with friends we shall meet no more in this world.

God has so constituted the mind, that its happiness depends, to a great extent, upon its recollections. There are multitudes of men, whose only protection against distressing memories is in being wholly absorbed in business, or intoxicated with strong drink. They cannot take the retrospect without arousing conscience from its slumbers, and feeling the terrible sufferings, which are called by the significant name, remorse. There are, however, not a few who, though the review of life presents many things to pain and humble them, love often to look back, and bring up the past. If the remembrance of their sins pains and humbles them, it fills them with gratitude to the God of all grace. And then in looking over the past, now so far removed from it as to take a calm and impartial view, they discover clear and cheering evidences of their interest in Christ. And the thoughts of kind words and acts, that smoothed the rough pathway of life to many a weary traveller, are sources of exalted pleasure. Blessed are they whose earlier years have been so spent, as to fill up later years with pleasing and precious memories.

The righteous have also constant enjoyments from the present, as well as from the past. The duties of each day, discharged from love to God, and benevolence towards their fellow-beings, become their pleasures. They find the yoke of Christ easy, and his burden light. An approving conscience, gratified affections, and communion with God sweeten life, in spite of disappointments and trials.

To these also the future is bright. Not always equally so. They have some dark days, when their prospects seem gloomy. But the prevailing feeling of the faithful Christian is that of confidence and hope. The memories of the past brighten the future by affording evidence that they are the children of God, and if children, then heirs—heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ. It was when Paul could say, "I have fought a good fight," that he could say—"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness." Present duties, exercises, and enjoyments also become the ground of hope for the future. The consciousness of loving our Saviour gives assurance that he loves us.

Thus from the past, the present, and the eternal future, light beams on the path of the righteous, and from all these sources the light becomes brighter as life wears away; for each day, when gone, has added to the number of pleasing memories. And as their graces grow and mature, present enjoyments become richer; whilst both the past and the present throw a clearer light on the future, and hope brings sweeter joys. Thus "the path of the just shineth more and more to the perfect day."

This view of life urges to early piety. The sooner we begin to serve God, the greater the number of pleasant memories to cheer our later years, and the fewer the painful recollections. It urges to devoted, earnest piety; for the more devoted our piety, the more abundant the joys from past, present, and future.—Presbyterian Expositor.

THE DEATH OF CHILDREN.

We lay our children in the grave and, till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep! But in their death Christ speaks to our hearts in lessons of wisdom, to which we do well to take heed. Continual prosperity is not conducive to kindliness and charity, but adversity softens the heart and strengthens the affections. Tears of bereavement fall like heavenly dew upon the finer feelings. Beside our early dead, we become more compassionate to the sorrows of the suffering, more tolerant to the faults of the erring; more friendly and fraternal to all. There is a wonderful free-masonry in suffering; it powerfully binds us to the brotherhood of the bereaved. And how strongly their sympathy influences our affections! how it sweeps, as with a skilful hand, the chords of the heart, awakening its sweetest music!

And what is the meaning of this quick, sensitive, loving response of the bereaved heart to the voice of sympathy? Can we fail to recognize in it the souls longing for a true friend—for one who can succor, as well as sympathize, in affliction? Then let us gather up the loosened chains which bound us to the earth, and fling them around the living Redeemer.

And we are taught by the death of our children patiently to suffer; we best learn to relinquish cherished joys, and cheerfully limit our desires to the dispensations of Providence, by the biers of our beloved, and this is a needful lesson. Our life is one of continual, and often painful, conflict and suffering. Temptations to evil, hindrances to a godly life, ever recurring and unsatisfied wants, thwarted aims, blasted hopes, heartaches, toils and tears, make up a course of moral discipline which demands a patient spirit, a brave heart, and a good conscience. And we do not seek so faithfully for these in prosperity, with every wish gratified, every aim successful, and every work rewarded. But if my bereavement, teaching the necessity of these graces, leads me to Christ, the centre and source of all spiritual power and moral excellence, then, standing [illegible] it is well [illegible]

The death of children teaches us we must die. The little hillocks of the graveyard speak to us; a voice from the chambers of the dead proclaims the serious but not sorrowful fact that we too must die. Happy for us, if, when we stand on the brink of the dark river, and its cold waters chill our feet, and its black billows affright our soul, the eye of faith shall see those little ones we have loved and lost, standing as white-winged cherubs upon the distant strand, beckoning and bidding us to breast the waves for that shining shore.

The bands of life are loosening; more slender and frail spins every hour the scanty thread of mortality.—Death is an mere phantom; it is a terrible fact. Oh! thou deep, dark mistery, whose sweep no mind can measure, whose meaning no thought can fathom—Death!—To love is beautiful, to suffer is profitable, but to meet thee with a brave heart and an unfailing faith is grandly, gloriously heroic. To learn thus to meet thee; is the problem of all problems, the science of all sciences. To be prepared thus to meet thee, is a brilliant crown to the wisdom of the wise, and a beautiful lustre to the virtues of the pious.—Rev. W. H. Brisbane.

HAPPY WOMEN.

A happy woman! is she not the very sparkle and sunshine of life! A woman who is happy because she can't help it—whose smiles even the coldest sprinkling of misfortune cannot dampen. Men make a terrible mistake when they marry for beauty, or for talent, or for style; the sweetest wives are those who possess the magic secret of being happy under any and every circumstance. Rich or poor, high or low, it makes no difference; the bright little fountain of joy bubbles up just as musically in their hearts. Do they live in a log cabin? the fire-light that leaps up on its humble hearth becomes brighter than the gilded chandeliers in an Aladdin palace! Do they eat brown bread and drink cold water from the well? it affords them more solid satisfaction than the millionaire's pate de foie gras and iced champagne. Nothing ever goes wrong with them—no trouble is too serious for them "to make the best of it." Wns ever the stream of calamity so dark and deep that the sunlight of a happy face, falling across its turbid tide, would not wake an answering gleam! Why, then, joyous tempered people don't know half the good they do. No matter how cross and crabbed you feel, Mr. Grumbler, no matter if your brain is packed full of meditation on "afflicting dispensations," and your stomach with medicines, pills and tonics, just set one of these cherry little women talking to you, and we are not afraid to wager anything she can cure you. The long-drawn line about the mouth will relax—the cloud of settled gloom will vanish nobody knows when, and the first you know, you'll be laughing! Why? That is another thing; we can no more tell you why, than we can tell you why you smile involuntarily to listen to the first blue-bird of the season, among the maple blossoms, or to meet a knot of yellow-eyed dandelions in the crack of a city pave-stone. We only know that it is so.

Oh, these happy women! how often their slender shoulders bear the weight of burdens that would smite men to the ground! how often their little hands guide the ponderous machinery of life with an almost invisible touch! how we look forward, through the weary day, to their fire-side smiles; how often their cheerful eyes see couleur de rose where we only behold thunder-charged clouds. No one knows, no one ever will know, until the day of judgment, how much we owe to those helpful, uncomplaining women.

ANCIENT INHABITANTS OF NEBRASKA.

On the upper Missouri there exists a tract of land known by the name of the "Mauvaises Terres," or Bad Lands, at one time probably the bottom of an immense lake in which perished thousands of animals having now no representative on earth. It appears that the waters of this pond were removed in some convulsions of nature, and the sediment at its bottom became indurated. The portion of the earth thus excavated forms a valley of ninety miles in length by thirty in breadth. The remains of animals which lived and breathed long before the advent of man upon the earth, are here found in such abundance as to form of this tract an immense cemetery of vertebrata. The bones are said to be completely petrified, and their cavities filled with silicious matter. They are preserved in various degrees of integrity, some being beautifully perfect, and others broken.

Two remarkable species of rhinoceros, the first ever found in America, were discovered here, and also a sort of panther, smaller than the present variety—and likewise a number of strange animals with long names, unlike any thing which man ever saw alive. We know, then, that there were once individuals in Nebraska, as curious, and strangely shaped, and pugnacious, as any which the present rush of emigration will carry thither.

BEGINNING OF THE YEAR IN VARIOUS NATIONS.

The Chaldeans and the Egyptians dated their years from the autumnal equinox. The ecclesiastical year of the Jews began in the spring; but in civil affairs they retain the epoch of the Egyptian year. The ancient Chinese reckoned from the new moon nearest the middle of Mparina. The year of Romulus commenced in March, and that of Numa in January. The Turks and Arabs date the year from the 6th of July. Dreneschid, or Gremschid, king of Persia, observed on the day of his public entry into Persepolis, that the sun entered into Aries; and in commemoration of this fortunate event he ordered the beginning of the year to be removed from the autumnal to the vernal equinox. The Brachmans begin their year with the new moon in April. The Mexicans begin their year in February, when the leaves begin to grow green. Their years consists of eighteen months, having twenty days each, the last five days are spent in mirth, and no business is suffered to be done, nor either any service in the temples. The Abyssinians have five idle days at the end of the year, which commences on the 26th of August.

The American Indians reckon from the first appearance of the new moon at the vernal equinox. The Mohammedans begin their year the minute the sun enters Aries. The Venetians, Florentines, and the Pisans, in Italy, begin the year at the vernal equinox. The French year, during the reign of the Merovingian race, on the day on which the troops were reviewed, which was the first day of March. Under the Carlovingians it began on Christmas Day, and under the Captains on Easter Day. The ecclesiastical year begins on the first Sunday in Advent. Charles IX. appointed, in 1564, that for the future the civil year should commence on the 1st of January. The Julian Calendar, which was so called from Julius Cæsar, and is the old account of the year, was reformed by Pope Gregory, in 1751, which plan was suggested by Lewis Lilio, a Calabrian astronomer. The Dutch and the Protestants in Germany introduced the new style in 1700. The ancient clergy reckoned from the 25th of March; and this method was observed in Britain until the introduction of the new style, A. D., 1752; after which our year commenced on the 1st of January.

CHRISTIANITY.

It arose in an enlightened and skeptical age, amongst a despised and narrow-minded people. It earned hatred and persecution at home by its liberal genius and opposition to the national prejudices; it earned contempt abroad by its connection with the country where it was born, but which sought to strangle it in its birth.—Emerging from Judea, it made its way upward through the most polished regions of the world—Asia Minor, Egypt, Greece, Rome, and in all it attracted notice and provoked hostility. Successive massacres and attempts at extermination, persecuted for ages by the whole force of the Roman empire, it bore without resistance, and seemed to draw fresh vigor from the axe; but assaults, in the way of argument, from whatever quarter, it was never ashamed or unable to repel, and, whether attacked or not, it was resolutely aggressive.

In four centuries it had pervaded the civilized world; it had mounted the throne of the Cæsars; it had spread beyond the limits of their sway, and had made inroads upon barbarian nations, whom their eagles had never visited; it had gathered all genius and all learning into itself, and made the literature of the world its own; it survived the inundation of the barbarian tribes, and conquered the world once more, by converting its conquerors to the faith; it survived an age of barbarianism; it survived the restoration of letters; it survived an age of inquiry and skepticism, and has long stood its ground in the field of argument, and commanded the intelligent assent of the greatest minds that ever were; it has been the parent of civilization and the nurse of learning; and if light, and humanity, and freedom be the boast of modern Europe, it is to Christianity that she owes them. Exhibiting in the life of Jesus [illegible] Divine, in [illegible] of man has not been able to find a deficiency or detect a blemish—a picture copied from no model and rivalled by no copy—it has satisfied the moral wants of mankind; it has accommodated itself to every period and every clime; and it has retained, through every change, a salient spring of life, which has enabled it to throw off corruption and repair decay, and renew its youth, amidst outward hostility and inward divisions. —London Quarterly Review.

REVERENCE CHILDREN.

Juvenal says, "The greatest reverence is due to a boy." Plutarch relates of Cato the censor, that, when his youthful son was present, he was as careful of his words as though he was conversing with the Vestal Virgins, whose lives were devoted to perfect purity. Juvenal adds that nothing unseemly, either in word or in appearance, should ever touch the thresholds within which a boy dwells. These sayings commend themselves to every one, and they scarcely need illustration or argument to enforce them.

When we consider the comparative purity of a child's mind, his trustfulness, and his ignorance of evil, we feel that there is a sacredness about it which may well command our reverence; and there are few who do not feel under some restraint in a child's presence. We do not indulge in quite the same freedom of speech, nor allow ourselves quite the same license of action, when we know that a child is observing us. But there are few who are careful enough, few who give the subject sufficient consideration. We do not keep its importance enough before us, nor weigh as we ought the effect which our words and actions have on the young. Children do not retain their purity as they advance in years. Little by little they become contaminated, as we allow them to be exposed to the touch of evil; and some parents have to mourn through all their father years that they were so careless of their children's youth. When we have on white garments we are obliged to use great care to keep them from being soiled. So much care, and far more, should we have of children, for the purity of their minds is soiled with a breath, and we cannot, when we would, wash them and make them clean.

We are all prone to evil, children as well as those of riper age, and in addition to this, children are creatures of imitation, and if they become acquainted with vice they will be almost sure to fall into it. We see their tendency to imitate developed at a remarkably early age. Indeed it is almost the first faculty of the mind which shows itself, and from the first few months onward we may every day notice its power. What we do one day we see reproduced in our children the next.—They grow up with our characters, modified by the external influence we have permitted them to feel; and from the tendency to evil, they will have our follies rather than our wisdom, our weakness rather than our strength, our vices rather than our virtues.

Parents must be careful not only to train up their children aright, that is to give them good instruction and to enforce their obedience to it, but also to set before them nothing that is not worthy of imitation. A parent who desires his child to be virtuous has always before him the best persuasive to the daily practice of virtue; and how can one who has an interesting family of loved ones growing up around them, fail to feel the importance of circumspection in regard to his own character and conduct.—S. S. Times.

CHRISTIANITY IN TURKEY.

Rev. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin, who has recently returned from Constantinople, gives an interesting account of the Protestant missions in Turkey. He states that when the missionaries commenced their labors, about twenty-eight years ago, there was no divine worship offered in Turkey in a language understood by the worshippers. The Moslems, who speak the Turkish language, worship in Arabic, not understood by the people; the Armenians worship in ancient Armenian; the Greeks in ancient Greek, and the Catholics in Latin. There was also no edition of the Bible in a language understood by the people, and no schools for females—scarcely one Turkish woman being able to read and write. Protestantism was so little known that it was associated with free-masonry, and a Jew, wishing to convince an Englishman that he was a good Protestant, declared that he swore, got drunk, and eat swine's flesh! No man could change his religion, except to become a Moslem—a Jew could not even become a Christian without suffering persecution.

Now, schools for young ladies have been established not only by the missions, but among the Greeks and Armenians, and the Bible has been translated into all the languages spoken in the empire. Last year 24,000 copies of the Bible were sold—an unprecedented sale, and more than was ever sold in one year of any other book in the empire—so that in one respect the Bible may be said to be the book of Turkey. Between thirty and forty Protestant churches have also been established, three of which are self-supporting. There are also ninety-three organized Protestant communities, recognized as such by the government, and governed by the representative system. The Moslem population of the empire is sixteen millions; the Armenians, two and a-half or three millions; the Greeks, two millions; other nationalities swelling the entire population to thirty-two millions. So it seems the Turks, who are the governing race, form only one half of the population.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE.

The total amount of the original bequest to the Smithsonian Institute was $515,169, and interest on the same to July 1, 1846; devoted to the erection of the building, $242,129. In addition to this, $135,600 of unexpended income has been vested in state bonds, so that the present income of the institution is $38,326. The principal expenditures are, for salaries, about $9,000; for publications of all kinds, $9,000; for meteorological observations, $2,500; for lectures, $1,000; for the library, $3,500; for museum, $2,000. There are some incidental matters involving expenditures, and about $5,000 is set apart from the income to make a certain financial change for the sake of economy.—The collections of various kinds which had accumulated at Washington have now been concentrated at the institution, Congress agreeing to make an appropriation of $4,000 annually to keep them up. They are such as the collection of the Exploring Expeditions, under Captain Wilkes, in South America and the South Seas, that of Lieut. Herndon's exploration of the Amazon, Captain Stansbury's exploration of the Great Salt Lake, Captain Perry's Japan Collections, etc. This museum is stated to be now superior to any other in the country as a general collection, though in the specialities of exotic birds, shells, fossils, and minerals, it is said to be surpassed by the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences. We are glad to see that the Secretary who has charge of this department looks forward to the object of "having a public museum, illustrating as fully as possible the natural history of the world, and taking rank with those of London, Paris, Berlin, and Vienna."

LITERARY MISHAPS.

Valuable works have fallen victims to ignorant avarice. The niece of Peiresc, "the attorney-general of the republic of letters," refused to allow the letters addressed to him by the most eminent scholars of the age to be published, because she found them useful as fuel. Mr. Warburton's servant used up a collection of old plays, many of which were unique specimens of our Elizabethan dramatics, for the bottoms of tarts and lighting the fire, for which ignoble purpose records of the Hospital of St. Cross were applied by its ignorant housekeeper; and Bishop Cowper's wife, disgusted with his studious habits, destroyed in a few moments the results of eight years' labor. Sometimes authors have been stoics enough to commit literary suicide. Colardeau, when dying, dragged himself to the fire, and sacrificed his translation of Tasso. Raleigh is said to have destroyed the concluding volumes of his History of the World. James Montgomery burned a novel, the composition of which had lightened the hours of his imprisonment. Moore put Byron's diary in the fire.—D'Orsay did the same office for his own, which must have been worth reading; and Col. Stewart, son of Dugald Stewart, not only destroyed his own manuscripts, which he calculated had cost him three years of his life, but what was of considerable more consequence, burned his father's incomplete Philosophy of a Man as a Member of a Political Association, his Edinburgh lectures on Political Economy, and a continuation of his Encyclopedia Britannica Dissertation, mindful of Milton's aphorism, that "he who destroys a good book kills Reason itself."

BRINGING UP CHILDREN.

The English bring up their children very differently from the manner in which we bring up ours. They have an abundance of fresh, outdoor air every day whenever it is possible. The nursery maids are expected to take all the children out every day, even to the infant. This is becoming more prevalent in this country, and should be pursued whenever it is practicable. Infants should be early accustomed to the open air. We confine them too much, and heat them too much for a vigorous growth. One of the finest features of the London park is said to be the crowd of nursery maids with their groups of healthy children. It is so with the promenades of our large cities to a great extent, but it is less common in our country towns than it should be.

In consequence of their training, English girls acquire a habit of walking that accompanies them through life, and gives them a healthier middle life than our own women enjoy. They are not fatigued with a walk of five miles, and are not ashamed to wear thick walking-soled shoes, fitted for the dampness they encounter. Half of the consumptive feebleness of our girls results from the thin shoes they wear and the cold feet they necessarily have. English children, especially girls, are kept in the nursery and excluded from fashionable society and all the frivolities of the season at an age when our girls are thinking of nothing but fashionable life.

SPIRITUAL SONGS.

How many sweet and joyous, or deep and touching hymns are there in our days, as doubtless there have been in all times, which never reach beyond the family or social circle which they gladden! How many have been written to comfort one sorrowful heart, and having accomplished that are heard no more! How many gush out on occasions of some special sorrow, or joy, or deliverance, and are forgotten like the song of the birds who poured out their happy music yesterday morning!

Yet none of these are lost: they reach God, to whom they are sung, and they speak of him to man—and more neither song nor singer can seek to be or do. And not only this. There are tens of thousands who never wrote a hymn, who may yet have made better spiritual music with many hymns than those who wrote them. The hymn-writer only speaks the thought or feeling of all Christians, and the echo may often be sweeter and purer than the original notes, because less mixed up with self.

The faith which sees the invisible, and is better than all flights of imagination, is not the dower of a few, but the heritage of all.

The whole Church is a choir, as well as a priesthood. The harps of God, with the priestly robes of festival, and the victors' crowns, are the purchased possession of all who stand by that sea of glass mingled with fire.—But what those images mean, and what that song and that joy will be, we know not yet; we only know that it shall be, and that its first notes are easy to be learned on earth.—The Voice of Christian Life in Song.

WORCESTER'S DICTIONARY.

The Quarto English Dictionary of Dr. Worcester is receiving the most decided and unqualified approbation from the English press. The following we extract from the London Critic, of July 21, 1860:—The absence of crotchets, fancies, dogmas, and nonsense is not the least recommendation of this dictionary. The etymological portion shows stupendous industry and research; and we feel sure that Dean Trench could not now with justice repeat what he once, to the dishonor of English Lexicography, affirmed, that "Richardson's Dictionary is the only English one in which etymology assumes the dignity of a science." The mere cutting of the leaves is a day's work, and it is only by selecting here a word and there a word that we can hope to get through the huge volume at all, with much labor and travail. We can only say that upon comparison with those of Richardson and Webster, Worcester's definitions do not at all suffer. We can easily believe that Dr. Worcester (as he says) expects no adequate pecuniary compensation for his gigantic undertaking; for it is difficult to imagine a sum which could adequately compensate the man who has produced the completest and the cheapest English Dictionary which the world has yet seen.

MR. SPURGEON'S HABITS.—His habits are of the most frugal, simple, and self-denying character. The salary allowed him by his congregation is 1000*l.* ($5000) a year; he would not accept more. Out of this he sets aside 600*l.* ($3000) a year for the support of eleven young men, whom he clothes, educates, and maintains entirely, and who are destined for the ministry. He has selected those whom he thought most likely to be efficient labourers in Christ's vineyard. He deputes their education to others, but devotes one day in every week to a personal examination of them in theology. The remaining 400*l.* ($2000) a year he compels to suffice for the support of himself and household.—Traits of Character.

CANDIDATES FOR THE OFFICE OF POPE.

The old age and infirmities of the present Pope make it a subject of importance as to who might succeed him. The Pope must be selected from the College of Cardinals. Of the seventy seats which make up the College of Cardinals, sixty-three only are filled. Of these, no fewer than thirty-nine have been created by Pius IX.—Seventeen of the present Cardinals are between seventy and ninety-one years of age; twenty-six have passed their sixtieth year; seventeen range between that term and fifty, and only three are under that age—two of them verging upon it; while Cardinal Milesi alone is as young as forty-two. We must eliminate the nineteen Cardinals of non-Italian birth, and also twelve lay Cardinals, leaving only thirty-two persons from whom the successor to the present Pope must be chosen, if he ever has any. It is said that no one of the thirty-two has ever exhibited any very marked talent except Di Pietro, a determined opponent of Antonelli and the present Pope.

THE CHINESE MISSION.—The Rev. Dr. W. A. Scott's magazine, the Pacific Expositor, for October, contains the report of the Rev. W. A. Loomis, in relation to his mission among the Chinese in California.—Mr. Loomis commenced his labors there about one year ago. He had a new dialect to acquire, but by the aid of a native interpreter, he was enabled almost immediately to commence operations as a missionary, by Scripture-reading and addresses, and by tract distribution. About the 1st of December religious services were commenced in the Chinese Mission chapel, which have been continued without interruption up to the present time. The average attendance is about thirty on Sunday, and about fifteen on Thursday evening. On Sunday, and during the week, the missionary and his assistant visit the Chinese Company's houses and the settlements in the suburbs of the city, to read and talk and answer questions. There is a very large field for missionary labor among the Chinese of California. Here they may be reached with less difficulty, and with a greater certainty of receiving permanent benefit than in their native country.

PRESIDENT BUCHANAN TO ABD-EL-KADER.—Our Constantinople correspondent, says the World, saw, a few weeks ago, on its way to Syria, a magnificent present from the President of the United States to his Excellency, Sidi Abd-el-Kader, of Damascus. It consisted of two Colt's holster pistols, mounted with silver and beautifully ornamented with arabesque work, in a rosewood case, also silver mounted. It was designed by the Government for some notable in Syria, as a token of their appreciation of the handsome treatment which our Embassador, Hon. James Williams, received in Syria last year. It goes now to Abd-el-Kader as an expression of not only this feeling, but of gratitude for his having protected the Christians of Damascus, including the American Consul, during the late riots there.

WAVES OF FIRE.—A traveler in the Sandwich Islands, while visiting the volcano near Hilo, witnessed a wonderful phenomenon. As he was sitting at lunch on a high

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS,

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1860.

Fifty Cents for the Advocate from the first number in October till the end of the Year.

DR. THOMSON "HONORS" JOHN BROWN.

The Christian Advocate and Journal, of Oct. 25, replies to our remarks of several weeks before, headed, "An Incendiary Journal." The style is chaste, the language courteous, and the spirit semi-friendly. The leading sentiment, however, half concealed and deftly gilded, is utterly pernicious, whether considered in relation to political ethics or christian morality. Without taking the trouble to follow its sinuous course through an article highly ornamented with the sentimentalism of Christianity, we present one of the most practical illustrations of the charge we make. In reply to our suspicion of sympathy with John Brown, the editor says: "While we honor that notorious man for his talents, his love of liberty, his spirit of self-sacrifice, and his dauntless heroism, we regard his scheme as generous but murderous madness, and as tending to put off the day of deliverance to the slave." Was there ever, in modern christian literature, such an utter confounding of vice and virtue, in one brief sentence! "Notorious man!" "Murderous madman!" You have "put off" the accomplishment of abolition plans by your rash "scheme." Yet, notwithstanding this indiscretion, "we honor" you for your "talents," your "love of liberty," your "spirit of self-sacrifice," and your "dauntless heroism!" And this in the leading organ of the Northern Methodist Church!

If Bowley had been holding and expressing such sentiments as these, in the midst of a slave population, for months and years, and had been borne with all the time, until a servile conspiracy was suddenly discovered, and then fled and was overtaken, is it surprising that the indignant inhabitants, who had barely been in time to save their wives and children from assassination, hung him in their exasperation and fury?

Does the Christian Advocate and Journal truly represent the great body of Northern Methodists? It certainly does; for, after a speech which would do honor to Wendell Phillips, or Greely, or Gerrit Smith, and which we now have on file, the editor was elected by a large majority of the General Conference. We submit it to the civilized world, if we were not rigidly just in styling his paper "an incendiary journal!" We do not "rail" at our deluded contemporary, "but speak forth the words of truth and soberness."

Could the Union ever have been formed, had the anti-slavery men of that day held such sentiments? Can it much longer exist, when the leading organs of religious opinions in the North hold such sentiments? And this writer, when justly charged with "English abolitionism" and "toryism," endeavors to neutralize his unenviable identity by placing himself in the same category with "the gifted editor of the Southern Quarterly!" The difference between the editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal, and the gifted editor of the Southern Quarterly, is analogous to that which existed between Lord North, who sought to force and crush his American brethren, and the noble Lord Chatham, who defended their rights with all the might of his genius.

He says, after this, for the editor of the Christian Advocate and Journal [illegible] is opposed to "a scheme of insurrection." We have never charged him with favoring such a scheme. We do not now. But his sentiments are productive of such things, and his sympathetic and apologetic condemnation of their leaders only encourage them. They naturally conclude that one in his position must maintain a show of decent sentimental morality. Alas for that Church and country where such morality rules in its high places, and its religious literature!

THE GREAT EUROPEAN QUESTION—FRENCH POLICY IN ITALY.

The article which we copy below is from the Paris Constitutionnel, and may be regarded as the offspring of Imperial inspiration. It is the most notable and most definite exposition of Napoleon's past and future policy in regard to Italian affairs which has ever appeared. It is rendered still more important by the opportuneness of its utterance. We are gratified to find that the interpretation which this paper has always given of Napoleon's course, and the estimate it has placed upon his sagacity and character, have not been erroneous. He has really become the law-giver in the international councils of Europe, and is more powerful by his policy than his uncle ever was by his arms. The only point upon which his policy is still obscure, is in regard to the future disposition of the Pope. The time has not yet come for that to be illuminated, we suppose. We are satisfied with the present, and willing to wait for the future.—The Constitutionnel says:

The policy of the Emperor in Italy is attacked with the same energy by the two extreme sides of public opinion. Let us first consider how these attacks are made. We shall reply to them with the less embarrassment, when we have frankly made them known.

On the one hand it is said to the Government of the Emperor:

You have nobly sacrificed your programme, so as not to disturb the peace of Europe. By halting at Villafranca you endeavored to stop revolution, to save the Pope, and reconcile Princes with their subjects. All that has been written, but not carried out. Your signature affixed to the treaty of Zurich has been cancelled by the ambition and bad faith of Piedmont, which discarded its own. The Princes whose rights were reserved are in exile. The Papacy, which you declared it was your wish to consolidate in its temporal power, has lost the greater portion of its possessions. Revolution overruns the Peninsula, it has invaded Sicily and Naples; perhaps a few months hence, it will attack Venetia; everywhere it destroys your work, and its very boldness is a proof of your impotency.

The disavowals you make to Piedmont are of not one-tenth more avail than your counsels, and by disavowing her you do not seem to free yourself, for you seem to approve that which you tolerate. Thus, before public opinion, you are the accomplice of a policy which you are obliged to blame. As no one believes in the weakness of a great nation like France, and of a sovereign bearing the name of Napoleon, you are suspected of duplicity.

Europe, which was accustomed to trust you, begins to doubt you; even the church suspects your protection; and the sacrifices which you make in the interests of the Sovereign Pontiff do not allay the mistrust of the Catholics. Throw up this false and humiliating position. Do not be taken in tow by Sardinia; do not be revolutionary against your inclination. With a firm hand uphold the treaty of Villafranca; intervene so as not to be misled; restore to the Pope his provinces, to the Princes their thrones; to Italy the conditions of her political existence, and you will soon regain the confidence of Europe, which you have lost, and the gratitude of the Papacy, which you have alienated.

On the other hand we hear quite different language.—It is said to the Government of the Emperor:

You have taken the cause of Italy in hand; it is your initiative, it is your support, which have restored to a whole people the irresistible impulse of their nationality. You have staked the money, the honor, and the blood of France in this great matter. By signing the peace of Villafranca you reserved the rights of princes, but did not impose them. By restoring the Italians to themselves, you made them the arbitrators of their own destinies, and placed their fate in their own hands. The programme which you did not think it advisable to carry out, has been taken up and realized by them. They are now the soldiers of the cause of which you were the promoter and supporter. In vain would you stop the Italian idea. Ideas are like cannon balls; once fired off, nothing can stop them. Doubtless there was an infringement of an international law; doubtless what is taking place is abnormal and irregular; but above written laws in social crises there is sometimes a higher right. It is this right which the Italians are now defending in the Papal States and in the Kingdom of the Two Sicilies. Their conduct, which must be blamed by diplomacy, will be absolved, and perhaps glorified, by history. What, in fact, is the peculiar interest attached to an unpopular dynasty like that of the Bourbons at Naples, repudiated by the people, reduced to a tardy resistance in a corner of the kingdom, and condemned by the opinion of Europe at the Congress of Paris? What is the political sovereignty of the Pope which is incompatible with the independence of the nation, and which can only be maintained by foreign arms? What is all that, compared to the great result of the constitution of Italian nationality, formed under the protection of France, and as an outpost of its power in Europe?—That cause is yours. Ant frankly where our interests are at stake, and where sympathy awaits you; do not by hesitation lame the generous efforts in the Two Sicilies, which can neither hurt your feelings nor thwart your designs. Do not continue at Rome an occupation which irritates the national feelings of the population, without sparing you the ingratitude of the Papal Government. Let Italy develop the independence which you have encouraged, and the unity which will turn to your advantage. Finally, to quote your own words: "Let the soldiers of freedom to-day become to-morrow the citizens of a great country."

Such is the whole truth, without curtailment, of the reproaches and counsels addressed to French policy by the extremes of public opinion.

If we were to show that this party could not, without compromising its most strict principles and most essential interests, adopt either of the two lines of conduct which it is reproached for not having adopted, we should have given the best possible answer to the accusations we have just stated.

What do these persons who would wish to see the Emperor turn against Italy call on him to do? They ask him to place himself out of the pale of all the principles he represents, and all the rules he has laid down. They ask him to renounce the moral authority which he exercises for the welfare of the peace of Europe. They wish him to contradict himself, and, so to say, to change his nature. But is that possible? Can the Emperor forget that he is the elect of universal suffrage, and the representative on the throne of the ideas of new society and of all the progress of civilization? Can he betray the origin of his name and of the mission which he holds from the confidence of the French people? His enemies desire it no doubt, but they esteem him too much to hope for it. And to what would such a defection serve? To weaken the prestige of the Emperor without advantage to any one. There is one thing which the whole world now understands—even those who regret to see it—namely, that the great influence of the sovereigns of France is one of the elements of the balance of power and of the security of Europe, and, moreover, one of the most precious resources she can invoke in the troubled situation of most States. The treaty of Villa Franca regretted that the treaty was a transaction, and it is deeply to be the sovereigns who signed it never had the pretensions to impose by force of arms the rights which were reserved in it. That pretension would have been irreconcilable with the situation which the treaty was to consecrate.

Austria lost at Solferino her supremacy in Italy, and, except her sovereignty in Venetia, retained nothing; but ought France to inherit the very situation which she has wrested from the House of Hapsburg? Ought she to impose her dominion on Italy after her having destroyed that of Austria? Ought her promises of enfranchisement to end in such falsehood? In fact, we could not restore former Governments to abandon them on the morrow of their restoration to the inevitable reaction of the national spirit. After having restored them it would have been necessary to protect them by a military occupation of their capitals and fortresses. We, the liberators of this people, should become its jailers! Rome, Bologna, Perugia, Ancona, Florence, Parma, Modena, Palermo, Naples, condemned to live under our protection, they would be simply slaves with a change of masters.

What would Italy have said, what would England have said, what would all Europe have said? They would have looked upon Italy thus protected as a French Italy. And for the advantage of whom would the Emperor have turned his arms against his old ally the King of Sardinia, and have placed himself in flagrant disaccord with England? For the advantage of governments which, according us neither their sympathies nor their confidence, have no right to demand such sacrifices.

The Emperor can not and will not make sacrifices, except for a just cause, for governments which are not hateful to their own people and are not the enemies of France.

Thus, in every point of view, for the maintenance of the legitimate influence of the Emperor of Europe, for the maintenance of our good relations with the other Powers, for the truth of our policy, for the very honor of France, such conduct is not possible.

Was the other line of conduct less possible or less dangerous?

Italy is passing a great crisis of her destiny, and is, in fact, in revolution. A revolutionary situation has temporarily replaced for that country the regular conditions of international existence. Hence the profound perturbations, the infractions of public law, the violent invasions, the precipitate annexations which we have witnessed. Could France lend a hand to such wild movements? At present, perhaps, we excite distrust, but if we had encouraged Piedmont, instead of blaming her, what would have happened? We should necessarily have had to break off with Russia, which has just withdrawn her Embassador from Turin; with Prussia, which protests; with Austria, which feels herself menaced. We should have inevitably drifted into universal war. The fortune of France, her labor, her industry—all that would have been abandoned to the hazards of a gigantic conflict.

The Emperor would have changed his part and his character; instead of being the moderator of the revolution, he would have become the leader of it; instead of becoming the pacificator of Europe, he would be her terror; instead of being the powerful arbiter in questions of equilibrium, he would have lost the very titles of his jurisdiction; and though elected by 8,000,000 of suffrages, and representing the national will, he would have become nothing more than the instrument of a party. Neither of these two attitudes was in keeping with the interest of our country, with the mission of the Emperor, with the character of our institutions, with the movement of new ideas which prevail every where.

France could no more assume the part of Austria in Italy than she could serve the revolution; she could no more favor revolutionary unsexation than she could favor absolutist reactions. When the Emperor called upon the Italians to be the soldiers of a great cause, so as to become the citizens of a great country, he did not mean Piedmont only, but Italy.

His sentiments, like his mission, have not undergone any change; he still wishes to assure the independence of the Peninsula without encouraging anarchy there. A recognized sovereign by the whole of Europe, he is not allowed to approve the violation of the international law; as a sovereign elected by universal suffrage, he can not make himself the support of kings whose people forsake them.

Finally, the intervention of France against Piedmont would be a contradiction; the intervention of Austria in Italy would be an offensive return toward a position she has irretrievably lost; complicity with Sardinia would be a defiance to Europe and a compact with a revolution.

What, then, is to be done? What line of conduct is to be followed? Many objections have been raised against the meeting of a Congress. A Congress could only be impossible if an agreement could not be established between the Powers called upon to form it. Is that the case? During the last year a very profound movement has taken place in Europe, but it is not sufficiently recognized. When the French Emperor, at the beginning of 1859, pleaded the cause of Italy, he had scarcely on his side the opinion of his own country. But now every thing is greatly changed. England, which then demanded the inviolability of the treaties of 1815, now favors Italian unity; Prussia, in a recent document emanating from the distinguished statesman who directs her foreign affairs, recognizes in Italian nationality a happy presage for Germany; Russia, under the influence of a liberal sovereign, also shows herself disposed to take into account a new element in the life of nations; Austria herself has an immense interest in escaping from the uncertainties which weigh so heavily on her, and the reforms she has just accorded prove that she is resolved to enter on a liberal course.

As to France, faithful to the interests which she has defended, not being engaged to any one, she would, in a Congress derive advantage from the reserve with which she is reproached and the moderation she has known how to maintain. Better than any other Power, perhaps, she would be able to indicate the points of a compromise between all divergencies. After having enfranchised Italy, supported the Pope at Rome, blamed the invasion of the Roman States and the Two Sicilies, and caused the principle of non-intervention to be respected by respecting it herself, she cannot be suspected either by Italy, or by the Papacy, or by Europe. We have too much confidence in the wisdom of the sovereigns who would be represented in a Congress, not to be convinced that they would understand how much the spirit of compromise constitutes the condition of the re-establishment of order in the Peninsula. Italy, organized and powerful, is henceforth a European interest; and Europe, in consecrating, by an act of her high jurisdiction, that organization, would prove herself both far-seeing and just.

AUTHORS AND BOOKS.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5, 1860.

Have you ever read "The Angel in the House," a Poem in two parts, by Mr. Coventry Patmore? It appeared, I think, about four or five years ago; and gave some promise, in a certain sweetness and grace of thought and expression; though there was, to a nicely judging temper, a dreadful feeling about it, as though it had been done on purpose. It was justly observed by one of Mr. Patmore's more savage critics at this time of his first appearance, that his Poem was very pretty, but if a man only once got the hang of the thing and was blessed with a moderate power of versifying, he might go on for ever in the same way. Now Mr. Patmore must have read this criticism; and, unfortunately for him, the critics idea of "going on for ever in the same direction," seems to have struck him as a "Fiduciary Hence, a new volome just out, and called, mous damnation of the critics, in which your correspondent (who is no critic, but a lover of genuine poetry) takes leave to join.

Not that the new volume has not some passages sweet, and pretty, and charming (though I have found none which has given me so pleasing a twist of the organ of analysis, as that famous sentence in his first book, in which a young lady accounts for her lover's hardihood in kissing her as she lay with closed eyes on a garden seat: "He thought I thought he thought I slept." I wish you would try some of your leisure moments on that involution, O gravest of editors!)

There are some charming bits in "Faithful Forever." But it has a dreadful tendency to common-place. It seems as though a gentleman who had given many studious days and nights to the reading of Mr. Martin Farquhar Tupper, might in the end be guilty of just such poetry as this. It is Mr. Tupper's common-place passed through the strainer of a gentlemanly brain.

The story told I find thus analysed to my hand: "It is of a very uninteresting young sailor, named Frederick Graham, who falls in love with his cousin Honoria. He corresponds with his mother on the subject, defiant of the old song which condemns the conduct of him that courts a pretty girl and goes and tells his mother; whereupon that matron, who seems to be a kind of Polonius in petticoats, replies to him with wise saws and modern instances couched in the feeblest and occasionally the worst of rhymes. The best of advice, even when so clothed, is proverbially of little avail; and consequently, when Honoria Churchill is married to Felix Vaughan, a sucking M.P., Frederick Graham makes no more ado, but kicks over the maternal traces and marries off-hand the chaplain's pretty daughter Jane—a simple little soul, good at her needle, but whose education (so far as the accomplishments go) has been sadly neglected. The remainder of the poem—if that word can be here applied without profanation—is devoted to the task of proving that the match was not such a bad one as might be expected, and that a simple little soul may make her husband very happy without being a fine lady."

And now, do you want a few samples? This little couplet seems almost ready to be sung. It has a kind of canary-bird chirp about it, which sounds foreign in the mouth of the sailor, who does not indeed speak it, but does write it:

> But why, dear mother, warn me so?
> I love Miss Churchill? Ah, no, no.

And then the mother comes in with a poetic bill of particulars to her sailor son:—

> For your sake I am glad to hear
> You sail so soon. I send you, Dear,
> A trifling present; 'twill supply
> Your Salisbury costs. You have to buy
> Almost an outfit for this cruise!
> But many are good enough to use
> Again, among the things you send
> To give away. My Maid shall mend
> And let you have them back.

Which passage is wickedly parodied by one of the reviewers into the following, which is really not to be distinguished from the genuine article:

> The boiler in the scullery
> Leaked, yesterday, at half-past three,—
> And so we had the workmen in:—
> They found the iron-work grown thin.

Frederic eventually marries Jane, the chaplain's daughter,

> A dear, good Girl, who saw my pain,
> And spoke as if she pitied me,—
> How glad and thankful I should be
> If some kind woman, not above
> Myself in rank, would give her love
> To one that knew not how to woo:—
> Whereat she, without more ado,
> Blush'd, spoke of love return'd, and closed
> With what I meant to have proposed!

And then follows a description of Jane married, who seems to have been common-place and stupid enough even for Mr. Coventry Patmore. Preserve me from such a Jane!

> "Her knowledge and conversing powers,
> You'll find, are poor. The clock, for hours,
> Loud clicking on the mantel shelf,
> Has all the talking to itself.
> But to and fro her needle runs
> Twice, while the clock is ticking once;
> And, when a wife is well in reach,
> Not silence separates, but speech;
> And I, contented, read or smoke
> And idly think, or idly stroke
> The winking cat, or watch the fire,
> In social peace that does not tire;
> Until, at easeful end of day,
> She moves, and puts her work away,
> And, saying, "How cold 'tis," or "How warm,"
> Or something else as little harm,
> Comes, used to finding, kindly prest'd,
> A woman's welcome to my breast.
> With all the great advantage clear
> Of none else having been so near."

From England there is just now great promise of good reading. Mr. Dickens will begin a new serial tale, to be called "Great Expectations," on December 1st. It will run through eight months, and will be reprinted in Harper's Weekly from advance sheets purchased of the author, by Messrs. Harper & Brothers.

Mr. Thackeray will commence a new story in January, of which the scene will lie partly in Holland. To judge from a "Roundabout Paper" from his pen, in the November number of the Cornhill, he has just been over to Holland to look up his scenes.

Mr. Trollope, whose "Farmley Parsonage" is winning him great praise, will, it is said, also enter the monthly lists.

It is a fact that the most available talent of these days is being drawn by high prices into the newspapers and magazines. Of course the greatest minds still work apart; but the story-writers, whose name is legion, and the "useful information" people, whom Mr. Dickens called into life, and who are a separate and by no means small legion, all work in the magazines; doubtless to the benefit of the public, though also to the injury of their own reputations—which does not matter.

A host of Members are to appear about Christmas, all made up from original papers which the lapse of years has just made it prudent to give to the public.—Among these are, Memoirs and Correspondence of the Great Pitt; of Lord Auckland; Additional Letters, &c., of Mrs. Piozzi, Dr. Johnson's friend; and last, but by no means least promising, the Autobiography of Mrs. Delany, attached to the Court of Her Majesty Queen Charlotte, with her Correspondence with the most distinguished personages of her time—presenting a picture of the Court of England, and of Literary and Fashionable Society, from an early period of the last century nearly to its close: edited by the Right Hon. Lady Llanover. Among the correspondence will be found letters of Wesley, Dr. Young (author of Night Thoughts), Swift, &c.

Mr. E. G. Squier, of Central American fame, is pursuing with characteristic energy his plan for the publication of a collection of "Rare and Original Documents concerning the Discovery and Conquest of America."—A prospectus just issued details the intention of the series, and gives the titles of several works proposed to be printed in it. No. 1, now ready, contains descriptions of the ancient provinces of Guasacapan, Izalco, Cuscatlan, and Chiquimula, with an account of the languages, customs, and religion of their aboriginal inhabitants, and a description of the ruins of Copan, by Don Diego de Palacio, addressed to the King of Spain in 1576. The original Spanish is given, with a translation, notes, and an illustrated map. It is the earliest account in existence of the ruins of Copan, which were visited by Palacio within forty years of the conquest, who found them very nearly in their present condition. His observations on the Indians, their languages, manners and customs, are very full and exact. Not more than 150 copies will be printed of any of the series, and the larger portion of these are already engaged for Germany, Cuba, &c. Mr. Charles B. Norton is the business agent.

Messrs. Harper & Bros. have just published Mr. Thackeray's Lectures on the Four Georges in a neat volume, with all the characteristic illustrations. Also, they have just out a new edition of that splendid book for young men and girls, and in fact for all who need encouragement, "Self Help." This new edition has numerous additions made by Mr. Smiles, and is illustrated with nearly twenty portraits, mostly engraved in Lossing & Barrit's best style. They have in press, and will shortly publish, from early sheets, a volume called "The Wits and Beaux of Society," by Grace and Philip Wharton, authors of that successful book, "The Queens of Society."—The men treated of in this volume are George Villiers, De Grammont, Saint Evremond, Rochester, Beau Fielding, the clubs and club-wits under Queen Anne; Congreve, Beau Nash, and the Batt set; Philip, Duke of Wharton, Lord Hervey, and the Fairkenham set; Abbe Scarren, La Rochefoucalt, Saint Simon, Horace Walpole, and Strawberry Hill; George Selwyn, Gilly Williams, Sheridan, and the prince's set; Theodore Hook, and the literary set; Sydney Smith, and the Holland set; George Babb Dodington, and Lord Melcombe.

Messrs. Derby & Jackson have in press a life of John C. Calhoun, in three volumes, by Capt. Bernard A. Reynolds, of Mobile.

Messrs. Radd & Carlton, who have just published Dr. Cumming's new work, "The Great Preparation, or Redemption Draweth Nigh," will shortly issue Legouve's Moral History of Women, a work of great excellence in many points, and very different from Michelet's prurient sentimentalism on the same subject. They have in press a new novel, "Lavinia," by the author of Dorta Antonio.

One of the "non-religious" papers, in a criticism on a recently published theological work, whose subject was the inquiry "How Sin came into the World?" shrewdly remarks: "There are matters of mere importance than that inquiry. If there is a pig in your garden, you had better busy yourself in driving it out than in speculating as to how it got in."

"Evan Harrington," a very brilliant story in the English Weekly, Once a Week, by George Meredith (a very promising young writer, whose name must not be confounded with Owen Meredith, the nome de plume of Robert Bulwer, the son of Sir E. B. Lytton), has just been concluded, and is to be succeeded by "The Silver Cord," a new serial by Shirley Brooks. "Evan Harrington" was not only a literary success, but was equally noted for the superb illustrations, from the pencil of Keene, with which it was graced. The new story will be illustrated by John Tenniel, a follower of Doyle, and almost his equal. "Evan Harrington" is published in book form in this country by Messrs. Harper and Bros.

Messrs. Chapman & Hall will publish shortly, "The Philosophy and History of Civilization," by Alexander Allison, author of a "History of the Future," and "The Second Reformation."

The author of "Magdalen Stafford," a novel which had some repute a few years ago, has in press a work on "The Home Life of English Ladies in the seventeenth century;" a very interesting subject. Mrs. Agar has recently treated the condition of women in the middle ages, in Europe, in an interesting volume with the singular and unexplanatory title of "From Dawn to Daylight."

Mr. Murray at last announces as ready, the first volume of the new edition of the "Life and Works of Alexander Pope. Containing more than 300 unpublished letters. Preceded by a Critical Essay on Pope; with a New Life," by Rev. Whitwell Elwin, the recently deposed editor of the Quarterly Review.

The twenty-first and concluding volume of the eighth edition of the "Encyclopedia Britanica" is just about to be published. This work has always numbered among its contributors many of the greatest names in English literature. Among the American contributors to this edition are Edward Everett, E. G. Squier, Professor DeBow, Professor Draper, and a number of others. The chief articles in this concluding volume are written by the following: Talleyrand, by John Downes, M.A.; "Tasmania," by William Westgrath; "Taxation and Wages," by J. R. M'Culloch; "Tea," by Edward Edwards; "Telegraph," by William Thomson, professor of natural philosophy in the University of Glasgew; "Telescope," by Sir J. F. W. Herschel, Bart.; "Theatre," by Dr. Doran; "Theology," by W. L. Alexander, D.D.; "Timber and Tonnage," by Robert Murray, engineer surveyor to the board of trade; "Tobacco," by Dr. Tomlinson, lecturer on natural science, King's college school; "Turkey," by Dr. Sandeisson, British consul, Brusa; "Turner," by Walter Thornbury; "Tyler" (A. F. and P. F.) by Rev. J. W. Burgon; "United States," by Prof. Samuel Elliot, Trinity College, Hartford, U.S.; "Universities," by George Ferguson, M.A., Professor of Humanity, King's college, Aberdeen; "Veterinary Science," by William Dick, professor of veterinary medicine and surgery, Veterinary College, Edinburgh; "Voltaic Electricity," by Sir David Brewster, K.H. D.C.L., principal of the University of Edinburgh; "Voltaire," by Henry Rogers, author of the "Eclipse of Faith," &c.; "War," by Major-General J. E. Portlock, R. E., member of the Council of Military Education; "Washington," by Hon. Edward Everett; "Wellington," by W. H. Russell, LL.D.; "Wine-Making," by Sir James Emerson Tennent, K.C.S., LL.D.; "Zoophytes," by George Johnston, M.D., author of "History of British Zoophytes," &c., revised and enlarged.

The "Encyclopedia Britanica" numbers among its contributors Edward Everett, E. G. Squier, Mr. DeBow, Prof. Draper, and a number of other eminent American writers.

* * *

CENTENARY INSTITUTE.

MR. EDITOR: As I am on the eve of changing my residence from this place (Summerfield) to Selma, I desire to say a word to your readers in favor of Old Centenary.

For nearly twelve years I have served as one of her Board of Trustees, and, as you know, have always felt an interest in her prosperity. My knowledge, however, of her every-day workings was necessarily limited. A residence of several weeks in the college, last autumn, and my access to it every week during the past twelve months, afforded every opportunity for studying its internal machinery. I was the more interested in this, from the fact of having two daughters to educate, and I very naturally desired to place them at the best Southern school I could find. The result of my observations is, that I have placed them here, and I expect to continue them here until their scholastic course has been completed.

President Montgomery is one of the best disciplinarians I have ever known. In that respect he is the Napoleon of the great educational army of the age; and in my estimation he has no superior. His pupils love and fear him; and of all men he is the most wonderful to elicit application. I have never known any man that was his equal in this respect. Under his influence, dullness and sloth seem to forget their old habitudes, and to ripen into quickness and industry. Instances of this kind, and not a few either, have come under my personal observation, and I could but marvel at the transformations which a few weeks would work. It was all done quietly, too, and in affection. His entire corps of Teachers are not only of the first order of intellect and culture, but, they are all "to the manor born." They are all Southerners, which, in these times, would be essential to the securing of my patronage.

You hear much in these days of humbuggery in connection with our schools; and there is, no doubt, more or less of it in everything,—in schools also; but so far as close application, diligent study, and honest examinations go to free an institution from humbuggery, I affirm boldly and truthfully that Centenary is no humbug. Parents may rest assured of this.

During the past summer Prof. Richardson, who has the entire Boarding department entirely under his supervision, has refurnished the house from cellar to garret. The dormitories are all supplied with handsome sets of chamber furniture, including bedsteads, wardrobes, bureaus, centre-tables, etc. Each room has been newly carpeted. Grates have taken the place of the old and dangerous wood fire system; and the whole building, as to its internal arrangements, has been made not only comfortable, but absolutely beautiful. In addition, Prof. Richardson has provided four commodious bathing rooms in the different wings of the building, which, as a sanitary measure, to say nothing of the comfort, will prove invaluable. These baths are supplied with water from a large tank in the centre of the building, which is fed from the springs in the rear of the college by means of a hydraulic ram. Great improvements have been made in the laundry, also, by introducing the use of boilers and a drying room. In short, neither pains nor expense have been spared in Prof. Richardson's efforts to make the members of his large family as comfortable and as happy as though they were at home. His liberal expenditures in this direction, give him a claim on those who have daughters to educate; and all such may feel satisfied that in committing their children to him and his accomplished lady, they will do so with the certainty that they will want for nothing.

Under the present regime, Centenary offers rare inducements to the public for patronage. If you desire thorough instruction, she will give it. If you would have your daughters surrounded by every comfort necessary to their happiness, their neatness and their health, they will find it here. If you would place them in the family of a refined, cultivated, and scientific Southern gentleman; and an accomplished, considerate, and careful Southern lady, Prof. Richardson and his wife will meet your expectations. He has done his utmost to make the Boarding department in every sense a home to those who may constitute his family. I have given him my two jewels—the only ones left me by death—and I feel that in him they will find friend, brother, father, all.

He has made provision for about 120 young ladies, in his family. The places are fast being filled. Although the present term has opened most prosperously, there is still room for more, and I hope that parents and guardians will soon fill the few vacancies left. The selection of a school is a most solemn parental responsibility; one where influence is to extend through life,—will reach out into eternity. In the fear of God I have selected Centenary for the two left me; and now after a year's close observation, I can conscientiously say to my friends—"Send your daughters to Summerfield."

In conclusion, my dear brother, allow me to thank you for your generous correction of the report that I had turned politician. I have a higher work to do; and while I feel a deep interest in the welfare of my country and section, and have been accustomed from the beginning of my agency to place my enterprise on its legitimate Southern basis, and to urge co-operation in it on the ground that it is Southern in origin and aims, yet, I have not at any time, or upon any occasion, connected it or myself with the party issues of the South.

Although, while pursuing this course I have suffered from misrepresentation, and in one instance, and he a minister of the gospel of my blessed Lord, from the most wanton assaults on my private character, I have done my utmost to keep down all "bitterness and wrath," and to pray that they and he, whom I have never wronged, might be forgiven. It gives me great pleasure to know that if I have suffered these things in my attempts to build up a great interest of our Church, and of the South, I have had much larger success than I anticipated in the outset; and with the assurance of confidence and sympathy which the people of my State are giving and sending me, I do not intend to let the rage of ungodly men disturb me.

Again, I thank you for putting yourself to the trouble of acquiring data on which you might correct a rumor hurtful to you and to the whole Church to which you belong. If the press would always and everywhere be thus watchful for the truth, for Zion, and for the character of brother ministers, it would be better for the truth, for the Church, and for the usefulness of our brethren.

Yours in Christ,

PHIL. F. NEELY.

Summerfield, Ala., Nov., 1860.

OUR PASTORAL INEFFICIENCY.

MR. EDITOR: A few days since I read an article in the Nashville Advocate, purporting to have been written by a member of this (Louisiana) Conference, signed, "A Methodist." When this "hue and cry" was first raised against Methodist preachers as pastors, we have no record. One thing is certain, when they have done in this work ten-fold more labor than is done, or even required, of ministers of sister Churches, some shivelling complainer is ready to write "Inefficiency," and why? Because of our itinerating policy. Hence a change is necessary to make our preachers efficient pastors. The experience we have had in the world proves to us that there is more required and expected of a Methodist preacher than those of any other communion; and for them to fill the requirements made, give satisfaction, and silence complainers, they must be more than men. And if, therefore, the Church by any legislative act can produce such a result the "pastoral inefficiency" may be remedied. The argument used by "A Methodist" to show the cause of our "pastoral inefficiency" is founded on a false assumption, that, owing to our itinerating system, our preachers cannot have that deep-felt interest in the welfare of their pastorates that ministers of other Churches have. Really the mien of this writer is rather contradictory of his right to correspond over the name, "A Methodist."

If, however, his assumption can not be disproved, it must be received, and the arguments founded thereupon go as genuine coin. Facts are stubborn things, and show for themselves—especially in the case now in question. There is an infallible rule by which we may arrive at such facts; we must not judge, but we may "know a tree by its fruits." Men's acts are a true index to what they feel; words are empty things without corresponding acts. So thought St. James when he wrote these words: "I will show thee my faith by my works." In the category of ministers belonging to the various denominations, who of them are the most sacrificing, the most laborious in efforts to effect good for the people among whom they live. And what are the results of these efforts towards accomplishing the end for which they labor? How reads the statistics that give an annual report of each organization's success? Here we have feeling demonstrated—not in empty words, but in fruitful acts—whose results are seen and read of all men; and be it said, for none can successfully controvert it, that for these wonderful results society is indebted to the itinerating system of our Church. These are legible facts, and prove emphatically the position, and the statements made on the same, by "A Methodist," not to be true. Hence, if our preachers are "inefficient" as pastors, it is owing to some other cause, and not to our itinerating policy. Its tendency is to the opposite of gendering "indolent habits," while that of a settled ministry tends directly to this thing. Our system, in her workings, is to disencumber from all secular business, and make her ministers men of one work. Like St. Paul, "sent to preach the Gospel." And I challenge an instance, from the organization of the Church to the present, who was such a man, confiding in the Church for support, who from actual want was driven from the work. In conclusion: in this day of intelligence what language can be more convincing of a disregard to facts than the following: "his preaching will be hortatory, declamatory, not didactic, not expository; he will not be 'mighty in the Scriptures.'" This defect in our preachers is owing to "our system" of itinerancy. So reasons "A Methodist," and the conclusion to which this drives us is [illegible] and the Episcopal ministry is carried. Selah! Now, Mr. Editor, is it not a fact, almost universally, that Dr. Adam Clarke's Commentary on the Old and New Testament Scriptures is the best critical work of the kind ever given to the world, and Benson's the best practical, and Watson's the best theological works. And these men "grew up" under that system where the preachers aim to become revivalists."

J. WM.

Louisiana Conference.

CIRCULAR LETTER TO THE M. E. CHURCH, SOUTH.

After much anxiety, labor, and expense, we have completed the GENERAL CONFERENCE ENGRAVING, and now offer it to the Church and the Public. The work is one of much merit, and reflects great credit on the accomplished artist, J. C. Buttre, Esq., of New York City. This is the first work of the kind ever published in this country, and in magnitude, beauty and excellence far surpasses anything of the kind ever published in Europe. These facts, it seems to me, should produce in the bosom of every Southern Methodist and friend of the Church, a degree of pleasure and satisfaction, which should prompt them to hold the work in high esteem. Around this attractive and beautiful engraving cluster memories most sacred and endearing to every Methodist in the land, both North and South; and if it is properly appreciated, no one who is truly a friend of the Church which it represents will fail to procure a copy, if able to pay for one.

It is well known to the Church and the public, that the money arising from the sale of this magnificent Engraving is to be applied to the erection of a fine Church in Washington City, for the use of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. It is contemplated and designed that this Church shall be strictly a Representative Church—all the Southern Conferences participating alike in its erection, and sharing in the appointment and interest of the station. It is proposed that the appointments to this station be made by the Bishops, at their annual meetings, from each Conference alternately, or by a special law, to be enacted by the next General Conference, made and provided for this particular station. In all the appointments made, the minister will still hold his ecclesiastical connection with the Conference from which he comes; and his annual report as Pastor of the charge, will be made to that Conference, and will of course appear upon its minutes.

In view of this contemplated arrangement, I earnestly appeal to every Conference to pass, at their approaching annual sessions, a resolution, requesting every preacher to make an effort to collect, upon no average, twenty-five cents from each member of their particular charges, and remit the amount to me at the earliest possible day—not later than the first of June next. I make this request, and urge the passage of the resolution, for the reason that I fear we shall not be able to raise money enough from the sale of the Engraving to build the Church. We must also have a good parsonage and a fine library connected with the Church.

It will be recollected, as announced through the papers of our Church, that I have purchased a most eligible and desirable lot on which to build the Church, and I have quite recently adopted a plan and made arrangements for the erection of the edifice. The design of the Church has been prepared by a skillful architect, and all who have examined the plan declare that it is the most complete and beautiful they ever saw. I hesitate not to say that the Church, when completed, will be one of the most convenient, desirable, and beautiful church edifices in America—a Church in every way worthy of the great Methodist family which it is designed to represent.

Now, my friends, it is for you to say whether this great enterprise shall succeed or not—whether it shall go successfully forward or not. If we maintain our reputation as a generous, liberal people, let us push this forward with all possible dispatch. Do not, for one moment, let it flag. It is a very small matter for so wealthy and influential a Church as ours to accomplish. Give me the small assistance I ask, and the work shall be brought to a triumphant success ere the close of the year eighteen hundred and sixty-one. The Church must be built.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

NOVEMBER 14, 1860.

WILLIAM T. SMITHSON.

Washington, October 8, 1860.

P.S.—A SPECIAL WORD TO THE PREACHERS.

DEAR BRETHREN: I look to you, with intense anxiety, for aid and co-operation in the prosecution of this great work. Without your assistance, I could not hope to succeed. But, on the other hand, with your assistance and hearty co-operation, I could not fail of success. Then, as this is a common cause, a cause of God and the Church, let each one of us heartily ourselves to action, and earnestly invoke the blessing of God upon our efforts. I humbly trust, dear brethren, that our hearts and souls may take fresh fire, as we go hand in hand, endeavoring to enflame the hearts of our friends with becoming enthusiasm in support of a work which commends itself to the admiration and liberal patronage of every true friend of the Church. May God bless our efforts with abundant success!

The price of the Engraving is ten dollars. Let all who remit me money be careful to have their letters registered.

W. T. S.

METHODISM IN BILOXI.

MR. EDITOR:—As my year's labor is now closed at this station, I wish in a few words to give a statement of our success here, and the state and condition of the Church. There are seventy-three members belonging to this Church now. We have joined this year into full connection, twenty-four; joined on probation, ten; have had some happy conversions; dismissed two by letter; expelled four; dropped six for our not attending class meeting; baptized twenty-one, children and adults; buried three of our members during the year; married three couple; have preached about seventy times; had class meetings every Sabbath from the first of December, 1859 up until now, except twice for our Quarterly meetings and love feast, and once in preparing our Sabbath-school children for their anniversary meeting. We have a large and interesting Sabbath-school. I have left the Church in peace, and in the enjoyment of the love of God, and Christian fellowship. I pray that they may be blessed with a good preacher and a faithful pastor, the ensuing Conference year.

MATHEW D. THOMASON.

Biloxi, November 5th, 1860.

OUACHITA CONFERENCE APPOINTMENTS.

LITTLE ROCK DISTRICT—D. L. G. McKenzie, P.E. Little Rock Station and African Mission, Julius A. Stanley; Liberty and Mound Church, Fountain Brown; Bayou Metre Circuit, J. W. Brandon; Benton Circuit, John J. Partin; Saline Circuit, to be supplied; Perryville, Malcom Turner; Mill Creek, James L'Saupey, E. Watson.

ARKADELPHIA DISTRICT—Andrew Hunter, P.E. Arkadelphia Station, Wm. P. Ratcliffe; Clark Circuit, Wm. Winburn; Tulip and African Mission, W. R. J. Husbands, James Caldwell; Rockport Circuit, E. Smoot; Hot Springs, N. W. Chamberlain; Caddo Circuit, T. S. Tyson; Murfreesboro Circuit, B. C. Weir; Mount Ida Mission, T. R. Atterberry; Princeton and African Mission, E. A. Stevenson and H. Burnett; Arkadelphia Female College, James E. Cobb, President and Agent.

WASHINGTON DISTRICT—J. M. Pryor, P. E.; Washington Station, Calesman Pope; Hempstead Circuit, A. Greer; Ditto African Mission, to be supplied; Centre Point Circuit, Wade H. Frost; Centre Point African Mission, Thomas Hunt; Paraclifta Circuit, J. M. Goodwin; Mine Creek Circuit, A. Avery; Richmond Circuit, R. Abernathy; Columbus African Mission, to be supplied; Dallas Mission, G. H. Waren; Red River Circuit and African Mission, T. A. Graham; Polk Circuit, John L. Emerson.

CAMDEN DISTRICT,—A. R. Winfield, P. E. Camden Station, Horace Jewel, D. J. Allen, Sup.; South Camden and African Mission, to be supplied; Ouachita Circuit and African Mission, Williams, J. W. Turnley; Eldorado Station to be supplied; Chalk Circuit and African Mission, James Hulse. W. J. Lapeal circuit, C. O. Slack, supernumerary; Lewisville and Mt. Holly and African Mission, E. S. Marshal. Agent for Ouachita Male College, Samuel Morris.

PINE BLUFF DISTRICT—John Blakely; P.E. Pine Bluff Station, A. M. Bradley; Jefferson Circuit, Lewis Garrett; White Sulphur Springs, C. M. Gentry; Lebi and African Mission, Robert M. Kirby; Richland and African Mission, A. Turrentine; Auburn circuit, F. P. Baird; Red Fork circuit, to be supplied; Red Fork African Mission, John Dickson; Salem, R. C. Atchley; Napoleon Station, E. L. Gaddis.

MONTICELLO DISTRICT—A. B. Winfield, P.E. Monticello Station, W. C. Hallsip; Mount Pleasant and African Mission, W. R. Davis; Lacy circuit, W. C. Adams; Hamburg circuit, John Carr; Bathelomew circuit, A. H. Kennedy; Mason's Hill circuit, James T. Price; Lake Village and African Mission, to be supplied; Eunice circuit, James M. Lee; Warren circuit, D. C. Harris, Jr. A. Glover; Hampton and African Mission, James H. Harvey; Hamburg Female Seminary, B. Watson.

DESARC DISTRICT—J. H. Aunis, P.E.; Desarc Station, H. B. McKinnon; Brownsville Mission, J. T. Corbit; Oakland Grove, H. C. Linsdale; St. Charles, W. Scott; Old River and Swan Lake, L. H. Johnson; Plum Bayou, E. Crowson.

Agent for the American Bible Society, J. S. M'Allster.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS,

DOMESTIC.

The news of the past week is mainly in connection with the recent Presidential Election. By telegraphic dispatches received in this city yesterday, we have the following important intelligence in relation thereto:—

The Presidential Election.—Up to latest accounts, Tennessee, Kentucky, and Missouri are somewhat in doubt, but it is generally credited that the two former have gone for Bell, and the latter for Douglas. Breckenridge has carried Maryland and Virginia, which, at first, were supposed to have gone for Bell. The only Northern State that did not give a majority for Lincoln was New Jersey, where the Fusion ticket triumphed.

Secession Movements.—In South Carolina, the House of Representatives has adopted a bill for relieving the banks of that State from having one-third gold and silver to two-thirds issue. The 6th of December has been substituted for the 6th of January as the day of election, and 17th day of December instead of the 10th of January as the day for the meeting of the Convention. Mr. Simonton offered a resolution that the Governor be empowered to raise 100,000 volunteers. The resolution was laid aside to be considered on the 12th. It is reported that the declaration of independence of South Carolina was laid before President Buchanan on the 12th. Information has been received at Augusta, Ga., that Senator Hammond has resigned his seat in the U. S. Senate. In the Georgia Legislature, which is now in session, a resolution was introduced on the 12th declaring the State of Georgia out of the Union. It and another calling a Convention were referred to a Committee. Senator Toombs' resignation will take effect in March, unless Georgia secedes. From Alabama we learn that military companies are being fully equipped, and have tendered their services to the Governor. The citizens of Montgomery are said to be unanimous for disunion. The city of Mobile opposes secession, but the country districts are in favor of disunion. Minute men are rapidly organizing. Thirty thousand, it is said, will be enrolled by the first of January. It is reported that Georgia, Alabama, Texas, Mississippi, and Louisiana will go with South Carolina. In Henderson and Lexington, Ky., conservative meetings were held on the 12th, which were addressed by Bell, Douglas and Breckenridge speakers. Union resolutions were unanimously adopted, and secession strongly deprecated. It was rumored at Cincinnati that Vice President Breckenridge was about to visit the Cotton States to urge them not to secede. A telegram from Lexington yesterday denies the truth of said rumor. Gov. Pettus has issued a proclamation convening the Legislature of Mississippi on the 26th inst., "to take into consideration the propriety and necessity of providing sure and better safeguards for the lives, liberties and property of Mississippians than is to be found in black Republican oaths, as evinced in the late election and past actions of Northern State Governments."—No disposition is manifested on the part of the Administration or prominent political gentlemen, to interfere in the present Southern secession movement, except, perhaps, in a friendly spirit. It is probable that the President will soon issue an address or a proclamation, because the election of delegates to the South Carolina Convention takes place earlier than was anticipated. Real estate at Washington is sensibly affected under the apprehension that the seat of Government may be changed. Messrs. Corwin, Ewing, Vinton of Ohio, Graham, Badger of North Carolina, and others, are talked of as members of Lincoln's Cabinet.

The following we gather from our exchanges:—

LOUISIANA.

The Weather and Crops.—The Banner makes the following remarks in regard to the weather in St. Mary and the prospect of the sugar crop: The weather has been unusually pleasant. We have had rain enough to moisten the ground and make the turnips and cabbage grow. The deagie in St. Mary, we believe, is rather on the decline. We hear of but few new cases. Sugar making is progressing, and the yield is generally fair, and the article made is usually good. But it will be useless to make any predictions at present in relation to the yield of the parish.

Thanksgiving Day.—"His proclamation, setting apart a day for public thanksgiving for the blessings of the year now closing, Gov. Moore says: "It is our bounden duty either in time of prosperity or adversity, to bow down in humble submission to the chastening manifestations and decrees of Divine Providence, and to acknowledge the inscrutable wisdom and justness of His decree—it now becomes us, after a season of general good health and comparative prosperity, to recognize the same All-wise power as the Supreme Source of all blessings and enjoyments. And as it has been customary in this State to observe a day of public thanksgiving, therefore, I have thought proper to recommend that Thursday, the 29th day of November next, be set apart for that purpose, and suggest to persons of all creeds and denominations the propriety of suspending on that day their usual business avocations, that it may be dedicated exclusively to the worship of Almighty God."

MISSISSIPPI.

The Southern Railroad.—This road (generally known as the Vicksburg and Jackson) is now open to Newton Station, 110 miles east of Vicksburg, and about thirty miles west of Meridian. It is thought that it will be finished to Meridian by the 1st of March next, which will then give 140 miles of railroad, in a direct line, through the heart of the State, from east to west.

Wealthy Agricultural County.—The Holly Springs Herald notes the fact that the cotton crop of Marshall county, in the year 1859, amounted to 45,361 bales. This, the Herald claims, makes its county the banner cotton county of Mississippi. The Herald adds: In 1855 the crop exceeded 50,000 bales; and we presume that from forty to fifty thousand bales might be considered an average yearly crop, which, according to the census, makes Marshall county the largest cotton growing county in the Union. Our annual cotton crop realizes our planters about $2,000,000.

GEORGIA.

A Georgia Grandmother.—Mrs. Sarah H. Cobb, aged 68 years, the mother of Hon. Howell Cobb; Sec. of the Treasury, received at a late fair in Georgia, the premium of a silver goblet for five handsomely embroided shirts, worked by herself for her five grandsons.

Secession Movements in Georgia.—A telegram from Augusta, dated Nov. 10th, says: Meetings are being held throughout the State of Georgia for the formation of minute corps. A meeting is called in this city for to-night, at which decisive measures for the session of Georgia will be adopted. A military State Convention is to be held on Tuesday next at Milledgeville. A delegation of South Carolinians is visiting Georgia. It is reliably reported that several hundred thousand men are already enrolled at the South, and that the enrollments are still in progress.

TENNESSEE.

Minute Men.—An association of Minute Men was organized at Memphis, Tenn., on Wednesday last. The "chine cockade" was adopted as a badge.

Thanksgiving.—Gov. Harris, of Tennessee, has set apart Thursday, the 29th inst., to be observed as a day of thanksgiving by the people of that State.

An ordinance of the city of Memphis requires all stores and saloons to be closed at 11 o'clock at night.

VIRGINIA.

Virginia Patrolling the Potomac.—A special dispatch to the Charleston Courier says Gov. Letcher, of Virginia, has "instituted a system of military patrols along the Potomac, in all the river counties."

An Extraordinary Military Company.—A volunteer company has recently been organized in Virginia which is unmatched in material. It numbers fifty-five, and of these fifty are in uniform. Of the fifty, two are ministers of the gospel, (one Baptist and one Methodist,) two are deacons, two class leaders, two lawyers, one doctor, one magistrate, two clerks of court, two deputy clerks, forty professors of religion, fifteen who don't profess, but are moral and religiously inclined, seven who pray in public, twenty-six sons of temperance, twenty-temperance men, and of these last mentioned very few drink ardent spirits at all, none of them excessively, and last, but not least, they are all reliable and true.

Virginia Asylum for Inebriates.—The Medical Society of Virginia has constituted Drs. Broocks, Trent and Bolton a committee to apply to the next Legislature for a charter for a house of refuge for inebriates. The establishment will be called the Virginia Washingtonian Home.

Among the curiosities to be seen at the Mechanics' Fair in Richmond, is a doll which has been played with by five generations—deposited by Miss Georgia Powell; a diamond ring 301 years old—deposited by Mrs. A. P. Allen; a book 221 years old—deposited by Mrs. Benj. Davis; and last, but not least, the cradle in which Henry Clay was rocked!

Dr. Stewart, of King George, Va., recently sold forty-seven slaves to a gentleman of Arkansas, for about $17,000.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Secession Movements.—A telegram from Columbia, dated Nov. 10th, says: "The bill calling a State Convention to meet on the 17th of December, for the purpose of taking measures to assert and maintain the independence of the State, has passed both Houses of the Legislature by a unanimous vote. Senator Chesnut has resigned his seat in the United States Senate. The flag of secession—a red star on a white ground—is waving in all the public places and from all the public edifices. The greatest joy and enthusiasm prevailed among the people. There is a perfect unanimity of sentiment in favor of decisive and immediate action, and no doubt is entertained of an early session of South Carolina from the Federal Union. Several thousand armed Minute Men are now parading the streets."

There is an extensive brogan factory in full operation at Cheraw, S. C. The factory is doing a very flourishing business, and planters from all portions of the State are said to patronize it liberally.

The Hog Cholera.—The Louisville Journal says: A gentleman of experience and observation informed us yesterday that hog cholera prevailed to a considerable extent among the swine of this region, and that many hogs had died of the disease in this vicinity."

The artesian well is one of the great curiosities of Louisville, Ky. This is the deepest well that has ever been successfully bored. It was commenced in 1857, by the Messrs. Du Pont; is 2086 feet in depth; discharges 330,000 gallons every twenty-four hours; and carries its flow to the hight of 170 feet above the surface.

ARKANSAS.

Growth of Arkansas.—For a long period the soil and climate and the vast resources of that State remained unknown. But the last ten years has effected a most remarkable change; the current of population setting westward, has left a large portion of its drift on the rich lands of Arkansas. The vote for Governor at the last election was in round numbers 60,000. The whole population will not fall below 500,000, and the State will, in all probability, be entitled in the thirty-eighth Congress, to five Representatives. The increase in voting population since 1856 is not far from 22,000. The same ratio of increase would give the State in 1871 not far from 110,000 voters, and not less than 1,000,000 of population.

TEXAS.

Sugar in Texas.—The Columbia Democrat and Planter says: The first sample of new sugar we have seen was sent us from the plantation of Col. Campbell, who commenced grinding last week. This is a very fair article. Although there will not be anything like an average crop of sugar made in the country, yet we believe it will far exceed what was expected a few months ago."

The Belton Democrat thinks that by the newly established boundary, the Washita counties are included in Texas, embracing a large section of fertile country, in which the Rucker survey for the Central road of 250,000 acres was made.

The Centerville Times, of the 2d inst., has the following: From all quarters of the county we learn that the cotton crops are turning out much better than was anticipated by the people generally. Many of our planters, we learn, have raised more than they can gather. The cotton crop, though rather short throughout the State this season, is of very fine quality, and should command a fair price.

By private advices from Weatherford, says the Dallas Herald, we learn that an express had arrived at that place on the 25th October, bringing the sad intelligence that twenty Indians had killed and scalped a wagoner near Colonel Whatley's, on the Belknap road. The Indians had a number of horses, supposed to be stolen. Capt. Hamner immediately started in pursuit with a company of picked men. It is to be hoped that this experienced hero of the frontier will meet the savages, and achieve a victory.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

An effort is making at Los Angeles to push forward the telegraph on the Butterfield route, from that place to Colorado, one party having subscribed $10,000.

The Oregon Legislature has decided to adjourn on the 10th inst., and meet in extra session next January.

The bill providing for the action of Representatives to Congress, and rendering nugatory the recent Congressional election, has not passed, the Senate refusing to concur in the House amendments.

The 29th of November has been appointed by the Governor of California for a general thanksgiving.

Recent intelligence from Oregon says that the account of the late massacre of emigrants by the Snake Indians was much exaggerated. Colonel Wright had received positive information that all but eleven of the train had arrived at the settlements in safety, and strong hopes were entertained of the escape of the eleven that had become separated from the main body.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Man who Saved the Lives of Six Hundred Persons.—The brig Minnie Schiffer, Capt. Wilson, sailed from Boston on the 27th ult. for Mobile. The name of this vessel, and that of her gallant captain, will ever rank high in the roll of humanity. Capt. Wilson, by his skill and energy, was the instrument, under Providence, of saving over six hundred lives from the burning wreck of the steamer Connaught. It was his proposition to run hawser to the steamer to keep his vessel near, and to this may be ascribed the crowning triumph of having saved every soul.

Explosion and Loss of Life at Chicago.—The propeller, Globe, from Buffalo, exploded her boiler at her dock, in Chicago on the 8th inst., while getting up steam for the purpose of hoisting out her freight. Several persons were killed and a number injured.

The census of Vermont, it is stated, will show a decrease since 1850 of about four or five thousand. This is, we believe, the first instance in the history of the country where the population of a State has receded in the course of ten years.

A boy, five or six years old, whilst playing in an alley in Springfield, Ill., on the 24th ult., was tossed high in the air by a vicious cow, and as he descended, the animal planted one of her horns immediately under the right eye, inflicting a hideous gash along the cheek. It is doubtful if the child will recover.

Sonorian Molasses.—The yield from the Sorghum sugar cane, this year, is Iowa, promises to be most abundant. The most flattering accounts are made in different sections of the State of its immense yield.

Utah.—Judging from the accounts which reach us from Utah, Brigham Young has very little idea at the present time of leaving the valley of the Great Salt Lake with his followers, even for the more genial climate of a Polynesian or an East Indian island. In fact, a revival of the old Mormon spirit seems to be going forward, which is likely to lead to a more firm establishment of the Saints in that region than ever before. The Tabernacle, which for some time after the advent of the United States troops remained closed, has recently been once more opened for public worship, and Brigham himself harangues the people two or three times every Sabbath. Missionaries are also being sent out to Europe, and to other countries, among whom is the celebrated elder, Orson Pratt.

The population of Montgomery, Alabama, exceeds 10,000.

A New Island.—A new island has been added to the Pacific chart by a discovery made by Capt. Green of the Agate, a brig in the employ of the Phenix Guano Company. It lies on the northeast end of the Phenix group, in lat. 2 deg. 41 minutes South, and long. 171 deg. 40 minutes West. The discoverers found a spacious lagoon inside, and some appearance of the island having been inhabited, although at a remote period. On the western side of the entrance to the lagoon there was a large pyramidal structure built of stone, and evidently of considerable antiquity. On the western side there was an extensive inclosure, also constructed of stone. The guano deposits proved to be of considerable extent and excellent in quality.

Emmit Hundred Troops for Texas. We learn from the New York papers of the 26th ult., that the steamship Star of the South, formerly in the Savannah line, has been chartered by the United States Government to carry eight hundred troops to Texas. These troops are to be stationed all along the Indian border.

Death of Mrs. Edward Livingston. The New York papers record the death in that city, on the 21th ult., of Mrs. Livingston, the venerable relict of Edward Livingston, the Napoleon statesman of Louisiana, and author of that code of laws which has made his name eminent among the distinguished jurists of the world.

Robbery of Adams' Express.—A man named Stebbins, a baggage master on the New Haven railroad, is under arrest in New York, for the robbing of Adam's Express of money and drafts amounting to sixteen thousand dollars, and confesses the crime.

Thanksgiving.—The Governors of Pennsylvania, Maine, New Hampshire, New York, New Jersey, and Ohio, have appointed Thursday, the 29th of November, as Thanksgiving Day.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Our latest advices from Europe are to the 2d inst., per steamship "North American," which arrived at New York on the 12th. The Conference at Warsaw is generally regarded as a complete failure. The report is confirmed that France had interfered to prevent the bombardment of Gaeta by Sardinian vessels. Garibaldi, at latest advices, still continued his march to the Roman frontier. The Neapolitan Royalists had again been defeated by Garibaldi. The voting in Naples for the annexation to Piedmont was almost unanimous.

The following we gather from our exchanges:

GREAT BRITAIN.

American Securities in England.—There continues to be an active market in London for American securities, especially for railroad stocks and bonds.

Both Houses of the British Parliament were formally prorogued to the 3d day of January.

FRANCE.

The Wine Yield in France worse than ever before.—From all the wine districts of France, says a late Paris letter, the reports are of the most unsatisfactory kind. The wine will be worse than in any year of this century. In Champagne the grapes are yet quite green and hard, and will scarcely be worth gathering. The failure of the vintage, combined as it is with the failure of the corn harvest and the failure of the potato crop, must exercise a powerful influence on the internal state of the country; it is sure there is a bad time coming for the Government, which, until now, has been reaping the fruits of national prosperity.

Prince Metternich and Baron Hubner were received by the Emperor Napoleon at Paris on the 28th. Notwithstanding the great warlike preparations, the French Minister of Foreign Affairs pronounced against France taking part in any new conflict between Sardinia and Austria.

Metternich promised Napoleon to effect internal reforms in Austria, and maintain only a defensive policy extra-mully. He said that the concentration of Austrian troops in Venetia was only intended to repel attack.

It was reported that the Austrian envoy had notified the Emperor that unless Piedmont discontinued her warlike preparations, and the Hungarian Legion was disbanded, Austria would immediately commence hostilities.

SPAIN.

A telegram from Madrid states that Marshal O'Donnell delivered an address in the Cortes, in which he said that Spain would remain neutral in the Italian affairs.

RUSSIA.

Advices from St. Petersburg announce the death of the Dowager Empress of Russia.

ITALY.

The London Morning Advertiser says that Victor Emanuel and Garibaldi were to bombard Gaeta immediately by sea and land. The town of Capua was occupied by the troops of Garibaldi. It is deuled that Austria had informed the European Cabinets of her intention to send an ultimatum to Turin. On the contrary, she reiterated her assurance of pursuing a purely defensive policy.

BRAZIL.

Capture of Guadalajara.—By the Spanish mail steamship Union, at Havana, we have news from Vera Cruz to the 26th ult., and the city of Mexico to the 20th. The assault and capture of the city of Guadalajara took place on the 15th. A letter says that the assault was made at six different points, in columns of 1500 men each; that the combat was a bloody one, and the works of the enemy were taken only at the point of the bayonet. The same letter says that Gen. Castillo and seventy-two other officers who fell into the hands of Ortega as prisoners, were afterwards shot. The reason assigned is, that their resistance was obstinate and bloody beyond the recognized laws of war. The news, however, would seem to want confirmation. The letter, however, says that official accounts had been received by Miramon to that effect.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Capture of Garibaldi.—Garibaldi has been the rage of late. He seems to have once more retired within the line of "safe precedents," and left Signor Mazzini to ruminate anew and alone on his extravagant politics. There is no probability that, having got over the intoxication of his wonderful success, Garibaldi will translate himself on French bayonets, or recklessly dash his cranium against the Austrian quadrilateral. What he will do will be bravely to keep what he has, and firmly, yet judiciously, gain more. It is evident that the Pope is as safe at Rome as French troops can make him, and that the Emperor Napoleon is in the way of earning the title of Defensor Fidei.

The Pope to go to Jerusalem.—The idea of installing the Pope in Jerusalem has been broached by the French press. They say that it is no further from Jerusalem to Jaffa than from Rome to its seaport, Civita Vecchia; a railroad would place Jerusalem within one hour of the Mediterranean, and it would be very nearly as convenient for the Catholic world as Rome is now. It would add, also, very much to the advance of Christianity in the East. The French army in Syria can easily take possession of Palestine, if the Sultan should dare to refuse a demand for it; in fact, they say it would be the easiest way to settle the Roman question.

Submarine Telegraph to Africa.—The submarine telegraph between the Island of Minorca and Algiers works admirably, and the portion from Minorca to Toulon is to be laid at once. The Minorca and Algiers cable goes under a portion of the Mediterranean that is said to be two thousand fathoms in depth. That is as deep as any portion of the bed of the Valentia and Newfoundland line.

Remarkable Movement in Persia.—The Vekaia, the official organ of the Court of Teheran, announces that thirty thousand families of a nomadic tribe who have until now subsisted by the sale of their cattle and robbery, have been colonized and settled in villages built at the expense of the Crown, on the right bank of the Lower Araxes, and in the plains of Mogane. The warlike tribe to which they belong, known as the Chahsevene, has for centuries been the terror of the peaceable population of this portion of Persia, and especially merchants, whose caravans they were continually pillaging. Henceforth compelled to confine themselves to agricultural pursuits, they will increase the laboring population of the country by more than one hundred and fifty thousand souls. Their serdar, Aziz Khan, who has aided the Government in the colonization, has been generously recompensed by the Shah. This is but one of the series of reforms which have already crowned the efforts of the young sovereign of Persia. There remain two hundred thousand other families of nomadic tribes in the Persian empire, who sooner or later must be settled and civilized.

To the east of the Jordan there are whole cities beautifully built and adorned with all the beauties of Grecian and Roman art, still standing in desolate majesty, with no inhabitant but the wolf and the hyena.

A couple of fishing vessels have reached the rich fishing ground on the eastern coast of Spitzbergen, sailing through a narrow sound which hitherto has been supposed to afford no outlet.

An expedition has gone in search of Vogel, the Central African traveler, of whom nothing has been heard since June, 1856. Von Henglin is at the head of it.

A bust of Lord Nelson has been discovered in the Acul Mountains, Hayti, where it has been an object of fetish worship as the Deity of the Mountain Streams, for fifty years past. The British did almost as much for the original.

Hobbs, the famous locksmith, is about to return to America.

Sheridan Knowles, the celebrated author, was lost in the steamer Artic, while on a voyage from Hull to Cronstadt.

China advices report the ship Isaac Hell totally wrecked. Her crew were saved.

Seventy towns in Ireland, with from 10,000 to 25,000 inhabitants, each, are without a bookseller. Six whole counties have neither bookseller nor circulating library.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

A Literary Cab Driver.—A prize of £20 for the best essay on the effects of Sunday cabdriving has been won by John Cockram, a London cabdriver. At the meeting at which the prize was awarded, Cockram told his audiences that the essay consisted of 19,000 words, and was all written in the open air, on the top of his cab.

Mrs. Palmer's Works in French.—A translation of Faith and its effects, by Mrs. Palmer, has just appeared in French. This work, as well as The Way of Holiness, published a year ago, was translated by Rev. Wesley Lelievre. The Way of Holiness, previously translated, has determined many a soul to seek that "holiness without which no man can see the Lord."

Lord Brougham Exposed.—Lord Brougham, it is asserted, wrote the critique on Byron's Hours of Idleness, which stung the noble poet into the authorship of English Bards and Scotch Reviewers. The paper has always been attributed to Lord Jeffreys, Brougham meanly allowing to bear the blame which was his due. His mortification at the discovery of this meanness must be intense.

The Life of Julius Cæsar, by Napoleon III, now in the press of Paris, will be republished, immediately on its appearance in England, translated from an advance copy, by Miss Mary S. Booth.

Madame Pfeiffer, the celebrated traveler, has left, in manuscript, an autobiography, and an account of her last voyage to Madagascar, which is about to be published by her son, at Vienna.

Charles Reade, in his new book, The Eighth Commandment, says that Henry Carey, a lyrist and satirist, whose verses were attributed both to Pope and Swift, wrote both the words and music of "God save the Queen;" yet, notwithstanding the popularity of the anthem, poor Carey suffered so much from poverty and destitution that he hanged himself. "They found him cold with only skin on his bones and a half-penny in his pocket. Think of this when you hear God save the Queen."

Sacrificed.—The entire library of the late William E. Burton has been sold at auction, bringing about $15,000!

The premium book of Rev. Dr. Fish, "Primitive Piety Revived," published by the Congregational Board of Pastors, has been translated into the Dutch, and published at Utrecht, in Holland. Twenty thousand copies of it have been printed in England.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

METHODIST.

The Home Work.—We compile the following interesting revival news from our correspondents throughout the Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi Conferences:

North Harpeth Circuit, La. Conf.—Rev. J. E. Bradley reports a prosperous and promising state of things. Ten principal citizens were recently added to Newell church. Dr. Cravens recently dedicated another new church, fully paid for. The services were in power. The good cause is gradually but surely gaining strength.

Richmond, La. Conference.—Rev. Reynolds Trippett writes of a revival in the town of Richmond, which resulted in the addition to the Church of 30 whites and 17 colored; eleven adults and six infants baptized. The gracious work included all classes. The ordinance was especially blessed to the recipients, in the out-pouring of the Holy Spirit.

Oak Bowery, Alabama Conference.—Rev. E. H. Norton has still good news to report. Since his last another meeting at Oak Bowery has been held; ten or twelve converted, and added to the Church. A meeting at another appointment recently, resulted in six converted and added to the church.

Pickens Circuit, Ala. Conf.—Revs. W. Vaughan and J. E. Treadwell report the close of their round of protracted meetings, which have resulted in 127 conversions and additions to the Church on probation, whites, besides many colored. Truly a good work.

Gadsden District, Ala. Conf.—The venerable and Rev. Ebenezer Hearn, P. E., writes that he is closing his year's work. It has been a pleasant and prosperous one. During the last quarter, the increase is not less than 700 persons, mostly in Cherokee county. Not less than 1000 persons have been added to the various Churches during the year in that country. Brother Hearn says, "the Lord be praised." Amen!

Gaston Circuit, Ala. Conf.—Rev. G. Hawkins, who is closing his second year on this charge, writes that 144 persons have joined the Church within the last two months. The Church has been greatly blessed. Rev. H. is sad at leaving his affectionate charge. The Lord send them a good pastor, and make him equally successful, another year.

Buffalo Circuit Miss. Conf.—Rev. J. J. Clark writes that the new church at Macedonia was dedicated by Rev. Mr. W. H. Watkins. He also officiated at the 4th quarterly meeting. Rev. Clarke mentions "five protracted meetings, other regular services, conversions, accessions, and reclamations," and says God knows how much good has been done.

Pauldino Circuit, Miss. Con.—Rev J. W. McNeil since he last wrote, reports the results of three more protracted meeting; a number converted and added to the Church at each. During the year, there have been 174 added to the Church; about 100 conversions, 14 joined by letter. The Church is prosperous.

Revival in a School.—Mr. Benjamin Hart, sr., tutor in a school six miles above Greensburg, La., Miss. Con., reports a gracious revival among his pupils, which commenced in a little prayer-meeting held among the girls. Many have joined the Church, and many have been converted. The meeting was still going on. Blessed be all schools religiously conducted.

EPISCOPAL.

The Episcopal Church in the United States.—According to the Church Almanac for 1860, the Episcopal Church in the United States contains thirty-three dioceses. The number of Bishops, provisional bishops, and assistant bishops, is forty three; priests and deacons, two thousand and thirty; parishes, two thousand one hundred and ten.

The corner-stone of the new building for the Orphans' Home and Asylum of the Protestant Episcopal church of New York, now erecting in 55th street, near Fourth avenue, was laid on the 2d of October, with imposing ceremonies.

The last Virginia Episcopal Convention advised all Christian masters and mistresses to have the infants of their servants baptised and trained in the Church.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Revival in the Sandwich Islands.—Among the latest items of intelligence from the Sandwich Islands is that of a most gracious and extensive revival of religion. The ingathering into the Church has been greater of late than at any period during twenty years last past.

Missionary Ships.—It appears that there are now no less than five missionary ships in the Pacific Ocean. The most recent is the Morning Star. The oldest, as well as the largest, is the John Williams, which has been in service fifteen years.

The Rev. Henri Pargue, late of Montauban, France, has been invited to take charge of a congregation of Swiss and French Protestants in Philadelphia, which for eighteen months past has met for worship in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association.

Mission to the Descendants of the Huguenots in London.—Our English journal announces that the Huguenots now in London, Spitalfields and Soho, England.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

On Thursday, Nov. 1st, at the residence of Alfred Stroud, Esq., Madison parish, La., by Rev. Reynolds Trippett, A.D., TURNER to Miss P. GUEST, all of the above Parish.

On the 25th of October, by Rev. J. D. Adams, Mr. MATTHEW J. HOWMAN to Miss MARY E. GOLDMAN, all of Tensas parish, La.

At the house of Col. Wm. M'Pherson, on the 24th ult., by the Rev. M. C. Summerhue, Mr. J. MOSBY HAMILTON to Miss HARRIET JANET M'PHERSON, of Fayetteville, Talladega co., Alabama.

Southern Advocate please copy.

By Rev. Robert J. Harp, Mr. CHARLES J. HALBROOK to Miss MARTHA J. PRENDERGAST, all of this city.

In Biloxi, Nov. 8th, 1860, by the Rev. Mathew D. Thomason, the Rev. DANIEL M. WADSWORTH of the Mississippi Conference, to Miss MARY S. KIRKE.

RECEIPTS, BY THE POST-OFFICE,

From November 6 to 13th, 1860.

A—C A Abercrombie, $1 60; T Ashcroft, $6.
E—J W Ellis, $10.
H—G Hawkins, $8 45.
J—A R Jones, $10.
L—S A Lindsey, $2.
M—A M'Kinnon, $10; H H May, $1 30.
N—H Norris, $3.
P—R J Pace, $2; J A Proctor, $3 50; M H Pettrey, $4 25.
R—A R Hasey, $2.
W—H Ware, $2.

COMMERCIAL.

MONDAY EVENING, November 12, 1860.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 11th inst:—

We have again to notice only a moderate degree of activity in the general market, during the past week. During the first three days in particular, it moved along languidly in every department, the operations in Cotton, Sugar, Molasses, Tobacco and Western Produce, being all on a limited scale, the stringent condition of monetary affairs, the depressed state of Foreign and Domestic Exchange, and the difficulty of negotiating bills, still preventing any animation. During the past three days, however, although there has been no improvement in money matters and Exchange has been still more depressed, yet buyers have come forwards with greater freedom and under all the circumstances, the sales of our leading staple, in particular, have been active to a fair extent.

COTTON.—We do not make any change in our quotations, but have to observe that the market closes with much firmness, the prices paid latterly being generally nearer to our outside than to the inside figures.

New Orleans Classification:

Inferior	— @ —	Middling	11¼ @ 11½
Ordinary	7½ @ 8¼	Good Middling	12¼ @ 12½
Good Ordinary	9¼ @ 10	Middling Fair	— @ —
Low Middling	10½ @ 10¾	Fair	— @ —

SUGAR.—The sales of the week amount to 1000 hhds. We quote for Inferior and Refining 4 to 4¼; Common to Good Common 5 to 5¾; Fair to Fully Fair 6 to 7; Prime to Choice 7¼ to 8¼; Centrifugal and Clarified 8 to 9 cents per pound. The above quotations apply to round lots, but small orders of 5 hhds and under, could not be filled without paying a further advance of ¼ to ½c per pound.

MOLASSES.—Total receipts of the week 8211 barrels. The prices obtained during the week were: Inferior to Fair, 30 to 31 cents per gallon; and Prime to Choice, 35 to 39 cents; half barrels, 38 to 40 cents per gallon.

GRAIN.—The receipts of Corn continue light. About 13,500 sacks have been sold at from $0 67 to 0 71 for ordinary, and $0 73 for good white. Oats have been in very fair request at 46 to 52c per bushel for good to prime St. Louis.—Bran sells at $1 12½ to $1 20 for ordinary to choice lots. Wheat sells at $1 60 per bushel for prime red.

FLOUR.—About 13,200 bbls have been sold during the past week, from $5 75 to $5 80 for superfine, $6 25 to 6 90 for ordinary to good extra, and $7 25 to $8 00 and $8 50 per bbl. for choice extra brands.

BEEF.—We qpote Prime Mess at $12 50 per bbl. for extra brands.

BACON.—Shoulders 9 to 9½; Ribbed Sides 12½ to 13; Clear Sides 14 to 14½; Sugar-cured Hams 14 to 15½ cents per pound.

BUTTER.—Western generally selling at 10 to 15 cents per pound, according to quality; and Cheese 11 to 12c.

LARD.—We quote 13½ to 14c for prime to choice prime in tes., and 14½ to 14½c. for kegs.

BAGGING and BALE ROPE.—We quote Kentucky Bagging at 11 to 15 cents per yard; India Bagging, 11c. per do. Bale Rope, hand spun, 7½ to 8c, and machine made, 8 to 8½ cents per pound.

COFFEE.—We quote for Rio at 11 to 11½, and prime at 15c per pound.

PORK.—The principal sales reported through the week were at $20 00 to $20 50 per bbl. for Mess.

GUNNY BAGS.—Limited parcels sell at 12 cents for light and 13½ to 14c. to heavy and extra heavy bags.

NAVAL STORES.—The sales of Spirits Turpentine, include about 250 bbls at 38c, and some other lots, mostly resales, in prime shipping order at 37 to 40c per gallon. In Rosin we hear of some 5000 bbls sold at $1 10 to $1 25 and $1 50 for Common to Good No 2, and $2 00 to $2 and $2 25 per bbls for Good to Fine No

Children's Column.

DARK FOREBODINGS; OR, ONE STEP AT A TIME.

The highest of all authority has said, "Take no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." Yet who has not experienced the difficulty of obeying this most merciful command? Who has not felt at times bowed down under an oppressive weight on both heart and spirit, which, when closely examined, is found to consist not so much of the real present burdens of today, as the anticipated ones of to-morrow? It is the shadow of clouds yet distant, that are cast before upon the path. "How," the weary heart will ask, "how am I to face the tempests now gathering in yon darkening horizon? How shall the trial be borne in reality, which even in prospect seems more than I can bear?" Or, if even in prospect seems more than I can bear?" Or, if given in prospect seems more than I can bear?" Or, if without excuse for such dark forebodings, still, "How am I to get through so many duties, resist so many temptations, fulfill so many engagements? How shall one, already wearied in 'running with the footmen,' be able to 'contend with the horses?' If the cares of to-day are so oppressive, poore am I to find strength for those of to-morrow."

There are doubtless some light-hearted, buoyant spirits, and some calm, unimaginative ones, to whom such a state of feeling may be almost unknown. But the greater number of reflecting minds, if they have traveled any length of time "through the wilderness," will but too easily recognise and sympathise with it. And such, if they know the Lord, will also know how suddenly and wonderfully he can throw light upon the darkness, and, by perhaps trifling instruments, fulfill His own promise, and "sustain" under the burdens which a weak and trembling faith has sought to bring to his feet.

It was under the influence of feelings such as I have described, that I set out on a country walk one summer morning. I knew by experience the reviving effects of fresh air and exercise, of the sweet sights and sounds of nature; but that day they were all powerless to cheer, and I could but adopt the poet's despending language—

I may not hope from outward forms to win
The spirit and the life; whose fountains are within.

I had as a companion a gentle child, whose lively prattle I was accustomed on such occasions to encourage—This morning the effort seemed impossible. I was abstracted and silent; and my young friend, after a few vain attempts at sociability, amused herself by silently gathering flowers, and chasing the butterflies of the wayside. In order to take a circuit home, it was necessary to cross a stream, which, though shallow, was of considerable breadth. There was no bridge, and the water, deepened by late rains, now dashed noisily against the stepping stones, and in some cases almost covered them. I began abstractedly to cross over, till I perceived that my young companion stood still on the side I had left, evidently fearing to follow.

"What, Jane! why are you not coming?"

"Oh, aunt, I dare not; I am afraid."

"Afraid! do you not see how firm the stones are?"

"Oh! there are so many; and the water is so deep! I shall never get over. I cannot, I dare not!" and the poor little thing, naturally timid, now burst into tears.

I passed rapidly to thn other side, and then returned to her. "Come, silly child," I said, half angry, half amused, "do not be so foolish; you see how easily I have done it. I am not telling you to leap over the whole at once."

"Oh, aunt, who could do that!"

"Well, neither you nor I have to do it. We have only to take one step at a time; and you are not even alone; nor would the water drown you, if you were to slip.—Come, here is my hand; you will find each stone in itself quite firm, as you stand upon it."

Trembling and weeping, yet fearing lo disobey, she began the perilous passage. The first few steps were the worst. Her courage rose when they were over, and at last we both stood safely on the opposite bank. Little Jane sank down on the grass, as if to recover from her agitation. I seated myself beside her, and for some minutes neither of us spoke. At last she said—

"Aunt, you were quite right; one step at a time was not difficult."

"Yes, my dear," I replied, "and remember that in your future life, when you have more difficult undertakings to get through than crossing the Avon."

The words of the child, and my almost involuntary answer, went at once to my own heart. "Oh!" I thought, "is not this a lesson for myself? Have not I been sinking under the anticipation of to-morrow's burdens, instead of simply attending to the duties of to-day? Have not I been looking to the stormy waters, rather than to the Saviour who walks upon their waves? Where is my confidence in the wisdom that cannot err, the love that cannot deal unkindly, the strength that is made perfect in weakness? Lord, pardon thy sinful servant; and, as regards the future, let this henceforth be my only prayer, thy pardon, that my footsteps may, Hold up my goings in thy paths, that my footsteps may, Hold up my goings in

The spell of despondency was broken, the clouds dispelled. Little Jane and I both talked cheerfully as we walked home together; and often, since that day, has the remembrance of the lord on the Avon acted as a reproof and a charm, when fears and forebodings have again assailed my faithless heart. "One step at a time," as I commenced the first duties of a new day. And faith and hope, though too feebly in exercise, have never been disappointed. "The thing that I greatly feared" has often not "come upon me," or, if it has, there have been with it alleviations and comfort such as I could not have foreseen or imagined. The tasks which at a distance seemed overwhelming, patient and prayerful effort has been enabled steadily to infill. Never has the promise failed, "As thy day, so shall thy strength be."—Family Treasury.

A DREAM, A FACT, AND A MIRACLE.

The following story is related by the Madison (Wisconsin) State Journal. We give it to the readers of the New Orleans Christian Advocate. The writer says he is well acquainted with the person who was the subject of the remarkable experience given below, having known him personally for the last twelve years; and though he has not met him since his singular relief from a congenital defect, has the particulars from persons in every way entitled to credit, who have seen him and received the story from his own lips. He says: Leaving our readers to determine for themselves how far the intervention of a miraculous aid may have contributed in this matter, and how far it was the result of mere natural or ordinary agencies, we give the story as it was told us:—

The person in question is a gentleman residing in Beloit in this State. From his birth he has suffered from lameness. The difficulty was in his right hip, the joint seeming to be out of place. His right leg was in consequence, shorter than the other. It was shrunken and very weak; he always wore a boot with a thick sole upon it, and limped badly when he walked. In going up stairs he was obliged to step up one stair at a time with his well leg, and bring the other up to it, instead of putting it forward to the next, as persons usually go up stairs. When fatigued he was accustomed to feel great pain in his hip.

Some two or three months ago he was in Chicago attending to some business matters which kept him for several weeks. He is a professor of religion, and while there attended a series of religious meetings, becoming very deeply interested in the subject. On Saturday, suffering from severe pain in his hip, he called upon a surgeon to have it examined and to ascertain whether something could not be done to alleviate the pain. Some interruption occurred, however, so that the examination was postponed, until the following Monday. That night, after going to bed, the pain continuing, it occurred to him whether or not, if he asked in the proper spirit, some Divine assistance might not be vouchsafed, as in the old time, when the prophets and apostles walked on earth. He arose from his bed, procured a light, and, taking his Bible, opened by chance to a chapter in the New Testament where Christ miraculously cures a lame man.

After reading it, he proceeded to invoke, in an earnest prayer, some similar intervention in his own behalf, and then feeling greatly cheered and supported by trust in the Divine beneficence, he again retired to rest, and soon fell asleep. During the night he dreamed that Christ came to him accompanied by a surgeon—the same upon whom he had called during the day. The surgeon examined his hip, and told him it could be relieved, but only by an operation. To this he raised an objection, desiring that it should be postponed; but the surgeon seemed suddenly to arise and overpower him, and with some instrument laid open his hip to the bone, and arranged the joint in its proper place. During the operation he had the impression of suffering a severe physical pain, as if really under the knife of a surgeon. After it, he had no further remembrance of anything until morning.

Upon rising, he found to his utter astonishment, not only that this short leg was lengthened out so as to be even with the other, and his hip all right, but that he could walk without limping or inconvenience. He walked about the room several times, then put on his clothes and ran up and down stairs to assure himself that he was awake and no longer a lame man, but sound and whole. His joy and gratitude cannot well be described. He immediately discarded the boot with the false sole, which had hitherto been a necessity, and put on a pair that were mates. His leg was yet weak, though limping slightly from long habit, he could walk as straight as any other man when he chose. It has since grown stronger, and his general health very materially improved.—He, of course, considers the cure a direct answer to his supplications.

THE LADY AND THE ROBBER.

In a large lone house, situated in the south of England, there once lived a lady and her two maid-servants. They were far away from any human habitations, but they seem to have felt no fear, and to have dwelt there peacefully and happily. It was the lady's custom to go round the house with her maids every evening to see that all the windows and doors were properly secured. One night she had accompanied them as usual, and ascertained that all was safe. They left her in the passage, close to her room, and then went to their own, which was quite at the other side of the house. As the lady opened her door, she distinctly saw a man under her bed. What could she do? Her servants were far away, and could not hear if she screamed for help; and even if they had come to her assistance, these three weak women were no match for a desperate house-breaker. How, then, did she act? She trusted in God. Quietly she closed the door, and locked it on the inside, which she was always in the habit of doing. She then leisurely brushed her hair, and putting on her dressing-gown, she took her Bible and sat down and read. She read aloud, and chose a chapter which had peculiar reference to God's watchfulness over us, and particular care of us by night and by day. When it was finished, she knelt and prayed at great length, still uttering her words aloud, especially commending herself and servants to God's protection, and dwelling upon their utter helplessness and dependence upon him to preserve her from all dangers. At last she arose from her knees, put out her candle, and lay down in bed; but she did not sleep. After a few minutes had elapsed, she was conscious the man was standing by her bedside. He addressed her, and begged her not to be alarmed. "I came here," said he "to rob you, but after the words you have read, and the prayer you have uttered, no power on earth could induce me to hurt you, or to touch a thing in your house. But, you must remain perfectly quiet, and not attempt to interfere with me. I shall now give a signal to my companions, which they will understand, and then they will go away, and you may sleep in peace, for I give you my solemn word that no one shall harm you, and not the smallest thing belonging to you shall be disturbed." He then went to the window, opened it, and whistled softly. Returning to the lady's side, (who had not spoken nor moved,) he said: "Now I am going. Your prayer has been heard, and no disaster will befall you." He left the room, and soon all was quiet, and the lady fell asleep, still upheld by that calm and beautiful faith and trust. When the morning dawned, and she awoke, we may feel sure that she poured out her thanksgivings and praises to him who had "defended" her under "his wings," and "kept" her "safe under his feathers," so that she was not afraid of any terror by night. The man proved true to his word, and not a thing in the house had been taken. Oh! shall we not hope that his heart was changed from that day forth, and that he forsook his evil courses, and cried to that Savior, "who came to seek and to save that which was lost," and, even on the cross, did not reject the penitent thief? From this true story let us learn to put our whole trust and confidence in God. This lady's courage was indeed wonderful; but "the Lord was her defence upon her right hand," and with him all things are possible."—Monthly Packet, for October.

We have received an extract from a letter fully corroborating the remarkable anecdote of "The Lady and the Robber," in our October number, and adding some facts that enhanced the wonder and mercy of her escape. We quote the words of the letter: "In the first place, the robber told her, if she had given the slightest alarm or token of resistance, he was fully determined to murder her; so that it was really God's good guidance that told her to follow the course she did. Then, before he went away, he said: 'I never heard such words before; must have the book you read out of,' and carried off her Bible, willingly enough given, you may be sure. This happened many years ago, and only comparatively recently did the lady hear any more of him. She was attending a religious meeting in Yorkshire, where, after several noted clergymen and others had spoken, a man arose, stating that he was employed as one of the book-hawkers of the society, and told the story of the midnight adventure, as a testimony to the wonderful power of the Word of God. He concluded with—'I was that man.' The lady arose from her seat in the hall, and said, quietly, 'It is all quite true; I was the lady,' and sat down again."—Monthly Packet, for December.

ROVER AND HIS LITTLE MASTER.

"Come, Rover!" said Harry, as he passed a fine old Newfoundland dog that lay on a mat at the door; come, Rover! I am going down to the river to sail my boat, and I want you to go with me."

Rover opened his large eyes, and looked lazily at his master.

"Come! Rover! Rover!

But the dog didn't care to move, and so Harry went off to the river-side alone. He had been gone a great while before a thought of her boy came suddenly into the mother's mind. Remembering that he had a little vessel, and that the river was near, it occurred to her that he might have gone there.

Instantly her heart began to throb with alarm.

"Is Harry with you?" she called up to Harry's father, who was in his study. But Harry's father said he was not there.

"I'm afraid he's gone to the river with his boat," said the mother.

"To the river?" And Mr. Lee dropped his pen, and came quickly down. Taking up his hat, he went hurriedly from the house. Rover was still lying upon the mat, with his head upon his paws and his eyes shut.

"Rover!" said his master, in a quick, excited voice, "Where is Harry? Has he gone to the river! Away and see! quick!"

The dog must have understood every word, for he sprang eagerly to his feet, and rushed toward the river. Mr. Lee followed as fast as he could run. When he reached the river-bank, he saw his little boy in the water, with Rover dragging him toward the shore. He was not fully dead, but was the half-drowned child in his arms.

Harry, who remained insensible, was put to bed. He soon, however, revived, and in an hour or two was running about again. But after this, Rover would never leave the side of his little master when he wandered beyond the garden-gate. Wherever you found Harry, there Rover was sure to be—sometimes walking by his side, and sometimes lying on the grass, with his big eyes watching every movement.

Once Harry found his little vessel, which had been hidden away since he went with it to the river, and without his mother's seeing him, he started again for the water.—Rover, as usual, was with him. On his way to the river, he saw some flowers, and in order to gather them, put his boat down upon the grass. Instantly Rover picked it up in his mouth, and walked back toward the house with it. After going a little way, he stopped, looked around, and waited until Harry had got his hand full of flowers. The child then saw that Rover had his boat, and tried to get it from him; but Rover played around him, always keeping out of his reach, and retreating towards the house, until he got back within the gate. Then he bounded into the house, and laid the boat at the feet of Harry's mother.

Harry was a little angry with the good old dog, at first, but when his mother explained to him what Rover meant, he hugged him around the neck, and said he would never go down to the river any more.

Harry is a man now, and Rover has long since been dead; but he often thinks of the dear old dog that saved him from drowning when he was a child; and it gives him great pleasure to remember that he never beat Rover, as some boys beat their dogs when they are angry, and was never unkind to him. Had it been otherwise, the thought would have given him great pain.

TWO NOBLE BOYS.

A correspondent of The Independent in St. Louis, Missouri, communicates the following story as strictly true:

A few evenings since, two little boys about five years old, were walking together along one of the fashionable streets of our city. As they were passing a private residence they stopped, attracted by the roses and honeysuckles that filled the small front yard with fragrance and beauty.

After looking for some minutes silently and wistfully, the following dialogue took place:

Freddy.—"O what beautiful flowers!"

Willie.—"How I wish we had some of them."

Freddy.—"But it would be wrong to take them."

Willie.—"There are so many of them, and they are so pretty. Do you think it would be wrong to take just one?"

Freddy.—"Yes; it would be very wicked."

Willie.—"Yes, it would so; come, let's go away."

During all this time Mrs. B——, the lady of the house, was standing, unseen by the boys, looking through the closed blinds, and attentively listening to the conversation. When the last remark was made, she threw open the blinds, her eyes brimming with tears, and cried out:

"You dear noble boys, come here, and you shall have every flower in the yard. Beautiful as are the flowers, they are not to be compared to the beauty of your honest hearts. Your mothers should be proud of you, and you of them. If either of you should ever be President of the United States, as I wish you both may be, may you never forget how you resisted this temptation." And she literally stripped every rose and honeysuckle from the bushes, and sent the boys away with their arms full of flowers, and with a thousand blessings on their heads.

A SABBATH-SCHOOL INCIDENT.

At a meeting in Exeter Hall, London, where there was a vast number of Sabbath School children assembled, a clergyman arose on the platform, and told them of two bad little boys whom he had once known, and of a good little girl whom he afterwards learned to know. This little girl had been to Sabbath School, where she had learned "to do good every day." Seeing two little boys quarrelling, she went up to them, told them how wickedly they were acting, made them desist from quarrelling, and in the end, induced them to attend Sunday School. These boys were Jim and Tom. "Now, children," said the gentleman, "would you like to see Jim?"

All shouted with one voice, "Yes! yes!"

"Jim, get up!" said the gentleman, looking over to another part of the stage. A reverend-looking missionary arose and looked sullingly upon the children.

"Now would you like to see Tom?"

"Yes! yes!" resounded through all the house.

"Well, look at me—I am Tom, and I too have been a missionary for many years. Now, would you like to see little Mary Wood?"

The response was even more loud and earnest than before, "Yes!"

"Well, do you see that lady over there in the blue silk bonnet?—that is little Mary Wood, and she is my wife!"

POWER OF A BIRD'S SONG.—When we hear the song of a soaring lark, we may be sure that the entire atmosphere between us and the bird is filled with pulses or undulations, or waves, as they are often called, produced by the little songster's organ of voice. This organ is a vibrating instrument, resembling in principle the reed of a clarionet. Let us suppose we hear the song of a lark elevated to a height of five hundred feet in the air. Before this is possible the bird must have agitated a sphere of air one thousand feet in diameter—that is to say, it must have communicated to 17,868 tons of air a motion sufficiently intense to be appreciated by our organs of hearing.

NOVEMBER.

BY MRS. S. K. PUTNAM.

Fast o'er my window pares
Thy tears and sobs are breaking, O, November!
Now loud and fearful strains
Ending in plaintive moans subdued and tender.

Out through the starless night
The grieving winds with wandering feet are straying;
Sad funeral requiems
In concert wild their shuttered lyres are playing.

O, angel of decay,
With wearied, drooping wing, still thou art flying
To shroud sweet summer's couch
Where beauty laid her golden head when dying.

It was but yesterday
The breeze came laden with the breath of flowers,
And all the hills and vales
Rang with the joyous songs of sunny hours.

The zephyrs sighing sweet
Through the young foliage crept with soft caresses,
And the tall, grand old trees
Above us waved their bright green sheltering tresses.

Among their rich perfumes
The deep-voiced winds lay hushed to dream-like sleeping,
That now like changeful friend
Leads forth the wrathful storms above them sweeping.

Yet June again will come,
All things to clothe with beautiful creation,
And earth, rejeweled, wear
A lovelier crown for this her desolation.

Not so the rifled heart;
One season only o'er hath it of roses,
The fragrant bloom of youth,
Where innocence in trust and hope reposes.

So delicate and true,
Ill shadowings of looks and thoughts unspoken,
Alike with rader blasts
Of scorn and hate may leave them pale and broken.

The autumn of the heart,
Ah, who may tell the struggles long and dreary
Its early flowers to save
Ere from the contest tinuing fatal and weary,

If all unblessed to feel
The bitter weeds of cold distrust upspringing,
And notes of sad complaint
Where melodies untaught were light and ringing!

Life's but a fitful year,
And joys go down behind the clouds of sorrow;
Yet to the last may gleam
Some wayside blossom for each coming morrow.

Patience and charity
May yield their goodly fruitage ripe and tender,
On which the soul may thrive
Amid the shadows of the heart's November.

LOUIS NAPOLEON AND HIS MOTHER.

A beautiful episode in the history of these exciting times occurred soon after the accession of Casmir Perier to power. A lady of rank suddenly appeared in Paris, though interdicted by law all entrance into France. She had just fled from Italy, where her eldest son had recently died, and whence she had brought her second one, though sick, to Paris. She immediately requested her old acquaintance, Count d'Heudetot, the king's aid-de-camp, to make known her visit and circumstances to the King. Louis Philippe immediately received her privately at the Palais Royal, in the little room occupied by the Count. At the same time she was visited by the Queen and Madame Adelaide, by the King's order. The interview was lengthy though the place was ill adapted to it. The room contained but two chairs, a bed, and a table. The Queen and the refugee lady sat on the bed; the King and Madame Adelaide occupied the two chairs; Count d'Hontetot leaned against the door, to prevent entrance. The King and Queen assured the visitor of their most hearty interest and good feeling; whereupon she desired authority to enter France, at least so as to visit the baths of Vieley. That request he granted without the slightest hesitancy. She then made pecuniary demands upon the French Government. The King promised her every assistance in his power. "But," said he, "I am a constitutional king; I must inform my Prime Minister of your arrival and wishes." He then went away, and after a short interview with M. Casmir Perier, returned with him to the little chamber. They entered, but not without signs of trepidation in the petitioner. She said: "I know, sir, that I have violated a law; you have the right to arrest me; it would be just to do so." "It would be lawful, Madame, but not just." A noble answer from that noble man. After a few moments in her presence, he proffered whatever pecuniary aid she might desire; but she declined the assistance from him. Next month the columns of Vive l'Empereur were filled with an outbreak about that a Bonaparte Prince had been seen there. M. Casmir Perier soon after called on the lady fugitive, and informed her of the necessity of her speedy departure. She immediately set out with her son for England. "Thus commenced, under the ministry of M. Casmir Perier, that series of acts by which King Louis Philippe and his government, for the space of eighteen years, testified their respect and interest in the name, memory, and family of Napoleon." That fugitive was the talented, unfortunate, erring, and divorced Hortense Bonaparte. Her boy sits this hour on the throne of Louis Philippe, and is doing more for the development of his country than any of his Bourbon predecessors. We do not hold it as a trivial souvenir that the only time we ever saw Louis Napoleon was when he rode in Imperial power through the Rue de la Paix, near the very spot where it is said he was seen and cheered by a little crowd just twenty-eight years before. The event drove him and his mother still further on their wanderings—a type of the flight, the English exile, and the final home of Louis Philippe himself.—Paris Correspondent of N. Y. Methodist.

BODY OF A LOVER RECOGNIZED AFTER FORTY YEARS' BURIAL.

The following incident, related in Frazier's Magazine, contrasts strangely the instability of the living with the unchangeableness of the dead. It is a sad picture, but the radiance of undying love makes it beautiful even in its sadness:

A few years since certain miners who were working far under ground came upon the body of a poor fellow who had perished in the suffocating pit forty years before. Some chemical agent to which the body had been subjected—as agent prepared in the laboratory of nature—had effectually arrested the progress of decay. They brought it to the surface, and for a while, till it crumbled away through exposure to the atmosphere, it lay there the image of a fine, sturdy young man. No convulsion had passed over the face in death—the features were tranquil, the hair was black as jet. No one recognized the face; a generation had grown since the day on which the miner went down for the last time.

But a tottering old woman, who had hurried from her cot on hearing the news, came up, and she knew again the face which through all these years she had never quite forgot. The poor miner was to have been her husband the day after that on which he died. They were rough people, of course, who were looking on—a liberal education and refined feelings are not deemed essential to the man whose work is to get up coal or even tin—but there were no dry eyes when the gray headed pilgrim cast herself upon the youthful corpse and poured out to its deaf ears many words of endearment unused for forty years. It was a touching contrast—the one so old, the other so young. They had both been young those long years ago, but time had gone on with the living and stood still with the dead.

AUTUMN.

When Nature wears her russet gown,
And swallows to the south have flown—
When grapes turn purple on the wall,
And from the boughs the ripe pears fall—
When lambs and sheep grow thick with wool,
Then Autumn's lap with fruit is full.

When corn is gathered in the barn,
And reeds are rattling in the barn—
When partridges in coveys fly,
And dogs and men are company—
When squirrels fill their nutty store,
Then Autumn's store with frost is hoar.

When sleep-mice hide their shock fat forms,
And deep in earth bore ringed worms—
When leaves come rustling down from trees,
And flies the cattle cease to tease,
Then oak his sturdy arms doth bare
To battle with the autumn air.

When silent robins beg for crumbs,
And old men fumble with their thumbs—
When lires shew again in halls,
And bats hook on to dark warm walls,
Then cold wind whistles o'er the moor,
And Autumn shuts the summer door.

GARIBALDI.

Garibaldi, the hero of Italy, is of the lineage of a king. Albert, the King of his family, died a prisoner in the debtor's jail of London. An article in a German paper says that in the marriage register of the church of the parish of Ruggeberg, in the county of Mark, in Westphalia, has been found the following entry: "D. Joseph Bartiste Marie Garibaldi and Catharine Amelia Von Neuhof, married on the 15th of August, 1736." Namely, when in 1736, our celebrated countryman, Theodore Von Neuhof ascended the throne of Corsica as Theodore I., he sent a spirited Genoese of the name of D. J. B. M. Garibaldi, to his old mother, who lived upon this country seat, Peddenoh, not far from Ruddeberg. Here the ancestor of the celebrated Gen. Garibaldi married the sister of King Theodore, and went with her the same year to Ajaccio. After Corsica had been retaken by the Genoese in 1741, King Theodore fled to England, whilst Dr. Garibaldi, with his family went to Nice, where he lived a long and prosperous life, as physician. His descendant is the hero of our age, in whose veins thus Germen blood flows.

EDUCATIONAL.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.—THE next term of this Institution will open on Monday, the first of October, 1860.

FACULTY.

REV. JOHN C. MILLER, M.A., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
REV. W. H. SCALES, M.A., Professor of Mathematics.
REV. JOHN J. WHEAT, M.A., Professor of Greek.
GEORGE H. WILEY, M.A., Professor of Latin.
A. R. HOLCOMBE, M.A., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. J. E. SUNDSTROM, M.A., Professor of Modern Languages.
REV. A. G. MILLER, M.A. } Principals of Preparatory Department.
WM. N. POTTER, M.A. }
R. D. NORWORTHY, M.A., Tutor.
LEWIS FITZHUGH, Tutor.

Tuition per Session of five months, payable in advance.
In Preparatory Department.....$21 50
In College Department.....30 50
Matriculation Fee on entering College Department.....5 00
Hi-lo, extra.

Board can be obtained at the Steward's Hall, or in private families at prices varying from ten to fifteen dollars per month. This institution having an able Faculty, extensive buildings, large library, cabinet and apparatus, commends itself to all desiring a thorough classical or scientific education.

Centenary College is located at Jackson, La., twelve miles East of Bayou Sara.

For information apply to Rev. C. C. Gillespie, No. 112 Camp street, Rev. John C. Keener, New Orleans, or to the undersigned, Jackson, La.

JOHN C. MILLER President.
Aug. 5, 1860. 1y

STATE FEMALE COLLEGE, NEAR MEMPHIS, TENN. The fifth semi-annual session of this Institution will commence on Wednesday, Sept. 12, 1860, under the supervision of the Rev. C. Collins, D.D., assisted by an efficient corps of teachers.

In selecting a President, Dr. Collins was our first choice. He is emphatically a professional teacher. To his profession he has devoted the flower of his youth, and the full maturity of his manhood. He comes to us incurred by the best of all references—twenty-three years of successful experience at the head of Colleges of the highest grade; he comes indorsed as just the man for the place, by such Southern men as Bishop Andrew, Bishop Paine, Bishop Early, Rev. J. B. McFerrin, D.D., Rev. Dr. Rivers, President of the Western University, Florence, Ala., Rev. Dr. Keener, P.E. of the New Orleans District, La.

People of the South, the State Female College has claims upon you of no ordinary character. Its beautiful and healthful location in the midst of a community noted for its refined and christian character; its admirably arranged and neatly furnished Boarding House; together with its experienced and skillful Faculty, present such an imposing array of advantages as justly entitle it to be styled a "School of the highest grade and a delightful home."

All the principal rooms were present at the recent Examination; and all as far as we can learn, were delighted with the school and all its arrangements.

During the past year there were two hundred and twenty in attendance.

Parents may rest assured that the Boarding House will be conducted in the best style.

Catalogues containing full information may be obtained by applying to E. COLLINS, President, or at the Book Depository, South side of Court square, Memphis, Tenn.

S. WATSON, Pres.,
W. K. POSTON, Sec.
Board of Trustees.
Aug. 13, 1860.

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, BROOKHAVEN, Lawrence county, Mississippi. Rev. J. P. LEE, A.M., President, assisted by competent teachers.

The Exercises of the Second Collegiate Year will begin September 12th, 1860, and end June 19th, 1861. Friday, June 14th, Annual Examination begins.

Sunday, June 16th, Commencement Sermon.—17th and 18th, Examinations are continued. Night Concert.—Wednesday, June 19th, Commencement Day.

For further particulars apply to
Rev. J. FELEE, President and Secretary,
Rev. M. J. WHITWORTH, Proprietor.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.—The Exercises of the Institute will be resumed on Wednesday, 15th inst. As the number of Pupils is necessarily limited, those who wish to secure places will do well to apply as early as practicable.

W. H. S. MAGRUDER
Aug. 5, 1860.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, CORNER OF Camp and Common streets, entrance No. 80 Common street,—established in 1856,—open day and evening the entire year.

A full course of instruction in this institution embraces Double Entry Book-keeping, Commercial Calculation and Commercial Law, and Penmanship. Gentlemen can enter for the full course, or any branch they desire, and at any time, as there is no class system, no copying from books, and no memorizing of arbitrary rules.

Merchants, Book keepers, and young gentlemen wishing instruction, are respectfully requested to call and examine our practical forms and peculiar manner of teaching.

For catalogues containing full information, and Balance-sheet Circulars, the most magnificent work of the kind ever executed in the United States, address,

GEO. SOULE, New Orleans.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE.—The Twenty-Third annual Session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, OCTOBER 1st, under the superintendence of the following corps of instructors:

Rev. J. M. Bonnell, President, and Professor of Modern Science, Rhetoric, &c.
Rev. C. W. Smith, Professor of Mathematics.
Rev. F. H. Forster, Professor of Ancient Languages.
Rev. W. C. Hare Professor of Natural Sciences.
C. Schwartz, Professor of Modern Languages and Painting.
Miss M. E. Carleton, Assistant in Academical Department.
Miss C. M. Semple, Assistant in Primary Department.
P. G. Guttenberger, Senior Professor of Music.
W. S. H. Matthews, Junior do. do.
Miss L. Guttenberger, and Miss M. A. Matthews, Assistants in Music.
Mrs. S. Schwartz, Teacher of Ornamental Branches.

Board will meet the annual expenses of a Student for board and Tuition, if no extra studies be taken. The expense of furnishing a room varies from $5 to $12.

In addition to the regular College classes, there will be henceforth Lectures on Phonography, all under the charge of Mr. Schwartz, the Accountant of the Faculty; on all of these, admission to the President, or to

W. C. RASS, Secretary.
Macon, Georgia, Aug. 21, 1860. 1 01

BASCOM FEMALE SEMINARY, Grenada, Miss. This Institution, with a neat Boarding Department, and superior educational facilities will commence its next Session, Sept. 24th 1860.

Rev. S. D. OGBURN, President
Aug. 28, 1860.

The Male Department of Centenary Institute, SUMMERVILLE, Dallas county, Ala., will re-open first Monday in October next, under its former Principal,

The Rev. D. C. B. CONNELLY, M.A.,

Assisted by Major F. H. Hopkins, Rev. Hardin Brown, M.A., and J. J. Guest, M.A. These gentlemen are all experienced in Teaching. The prospects of Centenary were never so bright. Young men will be carefully and thoroughly prepared for the Junior Class of our best Colleges. Our village is unparalleled in its social and religious advantages.

For further particulars, apply by letter to the Principal.

D. C. B. CONNELLY,
Summerfield, Ala.
Sept. 18, 1860. 4t*

PROFESSIONAL.

R. M. TEVIS. G. F. FLY.

TEVIS & FLY, Lawyers and Land Agents, Hallettsville, Lavaca county, Texas, will practice their profession in the counties of Lavaca, Gonzales, Dewitt, Victoria, Calhoun, Jackson, Colorado, Fayette, Caldwell, and Guadalupe, and in the Supreme Court at Galveston and Austin.

Special attention will be given to the collection of foreign debts in the Federal Courts held at Galveston and Austin, to the investigation and quieting of land-titles, paying taxes, and buying and selling lands in any portion of Western Texas.

REFERENCES.

E. C. Estes, New York City.
Henderson, Terry and Co., New Orleans.
T. H. McMahon and Gilbert, Galveston, Texas.
H. Ayres, Galveston, Texas.
Rev. James C. Wilson, Texas Conference.
Rev. A. Harrison, Texas Conference.
Rev. Wm. H. Seat, Texas Conference.
Hon. O. S. Singleton, M. C. from Mississippi.
Rev. L. D. Gillespie, Editor New Orleans Christian Advocate.
May 16, 1860.

JAMES J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Galveston, Alcalde., will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties. [aug24]

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY - AT - LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Barnes and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta.....Baton Rouge.

FUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Clinton, Louisiana, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, and East Baton Rouge.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., W. and C. Letchford and Co., Broadwell & Haynes, and Pritchard & Flower, New Orleans. mar 7-1y

W. P. WINANS. J. T. HEATH.
WINANS & HEATH, ATTORNEYS AND COUNsellors at Law, Shreveport, La. Office—Market street.
Will practise in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO, ATTORNEY - AT - LAW, Harrisonburg, La., will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

W. A. BROADWELL. A. P. HAYNES.
BROADWELL & HAYNES, COMMISSION MERchants (formerly Broadwell & Payne), No 40 Union street, N. O. Having retired from business, I take great pleasure in soliciting for my former partners, BROADWELL & HAYNES, the patronage and confidence of my friends, believing their experience, capacity and means, will merit its continuance, and enable them to give general satisfaction. [jly1] M. U. PAYNE.

W. A. STUART. DR. D. A. JAMES. L. H. GARDNER,
New Orleans. Madison Parish, La. New Orleans.
STUART & JAMES, NO. 42 UNION STREET, New Orleans, have associated themselves together for the purpose of conducting a COTTON FACTORAGE & GENERAL COMMISSION BUSINESS; are prepared to make the usual Advances to planters, in the way of supplies, etc., and respectfully solicit patronage

A. H. MAY & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No 94 Gravier street, New Orleans. may1y

J. C. PAYNE J. P. HARRISON,
A. W. HUNTINGTON. WM. A. HARRISON
PAYNE & HARRISON, COMMISSION MERCHANTS No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

LEONARD PARK. P. S. LAURANS.
LEONARD PARK & CO COMMISSION MERchants, and Dealers in Western Produce, 61 Magazine street, New Orleans. Oct 24.

JOHN F. WYCHE & CO., COTTON FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No 116 Common street, New Orleans.

JOS. W. CARROLL. W. B. KIMBALL.
JAS. HAY. J. N. SIVEN.
CARROLL, HAY and Co., Cotton Factors, No. 38 Perdido street, "Factors Row," New Orleans.
July 10, 1860. 12 m's

MOORE & BROWDER, Successors to Moore and Vancelin, COMMISSION MERCHANTS, and COTTON FACTORS, No. 44 Carondelet street, New Orleans.
uly 16, 1860.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CUDDY, BROWN & CO.—HAVING CLOSED THE office of MILES OWEN & CO., the first day of January, 1857, my business connections in future in this city will be with Messrs. Cuddy, Brown & Co., 88 Camp street. MILES OWEN

BLOOMFIELD'S PRINTING AND BOOK-BINDING Establishment, No. 46 Camp street, corner of Gravier.
All kinds of BOOK AND MERCANTILE PRINTING AND BINDING executed neatly and correctly, at moderate prices.
dec 26 1y WM. BLOOMFIELD, Jr.

L. SAWYER, DEALER IN WOODEN-WARE, Paper, Brooms, Matches, Cordage, Twines, Scales; and DRAKE'S CELEBRATED BALANCES for Weighing Cotton, Sugar and Tobacco., No. 60 MAGAZINE STREET New Orleans. ap20

J. H. KELLEH, SOAP MANUFACTORY, CORNER of Howard and St Andrew streets, New Orleans.
☞ A good supply constantly on hand, and all orders promptly filled.

PRINTERS' ROLLERS.—T. BEAULIEU IS READY cast Printers' Rollers of the best quality, upon reception of orders either from city or country, at short notice. It is just as foolish for each pressman to cast his own rollers as it is for each man to make his own shirt. Work warranted to be of the best kind.

Address, T BEAULIEU,
oct19 Office of the Christian Advocate, 112 Camp st., New Orleans.

PH. P. WERLEIN, PUBLISHER AND DEALER in SHEET MUSIC and MUSIC BOOKS. Dealers will be supplied at the regular Board of Trade prices. The PIANO FORTES are of the best manufacture, and sold at Eastern prices. MELODEONS of the celebrated George A. Prince & Co., "the best in the world," (Home Journal,) at wholesale and retail. PIANOS, VIOLINS, GUITARS, and all other instruments tuned and repaired.
Call at the Music Store, No. 5 Camp street. PH. P. WERLEIN

ISAAC T. HINTON, BOOK AND JOB PRINTER, 27 Commercial Place, New Orleans, executes with neatness, Pamphlets, Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Labels, Bills Lading, Checks, and every description of Plain and Fancy Printing.

FASHIONABLE CLOTHING.—T. H. JACKSON & CO. No. 82 Common street, keeps supplied by frequent arrivals from New York, a well assorted stock of CLOTHING and Gents' FURNISHING GOODS of every description, which we will sell low for cash.—Also a good assortment of TRUNKS, CARPET BAGS, VALICES, SILK and GINGHAM UMBRELLAS, &c., &c.
All goods reasonable terms. T. H. JACKSON & Co.,
jan 61 No. 82 Common street, 2 doors from Camp street

R. A. STEWART'S NEW PROCESS FOR DEFEcating and Clarifying Cane Juice, Syrup, Molasses, and other Saccharine matter.
Planters wishing to use this Process can obtain the right to do so by calling on or addressing STUART & JAMES, No 42 Union st New Orleans, where samples of the Sugar may be seen. [au31]
R. A. STEWART.

PHAVILLARD, COAL MERCHANT, 28 EXCHANGE Place, (opposite the Post office. Those desirous of purchasing Co

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 47.
WHOLE NUMBER 503.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1860.

$3 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE
OFFICE—113 CAMP ST.

PASTORAL INEFFICIENCY.

MR. EDITOR: Some weeks since your noble co-laborer of the Nashville Christian Advocate wrote, as I thought, a very judicious and well-timed article on our pastoral inefficiency, quoting also some excellent remarks from Bishop Early. The editorial and the episcopal address both assumed that there was ground for complaint and room for improvement in this aspect of our ministerial character. Besides, in some twenty or more episcopal addresses, in as many years that I have been privileged to hear, I have always heard this duty insisted upon, and more than intimations given that we were losing valuable people to our communion, because as ministers we were not sufficiently diligent and vigilant in this department of our work. All of these taken together I have regarded as more than "some snivelling complainers," and as deserving respectful consideration. Admitting the truth of the episcopal and the editorial statements, which I hardly thought modest or charitable to brand as "false assumptions" and "total disregard of facts," at the same time affirming, as I thought I could truthfully do, that no class of ministers were more spiritual, or self-sacrificing than Methodist Itinerants—that the reason for the pastoral inefficiency must be somewhere else rather than in the men. I concluded it must be in the system. So thinking, I proceeded to show from several considerations, that frequent changes of the pastoral relation were not favorable to the best pastoral habits. I further stated that I thought a longer term of pastoral service, in old and dense populations, whether rural or city, would tend to increase our pastoral efficiency.

In my second article I stated several of the special benefits that I thought would result from longer pastorates. To these views advanced in that article I have seen no reply.

I said our system had done much, was doing much, and would continue to do much good—change or no change. But as I believe our theology the nearest scriptural, and our ecclesiastical system the best, I thought and still think that we ought to do more than any other branch of the Church in evangelizing the world. If therefore our system can in any way be made more efficient, let us try to make it so. I by no means claim infallibility; but I still think that longer pastorates in old and dense populations would be promotive of increased usefulness. My suggestion was, not to change our itinerant system, but to permit the Bishops, whenever in their judgment it would subserve the interest of the work, to continue a preacher three or four years on a circuit or in a station. I can see no harm in this, nothing at variance with the spirit of our system. In England they may remain three years, and in France five years, and yet they are itinerant in theory and practice. The Bishops can now continue Presiding Elders four years, and the General Conference elects Editors, Agents, and Secretaries to serve four years. My suggestion is, that pastors may, where it may seem advisable, remain four years. The Bishops may very rarely think it advisable; if so, all well; the state of the work and the needs of the Church will show what may be best.

I hope brethren will not condemn my suggestion just because it proposes a slight departure from past usage. The first steamboat was a grand thing—an immense advance upon anything that had gone before it as a means of navigation, but it would be a great pity if no change had been made. Our itinerant system has wrought great good. It has been an immense improvement upon all other systems of evangelization. But if it can be made to work still greater and better results, it would be a sad pity to restrain its usefulness through, perhaps, an undue reverence for the past. But enough on this point, until some one else takes me in hand.

I am somewhat posted up in relation to Clarke, Beecham and Watson, and know that these eminent divines were in the same localities for long years, and in circumstances favorable to the production of those great books in which their imperishable thoughts are embalmed for ever.

As to the charge of "false assumptions," saying things "not true," and "disregarding facts," I shall leave my character to take care of itself. And as to the soundness of my Methodist orthodoxy—theologically or ecclesiastically considered—I leave birth, education, and twenty-four years, itinerant labor in three Conferences, on virious stations, and a district, to vindicate me. That "J. H., Louisiana Conference," may know with whom he talks a lame, I will sign the name of

JOSEPH B. WALKER.

New Orleans, La.

OUR PASTORAL INEFFICIENCY

IS NOT OWING TO THE SYSTEM, NOR CAN THE PROPOSED "EXTENSION" REMEDY IT.

REVIEW OF NO. II.

When through with the review of this No. of our friend, "A Methodist," we will propose an infallible remedy for the inefficiency of our pastoral work.

Our friend, in closing No. 2, fixed up a "wall of sure defence" around his pet "extension term" not a logical wall, nor anything of that nature, but a wall shaped after this fashion: if you "differ with me," and you are not a logy, one thing is certain—there is no escape from this alternative—you are an indolent and lazy fellow. As we belong to no class (whether of the above faculties or not, we leave this classification to be made by a "A Methodist) who never compromise principle for the opinions of the people; we also have the hardihood not only to differ with his opinions in regard to the "extension term" remedying our pastoral inefficiency, but to charge the reasons he gives why the "extension term" would accomplish the end desired, as slanderous to our ministry, in that he makes the grand motive power actuating our preachers to the performance of those obligations they are under both to God and man, as sinister because selfish. This is his language—"Where a preacher expects or wishes to remain four years, he will set himself to work, &c." That is the motive given—"wishes to remain." Suppose the preacher has no such wish. The conclusion is inevitable: he has no soul-inspiring motive to do his duty. Is this true, coadjutors of Wesley, Asbury, and McKendree? Does the New Testament teach any such principle? Paul, when he took upon himself the ministry, says: "I consulted not with flesh and blood;" and after having labored for years in the ministry, says: "I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus, and Him crucified." Again, it is said, "He that sow-th in the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption." Doubtless, there are some men who have introduced themselves into the ministry who have no incentives only man-created ones; hence, to such the argument under review will be potent. But such ministers as are laboring for a treasury beyond the decay of time, are prompted on to a discharge of their ordination vows by motives pure, because inspired by dominatively circumscribed selfishness, such as "a wish to remain." "He and his family expect to remain four years, he will be naturally desirous to have the confidence of the people as a good man," &c. From what source rises that influence prompting the minister of God to act right and conduct himself as a Christian gentleman, according to the above logic? It is owing to the consideration, that "he and his family expect to remain." Hence, when there is no such expectation this prompting influence to that course of Christian deportment is lost. Has such reasoning any force? "We think it (extension term) will make better preachers." This opinion we combated in our former article, by the infallible rule for the demonstrating of such facts. He is very charitable to those musty preachers, allowing them "fifty distinct sermons." All we have to say on this is, if these sermons each involve a distinct theological question, two more would have taken them through grammar. And as to the argument he gives of his soundness in the Methodistic faith, because his great grandmother was a Methodist, has no bearing on the question of an extension of the pastoral term, nor does it follow, therefore, that he is sound in the faith. We suppose, however—not from what his great grandmother was, but from what he is now, and has so long been—that he is sound at heart. But erroneous ideas, unawares, have crept into his brain.

The remedy we propose as a cure for pastoral inefficiency is contained in these laconic words, "but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Without this power all "extension terms" will be abortive; with this power we will not need such terms, for there will be no inefficiency; but we will have efficiency both among the ministry and the laity.

J. W.

Louisiana Conference.

CAUSES OF DEATH.—There are six diseases which produce over 25,000 deaths each every year, in England and Wales. Phthisis, or consumption, takes the lead, counting in 1858, 59,412; scarlatina, 30,317; atrophy, or debility, 26,856; pneumonia, 26,486; and convulsions of children, 25,148. Over 7,000 died without any medical attendant, and full one-half the deaths were under fifteen years of age. About 1,000 infants, it is estimated, die annually for the want of breast milk.

GENIUS AND INSANITY.

From the days of Aristotle, and probably long before his time, there has been a vault, and often expressed, belief that, somehow or other, men of genius were mad, or if not positively mad, they were of the temperament which easily leads to madness.

It will naturally occur to the reader that a notion so widely spread, and so persistently handed down from generation to generation, must have some ground of plausibility, if not of truth. That men in all ages should have been struck with the similarity between genius and insanity, especially when the genius took the form of artistic activity, is only intelligible in the supposition of some fundamental similitude; and the answer to the question, What is that similitude? cannot be uninteresting. In our opinion there can be little hesitation as to the answer. So far from believing that there is an essential similarity, and that both genius and insanity are forms of the same nervous disease, we believe there is an essential distinction, one not less than between the vivacious monkey and the vivacious man. There is a resemblance, but it is simply in the excitability common to both. Instead of exclaiming—

> "What thin partitions do our souls divide!
> Great wits to madness nearly are allied,"

we should assert that the partitions are party-walls; and that there is no other alliance between genius and madness than that of a common humanity, a common excitability, and a common liability, to excess. If a few great men have fallen victims to the facility with which the nervous mechanism may be disturbed, men who had nothing great have likewise fallen victims by thousands. When we have gained some slight knowledge of the wondrous mechanism we name the body, how multitudinous its combined actions, how easily the disturbance of one will affect the healthy action of the rest, and how recklessly we disregard the plainest rules of health, the wonder is not a few men having succumbed in the course of an intense intellectual life ceases at once, and a new wonder emerges—wonder that any man can live this life, and retain his faculties in activity. The very preeminence of the nervous system implies a predominant activity, and this is liable to be stimulated to excess by two potent tempters: Ambition, eager to jostle its way through energetic crowds; and Fascination, which lies in intellectual labor, the brooding surge of creation; the passionate persistence of research. These tempters hurry men into excess. Men who live much by the brain have seldom the courage to be prudent, seldom the wisdom to be patient. In vain the significant words of warning become louder and louder: in vain the head feels hot, the ears are full of noises; the heart flattering and thumping, the nights sleepless, the digestion miserably imperfect, the temper irritable: these are Nature's warnings to desist, but they are disregarded; the object of ambition lures the victim on, the seduction of artistic creation, or of a truth seen dancing like a will-o'-wisp, incessantly solicits him; he will not pause—at length he cannot pause, the excitement has become a fever, the flame that warms destroys him: madness arrives.

Sad this is, and would be infinitely sad if there were no help for it, if the very glory and splendor of the intelligence were necessarily allied to its infirmity and ruin. But it is not so. Men cannot transgress Nature's laws without incurring Nature's penalties. The most perfect digestive apparatus will be ruined by imprudent habits; the most powerful muscular system may be lamed by over-exertion; the most admirable secreting organs will become morbid under over-stimulus; and why are we to expect the complex and delicate nervous mechanism to be overworked with impunity?

Not by reason of diseased nervous centres are men ever pre-eminent in intellectual energy, nor are they liable to become insane by reason of this energy, unless misdirected. They are pre-eminent because God has endowed them with the higher cerebral development, and because this is in healthy activity; when it falls into unhealthy activity, insanity is the result—a result not due to the original strength of the energy, but due to an original defect in the constitution transmitted from parents, or to a defect acquired through neglect of the plainest precepts of healthy living. It is from their weakness that they fall, not because of their strength. One may pity the overtasked man of genius, and sympathise with his imprudence; one may regret the [illegible] of the circumstances; but to argue in favor of the notion that genius is allied to insanity. Overwork, and unseemly neglect, kill the meanest as inevitably as the highest. It is a tragedy which is no respecter of persons, and darkens a thousand homes which are never brightened with a ray of genius.

That it is over excitement, and disregard of the laws of health, rather than the amount of cerebral power, which causes the insanity of men of genius, may be suspected from the single comparison of Southey and Wordsworth. No one, we suppose, will for an instant question the immeasurable superiority of Wordsworth's genius; yet his long and laborious life was passed without a threat of cerebral disease; whereas poor Southey paid the penalty of overwork. Wordsworth was much in the open air, taking active exercise. Southey lived in his study. The explanation lies there.

There is another error current on the subject of genius, an error which bases its evidence on cases not less equivocal than those brought forward respecting insanity—namely, that men of genius are too absorbed in their pursuits to pay the same scrupulous attention to minor morals and ordinary duties demanded from other men. Here biography offers its treacherous aid, and shows, unhappily, that many men of genius have disregarded minor morals. To this we reply, as before, that many more men of unblemished mediocrity of intellect have shown a greater disregard to minor and major morals; whereupon we conclude that there must be some other cause at work, and that the shortcomings of men of genius are referrible simply to their imperfect conscientiousness. Not because they are strong in intellect, but because they are weak in will or conscience, have these men erred. There is no legitimate connection between splendid talents and engagements broken, trusts violated, or bills unpaid; but there is a direct connection between weak consciences and these things.

Genius may prevent a man from becoming rich; it does not prevent his being scrupulously honest. Absorption in ideas, the pursuit of objects not in themselves marketable, must of course limit the income of any man who earns his income by labor of brain; but it does not screen from him the plain facts of his position. If he is so absorbed as not to be perfectly aware that he has not earned the money to pay for the sherry and mutton on his table, he ought to be shut up in an asylum; and if he is aware of it, but disregards it, either because it vexes him, or because his sanguine disposition leads him to believe that the money will be forthcoming "somehow," then we must lay the blame on his feeble conscientiousness, not on his intense intellectual absorption. It is true that a concentration of the intellect on any subject indisposes, if it does not unfit, a man for attending closely to many other matters; though one may note in passing, that mathematicians and poets who could find no time to look after the small matters of finance in their own families, found ample time to look after the finance of India, and the means of defraying the National Debt. But granting that genius incapacitates a man from attending to domestic matters, we must still assert that it by no means absolves him from taking care that those matters are properly seen to; he may resign them into other hands, and only be careful that no sophistication subsends his agent. Ghirlandaja bade his brother manage the house; for himself, he would do his utmost to find the money for it by painting.

The same principle applies even to men too poor "to live like gentlemen." It is not imperative on a man to live like a gentleman; only imperative on him to live honestly. If his genius will not procure him the "common necessaries" (which too often include a host of superfluities, and sacrifices to mere show), let him earn those necessaries by some other labor like other men.

Goldsmith and Johnson are two instructive illustrations of our argument. Goldsmith had more of what is specially called genius than Johnson had; but will any one assert that it was by reason of this advantage that he was so careless of engagements, and so heedless in money matters? will any one assert that Johnson's noble integrity was owing to his intellectual inferiority? The impulsive, hopeful, child-like nature of Goldsmith, makes us love the man, and easily forgive his errors; we know that there was nothing base in him, only a weakness to which we can be charitable; but let us not forget that his errors sprang from his weakness, and were in no sense the necessary consequence of his strength. Neither let us suffer logic to stifle charity; nor let charity confuse our moral judgments. It is not because we see a course of conduct to be sinful that we are to shut the sinner from our hearts; nor because we feel yearnings of pity for the erring, that we are to alter our judgment of the error.

Men of genius are said to be by nature improvident. It may be so: biography too often seems to say it is so. But thousands who have no genius are quite as improvident; and it is never in virtue of his genius that any man is so. Human nature is human nature, and its infirmities may be seen in the shade of its splendors. The great Shakspeare, the great Newton, the great Goethe, were not little men because they too had their littlenesses; nor were these littlenesses in any sense the product of their greatness. And if the trembling sensibility, which is one of the conditions of genius, makes a man more accessible to certain temptations, it makes him also more accessible to moral influences, so that, in point of fact, the history of men of genius is on the whole remarkably noble and pure. The curiosity naturally felt about everything concerning men of genius leads to the publication of all their errors and shortcomings; but who can doubt that a similar scrutiny of the lives of grocers would yield a much blacker catalogue of errors? The vices of illustrious men are cried out from the housetops, but who troubles himself about the vices of blockheads?

Our conclusion, then, is briefly this: Genius is health and strength, not disease and weakness; it is sanity and virtue, not insanity and vice. The man of genius may be sickly and vicious; but he is so by reason of a sickly body and a vacillating will; not by any means because, with this body and this will, he also possesses a splendid intellect.—Blackwood.

VINCENT FERRARA,

THE WHITEFIELD OF THE MIDDLE AGES.

It was near the close of the year 1398, and at the age of forty-two years, that Vincent gave himself up fully to the work in which all the feelings of his heart were so strongly enlisted. Sparing, as unworthy bribes, all the dignities and honors that invited his ambition and were within his reach, he set forth upon his mission with a zeal that permitted no intermission of his labors, and scarcely the rest of a single day, till the close of his wondrous life. Almost every portion of the Christian world was the scene of his labors. The most surprising accounts are given of the effects of his eloquence. His fame spread from land to land, and princes and people were alike anxious to hear a man who, conjoined to all his other qualities, had the reputation of a saint. Wherever he went invitations met him from abroad to visit distant cities and villages, nor was the desire to hear him gratified by a single visit. His longest abode in any place was usually but a few weeks, and when his work seemed completed in one city or neighborhood he hastened to another. From Arragon, his native country, he went to Barcelona, thence to Southern France, in the regions of Savoy and Dauphiny, thence to Switzerland, Geneva, and Lorraine. The Duke of Burgundy invited him to his territories; the King of England besought him to visit his kingdom, and sent a vessel to bear him across the straits. Not in London only, but in various parts of the kingdom, as well as in Scotland and Ireland, he gathered wondering throngs to listen to his words.—The closing labors of his life had Northern France, the regions of Normandy and Brittany, for the field of their successful effort. At the time of his death there was not a voice in Christendom that had been listened to by so many thousands—we might safely say millions—as his own. His career has no parallel in these latter ages, unless in the career of Peter the Hermit, or our own Whitefield. His language shows how deeply he felt for the erring, and how readily he traced the evil to its true cause in the prevalent corruption and neglect of the clergy. "The principal source of these errors, so far as I can discover, is in the profound ignorance and the lack of religious instruction which prevail. Many of the people of this country—he writes from Geneva—have assured me that for more than thirty years they have neither seen nor heard any other preachers than such of the Vaudois as have visited them twice each year. I blush and tremble to think of the fearful account which those ecclesiastical superiors will have to render to the Chief Shepherd when they neglect their sacred duty of seeking out and instructing the poor. Some of them are at careless ease in their splendid palaces, or well furnished houses, others will only labor in large cities, leaving the poor of the flock, for whom the Savior's blood was shed, to perish uncared for. For the want of a faithful ministry that will break to the people the bread of life, they are forgotten and neglected; they live in error and die in sin. Never was it more true than now, that the harvest is great and the laborers are few. My constant

Sometimes he was summoned to visit places which had been abandoned, or where the vices of the priesthood had been such that the people had rejected them as tyrants and impostors. Such invitations were never refused, and the men who saw the wolf only in their former pastors recognized in Vincent a shepherd who cared for their souls. Some of his explorations revealed a degree of heathenism and ignorance prevalent which seem strange even in that age of culminating corruption of the Romish Church. In the diocese of Lausanne he finds still prevalent what he does not hesitate to call Paganism. In the region to the north of this, lying between France and Germany, were those who publicly professed to worship the sun, and addressed their prayers to this luminary. But the zeal of this apostle of the truth, as he held it, shrank from contact with no superstition or error, and never turned back from fear of the people, however rude or fierce; whom it was in his power to benefit. "The Lord," said he, "is my strength, and in his help I put my trust."

From Flanders his labors were extended through the north of France. The King of England met him at Caen, and urged him to visit Normandy. Here he toiled till his strength failed. He felt the grasp of disease upon him in the city of Vannes, and determined to seek his native air in the hope of a restoration to health. He set out for Valencia, but his sickness increased. He was worn out by his long and exhausting labors, and was compelled to turn back to the city he had left. As he again approached the walls he was met by a glad welcome. Great and small, rich and poor, the youthful and the aged hastened forth, enthusiastic with joy at his return; and from many lips burst forth the shout, "Blessed is he who cometh in the name of the Lord." But the chime of bells and the loud echo of popular joy fell upon a dying ear. As he entered the dwelling where he had formerly abode he said to those who gathered around him, congratulating themselves upon his return, that he had come back to their city, not to continue his ministry, but to find a grave. They soon found that it was but too true, and tears took the place of smiles.

And thus at the age of fifty-six years, on the 5th of April, 1419, his spirit passed from earth.—Presbyterian Review.

IMMORALITY IN FINE ART.

Immorality in fine art, says the Christian Advocate and Journal, is one of the subtlest, and yet one of the most virulent of moral poisons. Every age and every clime in which sculpture and painting have flourished has felt its insidious workings. From being at first only an effect, it quickly becomes a potent and terrible cause. Its author works out the impure dream of his brain, but before his task is done he is, like the rattlesnake, poisoned by his own fangs, and his work is born a fiery flying serpent, with an eye like the basilisk's, to allure the beholder to destruction.

Sight, next to touch, is the directest and surest approach to the passions, and through them to the will. When a young man's eye lingers upon a lascivious picture, the net of a Delilah is thrown around him; every moment spent in its contemplation cuts away the locks of his virtuous strength; when his passions begin to warm, the Philistines are upon him; and when his will is overpowered, how soon is he found blind and in bitterness, chained and grinding in the prison.

The capability for mischief that belongs to everything that is, or may become a power, exists to a pre-eminent degree in fine art. It is a form of teaching, and its potency resides in the principle that it can not only present many ideas in one, but that it brings this intensified lesson to the lower faculties by means of the higher; making the exalted and spiritual senses of beauty and sympathy to be only as the rainbow veil of the cataract, or as golden gates to a festering charnel-house. It is the devil in robes of light; the noisome carcass of death, clad in its own phosphorescent but deadly putrescence.

We are not decrying sculpture nor painting, far from it, only their perverted use. Art is divine. God is an infinite artist. He moulded the matchless form of man. With the sunbeam for his brush he dashes the curve of the rainbow; he composes the complex grandeur of the landscape; he streaks the tulip, and his pencil tints the morning and evening, or drops the blue that quivers in a maiden's eye.

He made man's powers as a faint shadowing of his own. Great art is godlike. We have stood before such masterpieces as the "Greek Slave" of our Powers, or the "Heart of the Andes" of our Church, or the glorious creations of the masters of the Old World's art, and as we gazed upon them until our spirits swelled within us, and our eyes grew misty, and our lips quivered, we thanked heaven that we, too, belonged to the same race with Apelles and Phidias, with Raphael and Angelo, with Reynolds and Wren. In such art the writhing Laocoon can melt, or the flame-wrapped Hussar can fire men's souls, while souls are left to melt or burn; but the great perversion of art is not in marble or on canvas.

The late cheap and rapid methods in the art imitative are now the favorite vehicles of vice, and the perversion to which they are brought completes their power of mischief. Engravings, lithographs, and especially the exquisitely perfect French chromo-lithographs, are now reeking with this infection. Even the pure sunbeam is made to join in the business, and in many a sly corner of the magnificent photograph and stereoscope galleries its seductive work meets the eye. There is hardly a collection of pictures, or casts, or bronzes in any street in this or other cities or villages in which there is not some specimen—often several—on which a pure eye cannot linger for a moment. It meets us at every turn, and glares unblushing from a thousand shop windows and show cases. Everywhere, from the elaborate work of the geometric lathe on a bank note to the ten-penny daubs in the grocery windows, the eye is assailed, and licentious suggestions thrust upon the mind. There seems to be no escape from its presence, for, like the slimy plague of Egypt's frogs, it is everywhere.

MILTON.

But the chief excellence of Milton's imagination was derived from another source. Eclectic as that imagination was, classic when classicality was required by the poetic connections of his theme, it was peculiarly characterized by those features of intenseness, of grandeur and sublimity, which are never found apart from the Holy Scriptures. Nature interposed but a thin veil between the old Hebrew mind and Jehovah. Through the transparency, the Living One could be seen; and although that mind knew little of physical science, it knew much of the great Being who dwells behind its laws and phenomena, and gives them all their meaning. It heard God's own voice in the thunder. It saw his footsteps on the waters. The clustering vines hung upon the sunny hill-sides with his abundance, and the cedars of Lebanon towered with his majesty. Then, too, miracles such as no nation had been privileged to witness, called out its wonder, reverence, and awe. For it, the Red Sea had opened a highway of escape from pursuing vengeance. For it, Sinai had smoked with fires of no earthly kindling. For it, Carmel had witnessed to the sovereignty and presence of Jehovah. Often were these magnificent demonstrations lost upon the rebellious people, but the national mind, as evidenced through its truest representatives, retained their influence; and on this basis was reared, generation after generation, a superstructure of lofty thought, of historic splendor, of poetic renown, and of prophetic glory.

Milton knew where the ocean had learned its endless anthem, and where the sun, flaming high in heaven, had lit his beams. He knew the mountains as one born amid their forests. Better still, he knew the God of the mountains and of the valleys, and if their images were in his intellect, His image was set in their midst as the supreme beauty that all minor beauties could only encircle in emblematic homage. Milton knew, too, where Moses had caught the music of that song which first celebrated in stately march of sounds the high deliverances of Israel and God's guiding hand through the dangers of the desert. And he knew where David learned his harp when that harp led a nation's thanksgiving and sounded a nation's joy. Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel had been his inspirers as well as his teachers.—And from these sources he had learned that lesson which poets have been slow to learn, namely, the superiority of sublimity to beauty in its moral relations. The perception of the sublime is more favorable to those moral emotions which truth and duty are concerned with than the perception of the beautiful; and hence the greater capacity of sublimity to render service to conscience.—Milton rarely exerts his strength to present beauty. It is a secondary rather than a principal element in the poem; and, in fact, he relaxes into it as a recreation.—The beautiful passages in Paradise Lost are as tropical islands of the ocean, while the poem resembles the ocean itself, smoothing its billowy swell around these summer scenes, and then gathering its suspended force, all the mightier for the brief serenity, rolls afar its waves and its music to the enrichment

THE ORPHAN BUTTE.

The landscape over which we were looking was one that has long been celebrated, in the legends of trapper and cholero; and certainly no lovelier is to met with in the midland regions of America. Though new to my eyes, I recognised it from the descriptions I had read and heard of it. There was an idiosyncrasy in its features—especially in that lone mound rising conspicuously in its midst—which at once proclaimed it the valley of the Huerfano. There stood the "Orphan Butte." There was no mistaking its identity.

This valley, or more properly, valle—a word of very different signification—is in reality a level plain, flanked on each side by a continuous line of bluffs or benches, themselves forming the abutments of a still higher plain, which constitutes the general level of the country. The width between the bluffs is five or six miles; but at the distance of some ten miles from one point of view, the cliffs converge—apparently closing in the valley in that direction. This, however, is only apparent. Above the butte is another deep canon, through which the river has cleft its way.

The intervening space is a picture fair to behold. The surface, level as a billiard table, is covered with gramma grass, of a bright, almost emerald verdure. The uniformity of this color is relieved by cotton-wood copses, whose foliage is but one shade darker. Commingling with these, and again slightly darkening the hue of their frondage, are other trees, with a variety of shrubs or climbing plants—as clematis, wild roses, and willows. Here and there a noble poplar stands apart—as if disdaining to associate with the more lowly growth of the groves.

These 'tapes' are of varied forms; some rounded, some oval, and others of more irregular shape—many of them appearing as if planted by the hands of the landscape gardener; while the Huerlano, winding through their midst, could not have been more gracefully guided had it been specially designed for an ornamental water.

The butte itself, rising in the centre of the plain, and towering nearly two hundred feet above the general level, has all the appearance of an artificial work—not of human hands, but a cairn constructed by giants.—Just such does it appear—a vast pyramidal cone, composed of huge prismatic blocks of granite, black almost as coal—the color occasioned by an iron admixture in the rock.

For two-thirds of its slope, a thick growth of cedar covers it with a skirting of darkest green. Above this appear the huge naked prisms—piled one upon the other, in sort of irregular crystallization, and ending in a summit slightly truncated.

Detached boulders lie around its base, that, having yielded to the disintegrating influences of rain and wind, and lost their balance, have rolled down the declivity of its sides.

No other similar elevation is near—the distant bluffs alone equalling it in height. But there the resemblance ends; for the latter are a formation of stratified sandstone, while the rocks composing the butte are purely granitic! Even in a geological point of view, is the Orphan Butte isolated from all the world. In a double sense, does it merit its distinctive title.

Singular is the picture formed by this lone mound, and the park-like scene that surrounds it—a picture rare as fair. Its very frame is peculiar. The bench of light reddish sandstone sharply outlined on each edge—the bright green of the sward along its base—and the dark belt of cedars cresting its summit, form, as it were, a double moulding to the frame. Over this can be distinguished the darker outlines of the great Cordilleras; above them, again, the snowy cones of the Wa-to-yah; and grandly towering over all, the sky-piercing summit of Pike's Peak.

All these forms gleaming in the full light of a noonday sun, with a heaven above them of deep ethereal blue, present a picture that for grandeur and sublimity is not surpassed upon the earth.

ALL THINGS WORKING TOGETHER.

There is another sense in which these material agencies are working a moral progress, and so promoting the scheme of God. Looking up at the weather-cock, says the Sage of Vanity, "Woe's me for this weary wind! There it was, south this morning, and now it is north! How many ways it blows, and never long the same! What's the use of all this whirling?" And if it were only to make the vane spin round, the air as well might stagnate; there were no need of such wasted power. But whilst the valetudinarian is looking at the vane, the wind is careering over a continent, and doing the Creator's work in a hundred lands. It has called at your city, fetid with miasma, and grossing with pestilence; and with its besom of brisk ploious it has swept the plague away. It has looked into you haven, and found a forest of laden ships sleeping over their freights, and it has chased them all to sea. And finding the harvest arrested—in a broad—and fertile realm—the earth chapped, and the crops withering—it is now hurrying with that black ornament of clouds to drench it in lifesome irrigation.

To narrow observation or to selfishness, that wind is an annoyance; to faith, it is God's angel forwarding the mighty plan. 'Tis a boisterous night, and Pictish savages curse the noisy blast which shakes their peat hovels round their ears; but that noisy blast has landed the gospel on St. Andrew's shore. It blows a fearful tempest, and it sets some rheumatic joints on aching; but the morrow shows dashed in pieces the awful Armada which was fetching the Spanish Inquisition to our British isle. The wind blows east and detains James's ship at Harwich; but it guides King William to Torbay. Yes; "The wind blows south, and the wind blows north: it whirleth about continually, and it returneth again according to its circuits." But in the course of these circuits the wind has blown to our little speck of sea-girt happiness the gospel, and Protestantism, and civil and religious liberty. And so, not of our islet only, but of our globe entire, and its continuous population. So far as the individual is concerned, so far as it affects the weather-index, in the wind there may be little seeming progress; nay, so far as concerns any plan which society purposes to itself, the favoring gale may shift and shift again, and the story of a nation be little better than the register of a stationary vane pirouetting on its windy pivot; but so far as affects the scheme of God, there is an aura in the universe which always drives one way. Providence is a wind which never whirls about. The breath of God's Spirit and the strength of God's purpose are steadily wafting our world, and all the worlds, in one mighty convoy towards God's appointed haven in the distant future.—Dr. Hamilton.

TO GUZZLE AND TO DANCE.

The Protestant Churchman has a remarkable article, of three columns, against the New York ball for the Prince of Wales. After discussing the positions of the two countries concerned in it, as the highest in the scale of civilization, it says:—

"Some hundreds of names glean in the papers of the day—the most wealthy of the merchants, and the most renowned of the professions of New York, including even names of men consecrated to the ministry of the Gospel; as the dignified and selected agents of this display of the highest civilization of man." It is not now an instructive array for a feebler nation, but a rivaling manifestation, a boastful avowal to the very highest of all previous nations. The effort must be to exceed in manifestation all that has been done before. A message is sent of noble citizens beyond the Border, to consult what will be most acceptable and appropriate for the occasion—most honorable to America, most accordant with the renown of Britain. And again the only alternation is: 'Will your Royal Highness dine or dance? To guzzle and to dance is all we know how to do, and all that we are able to propose. Will you delight most to fill your stomach, or to limber your legs? Will it be most agreeable to see our grandees feed, or our girls frolic?—This is all, and this is the highest to which we have attained. The utmost we have improved, the noblest of our gains, is in the extent of gastric tension, and in the endurance of cranial muscles—how much we can hold, and how long we can spin. Which will your Royal Highness prefer?' Now, really, is this all that we can do? Are we thus a nation of mere paunches and heels? Are we without intellect, education, dignity, refinement, that we can imagine no enjoyment which is not wholly debasing? What an aspect of humanity it presents!—Of course it drives back all who are on the side of religion, of purity, of truth, from all participation in the low and humiliating scene. Christian ministers are designedly excluded from the connection. Christian men are shut out, unless with consciences so easy and contriving, that they can at the same time endow a society which gives a premium for tracts against dancing, and unite in the preparation for the ball. [illegible] community, no serious man can doubt. That it is a false exhibition of our people, and of the taste and judgment of the best among them, none can deny. That it is abhorrent to the Unseen Source of purity and holiness to man, before whose judgment-seat we must all stand, no Christian can fail to feel.—That the whole provision is a shocking libel upon the advancement of the age, and the attainment and standing of the nation, is too plain for argument. Fearful is the destiny and condition of man, if the culmination of modern civilization in its grandest exercise can imagine nothing higher than to GUZZLE or to DANCE."

SOMETHING TO LIVE FOR.

A young man has just left me, with whom I have had a pleasant hour's talk concerning the great matter of personal religion. He is full of youthful energy; hopeful, energetic, industrious, and skilful in the business to which he has given his life. If no disaster should befall him, he may become, in the course of years, one of the greatest merchants of the land. Better than all this, he has just given his heart to God, and is rejoicing in the freshness of his first love as a disciple of Jesus. It was good to be with him, and listen as he poured forth his new and warm feelings, and spoke of his new purposes concerning himself and the future.

One of his sentences lingers in my ear, now that he is gone. "I feel," said he, and his eye kindled and his form dilated as he spoke, "that I have something to live for now." He had lived before, as I knew, for business, for advancement, for money. These things seem to be nothing now, compared with the new and higher aims which had entered his soul. He had found Jesus, and with him he had found "something to live for." He had become a Christian, and his whole life had become exalted by the change.

The young man was right. Every Christian has something to live for. He has a chief end, a great end, wherewith to give concentration and vigor to all his labors. The aims of the worldling are often low, sometimes degrading to man, always far beneath the aims of the man who has been renewed and purified. Soon he will find that his life has been a scene of laborious trifling, in which he has wrought hard and gained nothing. But the Christian lives worthily because he lives to some purpose.

He lives for eternity. He strives after its rewards and anticipates its blessedness. The glories of heaven attract his eye and heart, and he hastens to their possessions. He looks for a city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God. Surely heaven is something to live for.

He lives for the good of man. He longs for man's salvation. He will endure self-denial, and suffer taunts and scoffs, if he can win souls thereby. He will walk long and labor long to bring one soul to Jesus. This is the purpose of his life. It is a great purpose. God will pronounce it so in the end, when the purposes and works of all shall be made manifest.

I would that all Christians felt constantly that they had "something to live for." They would live to some purpose then. They would make a deeper mark upon the world. They would redeem their lives from aimless indolence, and dignify and ennoble it by giving it a great and worthy end. Man would bless them, and God honor their works and prayers, by causing them to minister to his glory.—Bible Times.

A PICTURE OF WESLEY'S TIMES.

Thackeray's Lecture on the Second George, published in Harper, makes one feel that a reformation was needed:—

"As I peep into George II.'s St. James's, I see crowds of cassocks rustling up the back stairs of the ladies of the Court; stealthy clergy slipping purses into their laps; that godless old King yawning under his canopy in his chapel royal, as the chaplain before him is discoursing. Discoursing about what?—about righteousness and judgment? While the chaplain is preaching the King is chattering in German almost as loud as the preacher; so loud that the clergyman—it may be one Dr. Young, he who wrote Night Thoughts, and discoursed on the splendor of the stars, the glories of heaven, and utter vanities of this world—actually burst out crying in his pulpit, because the defender of the faith, and dispenser of bishoprics, would not listen to him! No wonder that the clergy were corrupt and indifferent amidst this indifference and corruption. No wonder that sceptics multiplied, and morals degenerated so far as they depended on the influence of such a King. No wonder that Whitfield cried out in the wilderness—that Wesley quitted the insulted temple to pray on the hill-side. I look with reverence on those men at that time. Which is the sublimer spectacle—the good John Wesley, surrounded by his congregation of miners at the pit's mouth, or the queen's chaplains mumbling through their morning office in their ante-room, and the picture of the great Venus, with the door opened to the adjoining chamber, where the queen is dressing, taking scandal to Lord Harvey, or uttering sneers at Lady Suffolk, who is kneeling, with the basin, at her mistress's feet. I say I am scared as I look round at this society, at this King, at these courtiers, at these politicians, at these bishops, at this fleeting vice and levity. Whereabouts in this court is the honest man? Where is the pure person one may like? The air stifles one with its sickly perfumes. There was some old-world filthiness, and some absurd ceremonials about our court of the present day, which I laugh at; but, as an Englishman, contrasting it with the past, shall I not acknowledge the change of to-day? As the mistress of St. James's passes me now, I salute the sovereign, wise, moderate, exemplary of life; the good mother; the good wife; the accomplished lady; the enlightened friend of art; the tender sympathizer in her people's glories and sorrows."

THE CITY OF LONDON.

London now covers over 120 square miles, having increased three-fold since the year 1800; and bricks and mortar still levede and captare the green fields. The population, according to the report of the Registrar-General, augments at the rate of about one thousand per week—half by birth and half by immigration.

Notwithstanding the enormous wealth of the metropolis, it is recorded in the report of the Registrar, as a remarkable fact, that "one in six of those who leave the world die in some one of the public institutions—a work-house, hospital, asylum, or prison.—Nearly one in eleven of the deaths is in a workhouse."

This shows that poverty follows close at the heels of wealth, and fastens on the multitude with relentless grasp. Every sixth person dies a pauper or a criminal! Can this be said of any other city on the globe? And how great a number there must be who barely manage to escape this fate! The severe competition for subsistence and wealth which characterizes London life in a terrible ordeal for any human being to pass through, and thousands fall in the attempt, crushed beneath the golden Juggernaut.

It is now notorious, says a London Exchange, that in the large establishments, where some hundreds of assistants are employed, the great majority of them are broken-down tradesmen, crushed by the competition of capital. Even these occupations are obtained with difficulty, and the less fortunate gradually sink lower and lower in the scale, until they are driven into the public institutions, where they meet an untimely death.

The list is further swelled by that numerous class who, born in a respectable sphere, and well educated, sink into degradation from the sheer love of display and vanity of living beyond their means. It is on record that, out of eight thousand convicts who have passed their probation in Pentonville, one thousand had fallen through this wretched vice; and it is stated that most of the number were, origin

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 21, 1860.

THE SOUTHERN MOVEMENT.

We live in sorrowful times. Not a century has mantled the great Republic of the Western World, and yet it is, apparently, we think certainly, to be dismissed.

The change which has come over the spirit of the South since the news of Mr. Lincoln's election, surely surpasses anything of the kind, for suddenness, unanimity and power, known to history. Up to that time, all parties were bickering, though in different ways, to save the Union. As soon as the success of the sectional nominee was announced, all hope, in that direction, seems to have departed. All men, of all parties, in the cotton States, as a rule, announced themselves for resistance. The secession movement in the South has no relation whatever to old party lines. The prospect of unanimity is at least encouraging. We had not hoped to see the day when the South should be delivered from the strife of factions, and united as one man.

South Carolina has well nigh committed herself, if she has not done so, to secession. We think it almost a certainty that she will go out. Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and Arkansas will follow, we think, with equal certainty. The rest of the Slave States will ultimately go with them. Then the United States will be divided into two Republics. Yes, three: for, in that event, the Pacific States will set up for themselves, and form an independent Western Republic.

The Southern movement reveals clearly some important truths, some of them very gratifying. One is, the real devotion of all parties, however variant in policy, to the Constitution formed by our fathers, and to the Union founded upon it. The proof is, that when the salvation of the Constitution became, as they thought, impossible, the hope of the Union died a natural death. Whatever may be the future course and destiny of the South, she has, and will always have, the comfortable consciousness that she has not violated the Constitution herself, and that she has not asked more than its faithful observance on the part of her sister States of the North. The value of the principle and virtue of fidelity to law, especially in the form of constitutional compacts, thus receives a new illustration. It is the very religion of politics.

Another truth revealed by this movement is, that, however much the South has endured, for the sake of peace and Union, and for the glory of our common country, no truly Southern man has ever become willing to bow the neck in submission to the fanatical majority in its ruthless disregard of all constitutional fidelity. Southern men have differed as to the precise time and provocation of resistance, but they have all been true Southern rights men at heart.

In two articles in our issue of October 31, we elaborated the question, whether it was probable that the South could better resist the establishment of permanent Black Republican control by organization of all the elements of opposition, North and South, in the Union. All hope in this direction seems to have been blasted by the breeze that bore the news of Lincoln's [illegible] South really seems not to have known [illegible] has past, will not allow her to make any [illegible] to the North; we verily believe that no overture from the North would be listened to for a moment. As to our friends at the North, their very existence, in any organized strength, seems to depend upon the resistance of the South. In the battle they made for us, they contended that the South would never submit to abolition rule. This position was ridiculed by their enemies as an electioneering trick. The application is easy.

We have said that we think the secession of the Southern States a certainty. We may be mistaken. We think not, however. Let us pray that God may guide us and bless us in this most trying and troublous time.

We are amazed and mortified to witness the taunting, threatening, insulting tone of the abolition press toward the Southern people. Let us hope that time will change this tone.

METHODIST HOME MISSIONS.

There has been much discussion, says the Methodist, of late years in our Church respecting the propriety of a Home Mission organization. Our present plan does not, in the estimation of many, meet the urgent wants of our fast-extending domestic work. English Methodism has a most energetic system of domestic labor in its old Connexion scheme; but with all its adaptations and all its appliances, the Conference has, within a few years, found it expedient to devise a distinct plan, under the title of "Home Mission," which before long will probably assume gigantic proportions. The first year, four home missions were appointed; the next year, sixteen were appointed; and at the Conference just closed, the sixteen have been increased to thirty-two. These men are planted in the most spiritually destitute portions of the population, and they have already met with wonderful success in the formation of entirely new Methodist societies. As this peculiar Methodistic work extends, the funds are pouring in to the full extent of the demand. According to an English correspondent of one of our exchanges, the Conference appointed Rev. Mr. Prest to take charge of the Society, one of the most active men in originating it. Wesleyan Methodism affords us many noble examples; this one may be worthy of our consideration.

THE DRUSES.

The punishment of the Druses of Syria is quite likely to result in their annihilation, since they refuse to surrender those who were directly responsible for the late massacres, and show a disposition to resist the Turkish authorities. The French soldiers are not yet employed in the work of vengeance, but are kept as a reserve force, it being the policy of Turkey to show that she is able to manage her own affairs, and that there is no actual need of European intervention, and England sustains her in this position, affairs not being yet ripe for a partition of Turkey which will be satisfactory to all interested. The American missionaries and European committees at Beirut and Damascus are kept busy supplying the wants of the harmless Christian women and children, of whom there are yet many thousands dependent upon charity, although the Turkish government has provided for many of them. It is an interesting fact that the Jews throughout the world have been among the most liberal contributors to the Syrian relief fund, thus showing a magnanimous forgetfulness of the ages of insult and persecution visited upon them by the Christians, and that they too feel the catholic spirit that begins to pervade Christendom.

Moravian Mission in South Australia.—Mr. Schoendorf writes from Bethel, under date of May 29th, that the little congregation at that place consists of sixty-four persons. Besides these, eight families in the neighborhood belong to it, and the whole settlement comprising about 300 inhabitants goes to Church at Bethel. The failure of the crops last year had checked the external prosperity of the people. The meetings were well attended.

A MELANCHOLY FACT.

Mr. Editor: The system of denominational education now in operation has secured for the community at large what the old system of collegiate education never did, viz.: a deep moral and religious influence. It places at the head of all our institutions of high grade religious men, who not only exercise a thorough moral discipline but interest themselves in the spiritual welfare of their pupils. They note the impressions made upon their minds by the services of religion, and are careful to afford any facilities that may encourage them to pursue the great idea of saving the soul. On occasions of special religious influence in the community, they are permitted to place themselves within its sphere, and to enjoy all the privileges that a judicious discipline will allow. The result is, extensive revivals of religion visit nearly all these institutions, and pupils from every section of the country participate in the blessed influence.—Young men and young ladies, who never before thought seriously on the subject of religion, are converted. They are happy, and in the ecstacy of their first love write to their parents; some with joyous hearts, knowing that their parents are consistent Christians; others with trembling fingers, knowing that their parents, though members of the Church, are worldly-minded. Thus while the one class will write with joyous expectation for those expressions of encouragement which children naturally expect from Christian parents, the other class will wait in almost wretched suspense, with gloomy anxiety, for the next letter; in the meanwhile ejaculating, O, that my parents were Christians, then would I be happy!

What is the effect of this correspondence on those two classes of converts? The first more than realize their expectations in the earnestness with which their parents bid them God-speed. The others realize in different forms all, and sometimes more, than they apprehended. The severe animadversions of some on religious excitements; the cold and indifferent manner in which others allude to the conversion of their children, and the entire silence—contemptible silence—of others in reference to the subject of the last letters. Each has a blighting and withering influence upon the religious prospects of the young converts. They exchange letters with each other; discuss the merits of each, and the conclusion is unanimous,—our parents are not religious themselves, and they are opposed to our being so; they care nothing for our souls, we shall find no encouragement at home; therefore we will not unite with the Church, but serve God and enjoy our religion in secret. Thus the ardor of these young converts is dampened. Yet, with considerable effort, by the grace of God, they may maintain a consistent Christian life to the end of the session.

They return home, are greeted with the expressions of joy common to such meetings, and again take their places in the family circle. The circle is gay; various topics are introduced for conversation, and plans for enjoyment during vacation are discussed. Meantime the subject of the revival at school, and their conversion, have been kept in the background; if alluded to at all, in such a way as to show that but little importance is attached to them by the family. Consequently it is considered important that they adhere to their former resolution of making the enjoyment of religion strictly private. By the approbation and secret wish of their parents they are thrown into the gayest circle of worldly pleasure, and are soon found in the giddy whirl of dissipation. These are the first steps of that career of backsliding which so soon deprives the earnest converts of communion with God, and plunges them again into ruinous connection with the world. Now comes the melancholy fact named in the heading of this article, viz.: that for the want of co-operation on the part of parents, influence of [illegible] belonging to the Church, the good in- much money and labor, is lost on their children, and the religious character of the schools brought into disrepute. In a word, the schools have done religiously for their children what the influence of the parents never would have done at home, but the influence of the parents at home has destroyed the good the schools had done for their children. They sent their children to the schools, probably in view of their moral and religious character. The schools took them and educated them, and sent them home humble Christians. The parents received them again, but it was but to destroy their religious aspirations by their own ungodly and worldly-minded influence. Who can estimate the fearfulness of the responsibility thus incurred by parents?

Pensacola.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LITERATURE.

Mr. Editor: I was in hopes that you would publish the able report made by Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall, as chairman of the committee on Sabbath-school literature, to be found in the published proceedings of the Sabbath-school Convention of the Mississippi Conference. You will find on page 21 the following resolutions, which were a part of said report, and were adopted by the committee, and which embody somewhat the sentiments of the report:

1st. Resolved, That we earnestly appeal to the several Conferences, and the publishing committee, to consider the necessity of providing for a more uniform and extensive course of biblical study, with a view to a more general knowledge of the Scriptures by the Sunday-school pupils, and also the importance of a comprehensive manual on the subject of Church polity in catechism form, for the use of such schools and young people generally.

2d. Resolved, That among the works desired for the further improvement of Sabbath-school instruction, is a text book of general church history adapted to the inquiries and studies of the larger classes, and we earnestly invite attention to this matter.

3d. Resolved, That we recommend to the Pastors of our Churches and Superintendents of our Sabbath-schools, to form classes as far as it is practicable, from among their maturest pupils, whose studies shall be directed to the distinctive doctrines and polity of our Church, with a view to the more thorough training of such youths in the cardinal doctrines and essential obligations of christianity.

As a teacher of sacred literature in the Sabbath-school, I have felt the great want of a uniform system of biblical lessons for the higher classes. There should be prepared questions upon the historical and prophetical parts of the Bible, in the order of their recurrence.—And in regard to a catechism or manual upon Church polity, there can be no question that the rapid development and advancement of our denomination requires that the rising generation should be made familiar with her ecclesiastical government, and her peculiar doctrines and plans for carrying forward the great work of salvation, for which God seems especially to have designed her.

The second resolution recommends the preparing a text book of history. This is demanded by the inquiries of the hour, and we now have the materials for such a work, more full and complete than ever before.

If such works as the above resolutions suggest were prepared and published, I have no doubt that all Sabbath-school instructors would avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded of introducing them into their schools, and then they could fully carry out the request in the third resolution.

A comprehensive compend on Church polity would soon send out hundreds of our rising youths with facts and arguments in support of our views of the plan of salvation, whose influence would be felt and seen in the advancement of the cause of Christ.

Heretofore the laity, with an occasional exception, have thought it no part of their duty to study our Church polity or ecclesiastical history. Introduce such a work as above recommended, and you will make the next generation of Methodists as familiar with these subjects as they now are with the shorter catechism.

T. R.

Fayette, October, 1860.

EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor:—The East Texas Conference assembled at this place on the 24th inst. Bishop Andrew not being present, J. B. Tullis was elected President; J. W. Fields and W. Wltcher Secretaries.

The usual Committees were appointed, and are at work. None of them have yet represented their reports. Our literary institutions were presented in a healthy condition. I think there will be an increase in the numbers in Society. Owing to the drought, there will be a considerable falling off in all the financial reports.

The preachers are generally in good health and fine spirits. Two of our number have died during the past year, viz: Hamilton and Robinson. They were both good and true men, and fell at their posts. Eight were admitted on trial, and one received by transfer. One has been discontinued, and one located. A few others are changing their relations to supernumerary and superannuated. There will be plenty left on the effective list to fill the regular work.

Bishop Andrew arrived last night in rather feeble health, though able to preside to-day. He was detained on the way by ill health, and to avoid night travel in the stage, concluded to take it more slowly and safely. Of course, no one blamed him for this, yet we were extremely anxious to see him, and have his godly counsel. His presence in the Chair, which he graces with such dignity of appearance and manner, and to which he brings the influence of a ripe experience and long-tried devotion to this Church, had a fine effect upon the Conference. Truly our Church could not get along without her Bishops.

Bro. Abbey, Financial Secretary, is with us transacting business in his usual business-like way. He will probably visit Galveston before going to Chappel Hill, the seat of the Texas Conference.

Bro. Shipman is here attending to the interests of the Advocate and Depository.

The Methodists here have built a fine brick Church at a cost of some nine thousand dollars, which will be dedicated to-morrow, provided they can raise the sum of seventeen or eighteen hundred dollars to-night, to pay it out of debt. I hope they will succeed.

The citizens of Jefferson have manifested great generosity in entertaining the preachers. The congregations attending divine service are large, and a decided religious interest manifested.

Our Missionary Society will hold its anniversary on Monday evening. The usual symptoms of hard times, I fear, will be manifest, but I must not anticipate.

J. W. Fields.

Jefferson, Oct. 27th, 1860.

HOLSTON CONFERENCE.

Met in Ashville, N. C., Oct. 17th, and adjourned 23d. Bishop Payne presiding.

The following preachers were admitted on trial: C. K. Miller, Andrew J. Frazier, Francis A. Farley, J. M. Summer, Enoch W. Moore, Philip L. Chambers, H. B. Swisher, Hiram Eblin, J. L. Mann, Robt. S. Blackburn, J. R. Ballew, A. R. Wilson, W. H. Talley, and F. Crumley.

Re-admitted: J. H. Bruner, T. J. Pope, and J. B. Little.

Moses Seaton, R. K. Scruggs, M. Foy, A. C. Copland, and T. W. Williamson were granted a location.

A. F. English, J. F. S. Haffaker, and G. W. Renfro, were granted a supernumerary relation. R. W. Patty [illegible] superannuated relation.

[illegible] ates, were returned effective. Willis Ingle, [illegible] James Cumming, C. D. Smith, T. Sullins, W. B. Winton, and John Alley, were continued on the superannuated list.

The Treasurer of the Missionary Society reported that the collection was over $4,300—a considerable increase over last year.

W. C. Graves was appointed a committee to prepare the Minutes of the Conference for publication, and to have them published in pamphlet form.

The Secretary announced the following statistics: white members, 41,317; white probationers, 6,048; colored members, 4,168; colored probationers, 622; local preachers, 418. Total, 52,649. Total last year 50,191; increase, 2,458. There is included in the above, 150 Indians. There are 118 travelling preachers.

Greenville, Tenn., was fixed upon as the place to hold the next session.

TENESSEE CONFERENCE.

From the Nashville Christian Advocate of the 1st inst. we gather the following items of the late session of the Tennessee Conference:

Admitted on trial: 21.

Re-admitted: 6.

Received by transfer: 3, viz., Harrison A. Graves, from Texas Conference; Robert A. Young, from St. Louis Conference; Joseph Cross, from Rio Grande Conference.

Located: 5.

Discontinued at their own request: 4.

Died during the year: 3, viz., Alex. R. Erwin, Wm. J. Cooley, and Coleman H. Cross.

Numbers: total, 49,245; being an increase of 3,520.

Missionary collection: $7,434 25.

Sunday School money: $2,299 65.

Eleven members were transferred to other Conferences.

THE D.D. QUESTION.

At the meeting in Lynchburg, on the 10th inst, of the Old School Synod of Virginia, a resolution was offered by one of the members, proposing to strike out all honorary titles from the minutes. Dr. Junkin was opposed to such a movement. He promptly arose, and in a speech of ability, interspersed with considerable wit, entered into the nature and origin of the title of D.D., &c.; he contended that every man was de facto a Doctor of Divinity who was licensed to preach the Gospel, and the title was not therefore a misnomer. Every licensed minister was a teacher of divinity. The title of Reverend was a proper one. Ministers were and ought to be reverenced. The term President, Director and Moderator might, with the same propriety, be abolished, as there was no authority for their use in the Bible, and yet they were all proper. Why not give them all up? There was no doing without terms of distinction; they were necessary. He thought all opposition to it originated in vanity. He appealed to the Synod not to drop these titles. They have their origin in reason and common sense.

REVIVAL MEETINGS IN GERMANY.

A writer in the "News of the Churches" says that "In some parts of Germany, prayer meetings are held for the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, and the brethren are longing for a revival such as has visited other lands. At the pastoral Conference in Berlin the matter was discussed, and some of the pastors were able to speak from personal experience of the happy results of similar gracious dispensations in their own parishes. In one district in the Grand Duchy of Hesse, a movement has been in progress since the beginning of the year, and several individuals have been struck down at the prayer meeting, or afterwards in their own houses. In three villages about a hundred converts have found peace in believing on Jesus, and the work is still progressing."

AUTHORS AND BOOKS.

New York, Nov. 13, 1860.

In my last I gave you some quotations from Mr. Coventry Patmore's last Poem, "Faithful for Ever," and added my opinion, that it is a failure. It is only right that you should know that Mr. Ruskin's opinion is the other way. He writes to one of the London critical journals, remonstrating against its adverse criticism. He says: "The poem is, to the best of my perception and belief, a singularly perfect piece of art; containing, as all good art does, many very curious short-comings (to appearance), and places of rest, or of dead color; or of intended harshness, which, if they are seen or quoted without the parts of the piece to which they relate, are of course absurd enough, precisely as the discords in a fine piece of music would be, if you played them without their resolutions. * * The poem is not meant for a song, nor calculated for an hour's amusement; it is, as I said, to the best of my belief, a finished and tender work of very noble art. Whatever on this head may be the final judgment of the public, I am bound, for my own part, to express my obligation to Mr. Patmore, as one of my severest models and tutors in use of English, and my respect for him as one of the truest and tenderest thinkers who have ever illustrated the most important; because commonest, states of noble human life."

This is high praise, coming from Mr. Ruskin, and is quite sufficient to console Mr. Patmore for all the adverse opinions he has had the opportunity to read during the last month.

Nevertheless I stick to my first opinion.

While most of the British press have done justice to the splendid welcome which our people gave to the Prince of Wales, one or two are not satisfied, and to prove cause for dissatisfaction, go into some comical misrepresentations of our behavior. The Leader complains that the Prince's visit was "simply regarded as an occasion for mobbing the streets, shouting, pushing, and indulging in every kind of vulgar disorder. There is no spark of chivalry in the lower classes of the Americans. They have no respect for the name of "stranger;" no regard for refined feelings; no sense of the commonest duties of hospitality. There is far more chivalry, far more dignity, far more of gentlemanly feeling among the wild North American Indians, than among the Yankee mob. The latter are eaten up with the grossest egotism, and with the most vulgar and offensive self-importance. The better classes of the people have exhibited the same vulgarity in the rude way in which they have thrust themselves under the notice of the Prince. At the public receptions, both men and women have presented themselves in every variety of outre and unbecoming costume, and "cute Yankees" have introduced themselves with their shop cards printed over with puffing advertisements of their wares. And these, according to their own estimate of themselves, are the greatest people on the face of the earth." I think this is very funny indeed. Just as funny as it is untrue.

The Prince's visit to the grave of Washington causes another Journal to "wonder if the Prince remembered, while contemplating that tomb, that the man, whose bones lay beneath, once laid a plot to kidnap his grand-uncle, Prince William Henry, afterwards William the Fourth."

This is a curious fact, which seems to have escaped our penny-a-liners here, who indeed are not too well versed in history, having too much to do with the present to care much for the past. Prince William, when a midshipman in the British navy, passed the winter of 1782 in the city of New York. The revolutionary army was then approaching the city, and Colonel Ogden, one of Washington's officers, wrote to the General, proposing to carry the Prince off. The following is a copy of the letter which General Washington wrote to Colonel extant:— [illegible] occasion, the original of which is still

"To Col. Ogden, of the 1st Jersey Regiment.

"Sir,—The spirit so conspicuous in your plan for surprising, in their quarters, and bringing off the Prince William Henry and Admiral Digby, merits applause, and you have my authority to make the attempt in any manner, and at such time as your judgment shall direct. I am fully persuaded that it is unnecessary to caution you against offering insult or indignity to the persons of the Prince or the Admiral, should you be so fortunate as to capture them; but it may not be amiss to press the propriety of a proper line of conduct upon the party you command. In case of success, you will, as soon as you get them to a place of safety, treat them with all possible respect; but you are to delay no time in conveying them to Congress, and report your proceedings, with a copy of these orders.

"Given at Morris Town, the 28th day of March, 1782.

"G. Washington."

Note.—Take care not to touch upon the ground which is agreed to be neutral, viz: from Raway to Newark and four miles back."

Upon the receipt of this letter, Colonel Ogden drew out an elaborate plan of operations. Four men armed with naked buyonets, and in the disguise of sailors, were appointed to seize the sentinels at the Prince's quarters. Eight men, including guides, preceded by two men, with each a crow-bar, were commissioned to force open the doors, and seize the Prince, the Admiral, and the young noblemen. Among the necessaries set down in the programme are, "Two crow-bars, two axes, four dark lanterns, and four large oil-cloths"—the oil-cloths, it may be presumed, to smother the cries of the Prince, the Admiral, and the young noblemen. Happily, however, just as the plan was about to be put into operation, Sir Henry Clinton, then in New York, got wind of what was on foot, and Colonel Ogden's flatboats, with the kidnapping party on board, were discovered just as they were entering the river. This effectually disconcerted the project, and the Prince remained unmolested until the sailing of the squadron.

As I lately had something to say of libraries in this country and England, the following curious information about libraries in China will not be amiss. It is given in the German Geographical Journal, and is therefore authentic. "The Chinese have no public libraries, in the sense we attribute to the word, and even the establishments expressly intended by the founder for use of the public (as that in the place of Kienking, at Hung-chau) are only accessible to persons provided with special permission from the authorities, and are, consequently, very little frequented. There are, however, a great many private libraries, the most important perhaps being that belonging to the Fan family at Ningpo, which, according to its catalogue, contains 4094 works, comprised in 52,799 kienen, or small volumes. When Kienking, in 1774, determined to complete the collections of the Imperial library, he appealed to the literati throughout the Empire for the loan or purchase of all rare or curious works, and the Fan family supplied 696 valuable books. For that service they received a complete copy of the Ku-kin-tu-shu-chi-thing, or encyclopedia of books, ancient and modern, which was printed with moveable copper types by order of the Emperor Kangbi. It contains notices of 10,000 works on astronomy and other sciences. This library of the Fan family is guarded with as much jealousy as the fabled garden, of the Hesperides. Is is situated on the Southern quarter of Ningpo, in the center of a large garden, decorated with all the resources of Chinese art.—Every member of the family has a lock to the library, of which he keeps the key, so that all the family must be present when the library is entered. The same regulation prevails in other family libraries. The Zeitschrift thinks that these extensive collections of books may contain unexplored treasures of information, and earnestly advises the Geographical Society recently established at Shanghai to study them, and extract whatever may concern the science of geography, ancient or modern. It is somewhat remarkable that geographical works are scarce in these libraries, but very numerous in general circulation. They are called Tschi, and are mostly historical and topographical sketches of particular districts. For the province Tsche-Klang alone they form a collection of 700 volumes, and for the whole empire the number can hardly be less than 10,000.

With all their books, however, they appear to be rather ignorant on astronomical affairs. On July 20th, of this year, there was an eclipse of the moon, which caused the following notice to be placarded about the walls of Canton: "To the Red Button Mandarin Loo, Governor of Quang-Tung and Quang-Si Provinces and Board of Soldiers, dated the 10th of Hewning, the 16th day of the 6th month. Entreat and pray to save and protect the moon from being devoured on the 18th day of the 6th moon. The eclipse will commence on the 16th day of the 6th moon at 11 40." Then follows particulars of time of contact, etc. After which—"All the Mandarins, both civil and military, together with all the people, must do the utmost in their power to save and protect her from such a fearful calamity; and, mind, do not be disobedient."

Fancy such a notice stuck up on the dead walls in Broadway!

The pecuniary success of Mr. Tennyson's last poem "The Idylls of the King," show a very wide and remarkable appreciation of good poetry. The sale has been so enormous as to throw into the shade even that of "Waverly" novels and Byron poems in the old days,—regard being had to the dimensions of the Poet-Laureate's little volume. Report speaks of Mr. Tennyson as engaged on a new poem, the subject, "Boadicea." Evidently, since the comparative failure of his "Maud," he has seen the increasing difficulty of idealizing the present, and resolves to retreat more and more into a remote past.

Derby & Jackson of this city have just published a very useful work, "A Hand-Book of Universal Literature," from the latest and best authorities, by Mrs. Anne C. Lynch Botta, in one volume, 12mo. It is designed for popular reading, and as a Text-Book for schools and colleges. It embraces the Literatures of the Jews, the Syrians, the Chaldeans, the Phœnecians, the Hindoos, the Persians, the Chinese, the Egyptians, the Greeks, and the Romans, in ancient times; and of the Arabians, the Italians, the French, the Spaniards, the Portuguese, the Scandinavians, the Slaves, the Finns, the Hungarians, the Turks, the Armenians, the Dutch, the Germans, the English, and the Americans, in modern days.

Edward Everett is to write a life of Franklin, as a companion work to his life of Washington just published.

D. Appleton & Co. have just published a condensed edition of Dean Trench's "Notes on the Parables of Our Lord."

Messrs. Ticknor & Fields announce as "ready," "Guesses at Truth," by Two Brothers; "Lake House," Translated by Nathaniel Greene, from the German of Fanny Lewald; "The Recreations of a Country Pastor."

Messrs. Gould & Lincoln will shortly publish "The Ecclesiastical Law of Massachusetts," by Edward Buck, Esq.; "The Life of Trust," a Narrative of the Dealings of God with the Rev. George Muller; with an Introduction, by Francis Wayland, D. D. "The Romance of Natural History," by Phillip Henry Gosse; Illustrated.

The November number of Blackwood contains articles on Civil Service Appointments—Nomination and Competion; Carpe Diem; The Romance of Agostini—Part III.; The Administration of India; Judicial Puzzles—The Annesley Case; Ary Scheffer; Norman Sinclair.: an Autobiography—Part X.; The Courtesies of War; Dando, the Oyster Eater; Ships of War in Armor.

The North British Review, which is not yet out, will contain articles on—Modern Thought; Its Progress and Consummation.—II. The Disturbances in Syria.—III. Leigh Hunt.—IV. The Spanish Republics of South America.—V. The Province of Logic and recent British Logicians; Sir William Hamilton's Lectures.—VI. Lord Macaulay's Place in English Literature.—VII. American Humor.—VIII. Revivals.—IV. The Martyrdom of Galileo.—X. The Sicilian Game.

A COUNTRY CHURCH.

It is a sweet picture—that of the little low-gabled church, nestled among the trees in Shady Hollow. The golden light of the summer sun falls through the over-hanging branches; and checks the old brown roof with waving shadows. The smooth green turf in front of the door, slopes gently to the little brooklet that flows round the roots of the maples and hollies.

The house is plain and old-fashioned within as well as without. Here are no sculptured ornaments, no imposing columns, no fringed and tasseled hangings; but through the open windows the eye rests upon the grand old wood, with its lofty arches and magnificent colonnades. The flowering vines twine round the stems of the trees, and hang their beautiful drapery of buds and blossoms from the topmost branches. The light breeze gently stirs the coral clusters of the woodbine, and murmurs softly through the dark green leaves.

"It is a most delicious calm
That resteth everywhere—
The holiness of soul-sung psalm,
Of felt but voiceless prayer."

The rustic little church is dear from association: here we have listened to the story of a Savior's love, told in gentle, winning, persuasive tones.

"It seemed that an angel had brightened the rod,
And left in each bosom a message from God."

But to-day our own pastor is absent, a stranger is to officiate.

"Good morning, aunty Smith; won't you take this seat by the window—it's so cool and pleasant?"

"No, I thank you; I'm a little hard of hearing, and I want to get as near the preacher as possible. Ain't it most time for him to be here?"

"Yes, it's quite time; and I believe that's him now, that tall young man, with light blue eyes, and red—no, not exactly red, bright auburn hair; yes, that's him."

Service commences: a hymn is sung in sweet and solemn strains; a prayer goes up to God for his blessing, and the preacher takes his text.

Ah! a Bonaparte! How he thunders! He thumps and stamps as if noise was indeed the only requisite in a preacher. The dear old Bible meekly endures the "pelting of a pitiless storm" of fisticuffs; and in the heat of declamation, when words wax loudest, and demonstrations grow strongest, I tremble lest the big white pitcher at his elbow should exhibit a striking and forcible illustration of his zeal and efficiency.

But time will pass, whether he treads upon roses or brambles; the long sermon came to an end, and the preacher dismissed the congregation.

"Could you hear well, aunty Smith?"

"Hear! why, Leevy, I was almost stunned. I did wish I had taken that seat by the window. The old Bible fared badly, didn't it? I am afraid there ain't much of it left."

"It had a trying time of it, aunty Smith; but I believe it's all there yet."

"Good morning, Mrs. Smith; how did you enjoy the preaching this morning?"

"I hope you don't call that preaching? I call it ranting. Dear me! the noise and confusion made me so nervous, I thought I should have to leave the house."

"Well, well, Mrs. Smith, there may be, after all, a real diamond under that rough surface, that will shine out brilliantly when it is well polished."

"It'll take a heap o' hard rubbing, Leevy, to polish him."

"Perhaps so; some natures require more polishing than others. 'Men's natures,' says a celebrated author, 'are as various as their features; some, resembling pearls, are born with all their beautiful lustre about them; others, like diamonds, wait to receive their splendor from the slow touches of the polisher.'"

Olivia.

November, 1860.

THE THIRD AND LAST, FROM THAT BOOK ABOUT MISSISSIPPI.

"Mississippi Territory, April 19th, 1804.—Since I wrote to you last, some things have occurred which move me to trouble you with another letter. Brother Gibson has gone to his long, long home. He preached his last sermon on New Year's day, and it was profitable to a great many souls. Since then he has not been able, at various times, to hold family prayer. I was with him four weeks before his death, and he informed me that he was not afraid to die, and seemed to wish for the hour. I visited him again about seven hours before he expired, but he was then speechless. On the fourth day of April he was taken with a high fever, and about midnight he began to vomit blood, and in a short time lost his senses. He was restless in the fore-part of the day, but grew weak and calm in the evening, and about eight o'clock he resigned his spirit to God in peace. He died at the widow Gibson's, near the Walnut-hills, Claiborne county, on the 5th day of April, 1804. He was exemplary in his conduct, and useful in his ministerial labours. He continued laboring in the vineyard of the Lord as long as he was able to preach or pray. He expressed some time before, and in his last illness, a great degree of humility, patience, and resignation to the will of God, though much debilitated with the consumption for two or three years past. He was esteemed a real christian in this Territory, by the righteous and the people of the world. His work of faith and labor of love is still prospering in this place. His heart is no longer the seat of trouble and torturing pain, it ceases to flutter, and beat, it never shall flutter again.

"The Lord has made bare his arm in another part of the circuit a few days past, and some have tasted of the good word of God and the power of the world to come, and others seem deeply awakened.—Hezekiah Harriman."

M.

CONVERSIONS IN INDIA.

The Christianization of the Kols in the Chota Nagpore district is proceeding at a very rapid rate. Two thousand have already been baptized, or rather, this was the number some six months ago. The number of those who have broken caste, and have applied for baptism, is also very large. Ninety were baptized in January last. A missionary writes that, in the neighborhood of Ranchee, the Gospel is spreading like a fire in the jungle. As many as eight hundred villages have received the Gospel. So many Kols were pouring into the station from the jungle, that three missionaries were occupied all day in giving them instruction. The Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal visited the district in January, and was greatly astonished at what he saw. His Secretary remarked to the missionaries: "There was never seen such a sight in India as this." This referred to a gathering of about two thousand native Christians, at which he was present. From the province of Pachete, Kebreepunthees have presented themselves to the number of forty-six, out of eleven villages, asking instruction. They say that large bodies of this sect are ready to embrace Christianity. There are six missionaries in the Chota Nagpore field, Germans sent forth originally by Gossner. In Lucknow and the surrounding villages, eighty-nine natives have been baptized since the rebellion.

METHODIST CONVERTS.

In reply to the remark of the Southern Churchman, that the great instability of Methodist converts may be traced to the want of a sound conversion in the majority of those who apostatize, Rev. Paul Whitehead says in the Richmond Christian Advocate: "His thousands of persons connected with families churches, have been converted in our meetings all in the Episcopal church. Indeed, in [illegible] whole growth is of converts made among Methodists. I saw two confirmations in one parish of this diocese within ten or fifteen years past, consisting of fifteen or twenty persons, of whom all except one or two had been recently converted at Methodist revivals. Many [illegible] raised in our church and converted in our revivals, have been persuaded by Episcopal ministers to join their church. These ministers (the very same in some instances we know of, who talk about excitement and sympathy in our meetings,) have declared their confidence in the piety of these converts, and treated and instructed them, after getting them into their fold, as people whom they had good reason to believe were regenerated."

M.

Monument to Robert Raikes.—At a meeting held in Gloucester, England, on the anniversary of the birth-day of Robert Raikes, the founder of Sunday-schools, the propriety of erecting a monument to the philanthropic cobbler was suggested, and one speaker hoped that the London Committee would inaugurate the movement by recommending a voluntary penny subscription from all the Sunday-schools in the world, for the erection in Gloucester of a handsome building, to be called the Raikes Sunday-school Hall; this building to be devoted to classes of youth and young men, on Sundays, for their instruction and advancement in higher branches of Christianity than were generally dwelt upon in the ordinary Sunday-school; while it might also be used during the week for the diffusion of useful secular knowledge, and the higher branches of science and literature.

Southern University.—Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, pastor of the Methodist Church at Greensboro', Ala., writes us that the University has opened with flattering prospects—65 students matriculated, and the number was expected to reach 70 by the first of November. The students are remarkably steady. The Church and Sabbath-school are also prosperous. Prof. Lupton, of the University, is superintendent of the Sabbath-school, and has a class of about 20 young men in the Greek Testament—a feature worthy of imitation.

Dedication.—Our friends attending the Louisiana Conference, will please remember that the beautiful Church recently built at Baton Rouge will be dedicated on the Sabbath immediately preceding the Conference, by the Rev. Charles K. Marshall. See the "notice."

Author of "The River of Time."—A correspondent from Jackson, La., writes us that he is of opinion that the author of the beautiful little poem, "The River of Time," recently published in the Advocate, is B. F. Taylor, formerly, probably now, of the Chicago Journal.

Father Chiniquy.—This reformed Canadian Priest is now in the north of Ireland, making collections for his mission work and settlement in the United States. He has been received to a very friendly manner. Father C. has been also in Edinburg and Glasgow.

Adams' Express.—This "Institution" brings us under obligation every week. We hereby tender our thanks, and heartily commend the Express to the patronage of our friends.

Swedenborgians in Great Britain.—The annual assembly of the New Church in Scotland was held, in Paisley, on Friday, the 7th of September. The church was tastefully decorated with flowers and evergreens. The number present was about 200.

The Mississippi Conference is now in session at Natchez.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVCCATE.

NOVEMBER 21, 1860.

APPOINTMENTS OF EAST TEXAS CONFERENCE.

San Augustine Dist.—S. A. Williams P. E.; San Augustine circuit, H. W. Moore; Shelbyville mission, J. Patillo; Carthage circuit, W. K. Wilson; Douglas mission, J. R. Cox; Melrose, C. L. Hamil; Jasper, D. M. Stovall; Milam, R. M. Lilston; Newton, J. M. Hall.

Marshall Dist.—H. Lane P. E.; Marshall station, J. H. Tullis; Harrison circuit and colored mission, Nell Brown; Dangerfield, J. L. Angell; Gilmer station, John C. Woolham; Gilmer circuit, H. M. Scrivener; Cuffeyville, J. T. P. Irvine; Linden, J. W. H. Hamil; Elysian Fields, A. W. Goodjoin; Jefferson station, Wm. H. Hill.

Clarksville Dist.—J. B. Raib, P. E.; Clarksville and McKenzie College, R. W. Thompson; Boston, J. S. Methis; Savannah, J. H. Lowe; Blossom Prairie, David Austin; Paris station and circuit, J. H. Landreth and C. W. Rains; Honey Grove, J. W. Chalk, A. C. McDougal, Supernumerary; Bonham, W. F. Bates; Paris Female Institute, James Graham; McKenzie College, J. W. P. McKenzie President.

Dallas Dist.—W. H. Hughes P. E.; Dallas circuit, W. T. Melugin; McKinney, J. R. Bellamy; Sherman station, J. M. Binkley; Sherman circuit, J. Stubblefield, A. R. Dixon Supernumerary; Gainsville mission, E. Couch; Montague and Decatur mission, Andrew Cumming and W. Allen; Denton, W. Shaw; Rock Well, M. Thompson; Kaufman, M. G. Simpson.

Greenville Dist.—Levi R. Dennis, P. E.; Greenville circuit, J. C. Smith; Black Jack Grove mission, C. J. Cock; Ladonia, to be supplied; Tarrant, L. C. Crouse; Mount Pleasant, J. L. Terry; Quitman, J. M. Boyd; Canton and Cedar mission, to be supplied; Garden Valley, L. B. Hickman.

Palestine Dist.—J. W. Fields, P. E.; Palestine station, W. J. Joyce; Kickapoo, R. M. Wamack; Tylerstation, Wm. Witcher; Tyler circuit, W. K. Mason; Jacksonville, F. M. Stovall; Knoxville, S. K. Stovall; Athens, M. H. Neely, S. D. Sansom Supernumerary; Henderson station, N. W. Burks; Henderson circuit, H. W. Cammieg; Fowler Institute, N. W. Burks principal, W. P. Patille professor; Starville Female High School, W. G. Williams, Principal; Palestine Male High School, to be supplied.

Rusk Dist.—R. S. Finley, P. E.; Rusk station, J. H. M'Lean; Crocket circuit, J. A. Scruggs, and W. C. Collins; Rusk circuit, one to be supplied, S. C. Box, Superannuneray; Palestine circuit, A. B. Manlon; Randolph, W. J. Popham; Sumpter, L. C. Chandler; Shook's Bluff mission, J. W. Overall; Homer circuit, E. P. Rogers; Mount Enterprise, Samuel Lynch.

Woodville Dist.—A. Young, P. E.; Woodville circuit, R. A. Wootee; Livingston, W. P. Petty; Liberty, John Adams; Wallaceville mission, W. F. Cumming; Beaumont, F. C. Dowdy; Sabine Pass, A Hinkle; Hardon mission, M. Mathews; Orange circuit, John C. Jones; Agents for Book Depository, J. Shook, W. W. Caulder; J. E. Carnes, Editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, and Member of Liberty Quarterly Conference.

Superannuated—F. Wilson, George West, F. G. Faucett, Wm. Craig, A. H. Shanks, Nathan S. Johnson.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

METHODIST.

First Methodist Preacher in Africa.—A writer in the September issue of the Irish Evangelist claims for Irish Methodism the honor of giving to Africa, as well as to America, the first Methodist preacher. The Irish Conference of 1813 gave authority to Dr. Coke to take seven young men of the Conference, and establish missions at the Cape of Good Hope, Ceylon, and Java. John M'Kenney, a native of Coleraine, and of Methodist parentage, was one of the seven who volunteered to go out with Dr. Coke as a missionary, and was left by the doctor at the Cape of Good Hope. He was the first Methodist missionary established permanently on the continent. Through him Irish Methodism now claims to be the parent of Methodism in Africa.

Itinerancy in France.—At the last French Methodist Conference, the subject of itineracy was discussed, and though all the brethren declared themselves in favor of the itinerating plan, it was argued that in some cases, on missionary ground, an absolute rule for removing a man might prove quite disastrous, and on addition was made to the rule, so that exceptional cases are now admitted, to be determined by the Conference.

Primitive Methodist Jubilee.—On Monday the 31st ult., the jubilee of the Primitive Methodists was celebrated by that body in Hamilton, Canada West. Their Church in John St. was well filled, and interesting addresses were delivered.

More Forms.—The Fifth General Conference of the Wesleyan Methodist Connection, lately in session at Fulton, N. Y., recommends a regular form to be pursued in receiving persons into church-membership. The form of admission is to be incorporated in the forthcoming Discipline.

Anniversary in Old John Street Church.—On Sunday, the 28th ult., the friends of John-street Church, New York, held their annual jubilee, commemorative of the dedication of the first Methodist Church in America. As usual, it was an occasion of great interest.

Methodist Protestant.—The General Convention of the Methodist Protestant Church met at Pittsburg, Penn., November 14th. The number of delegates was 58.

What Next?—We learn that the Troy Conference has petitioned the Vermont Legislature for authority to confer the degree of "Mistress of Literature."

PRESBYTERIAN.

The Growth of Presbyterianism.—Rev. Dr. McDowell, of New York, in his half century sermon, makes the following statements of the growth of the Presbyterian Church in the United States in half a century; the Presbyterian Church was divided in 1838, since which there have been two General Assemblies. Both assemblies should be taken into account in compering the Presbyterian Church as it now is with what it was fifty years ago. In the general assembly of 1807, the first we find, the number of delegates in attendance was 54; the number of the two assemblies which met last spring was 467. The number of synods when I entered the ministry was seven; number now, as reported to the last assemblies, is 51. The number of presbyteries when I [illegible]. The number of churches was 544; now it is 4,647; and the number of communicants then was 17,871; now it is 360,881. According to this statement the synods have been multiplied seven times; the presbyteries eight times; the ministers ten times; the churches seven times, and the communicants twenty times.

METHODIST.

Meeting of the A. R. Synod of the South.—This Syeod met at Hopewell, Ga., on the 8th of October. It is composed of 64 ordained ministers and 14 licentiates. Of this number 45 ordained ministers were present, and a goodly number of elders; Rev. Dr. Boyce was chosen Moderator. The Seminary question came up again, as a large part of the Church was dissatisfied with its location at Nashville, Tenn., and the vote stood about two to one in favor of its location at Due West, S. C. Rev. J. P. Pressley, D.D., was elected Professor of Systematic Theology. Mr. John Kennedy was elected Professor of Greek Literature in Erskine College, in place of Dr. Pressly.—The subject of communion came up, but was postponed indefinitely, by a vote of 27 to 26. There was much feeling on the subject, and if the resolution to censure the Churches practicing open communion had prevailed, it would have split the Church On the 10th, the Synod adjourned to meet at Oak Hill, Wilcox Co., Ala., on the 3d Monday of September, 1861.

Colored Members.—The number of colored members was first reported to the general assembly, separately from the white members, in 1847. The number reported that year was 2,755. The nember the present year was 13,837. For thirteen years the average increase per annum has been 851. This is a very small increase, considering the vast numbers of them that are owned by members of that Church. And even this small increase must be ascribed, in part, to defects in the reports of Presbyteries sent up in the year 1848. The increase in the last year was only 143, but the year previous it was 1379.

Cumberland Presbyterian Mission.—The correspondent of the N. Y. World writes, that the projected Cumberland Presbyterian Mission is perhaps to be opened in Servia. Their first missionary, Rev. J. C. Armstrong, has arrived in Constantinople, with his family. He intends to remain until Spring, and then to proceed to his special field of labor. He has received a hearty welcome from the missionaries of the American Board now in Constantinople.

EPISCOPAL.

Growth of the Protestant E. Church in the United States.—From statistics published in the American Quarterly Review, for October, we learn that from 1835 to 1859 the number of dioceses has increased from twenty-two to thirty-three. The number of bishops, including missionary, has increased from sixteen to forty-three. The number of clergy as reported, has risen from 763 to 2094. The number of parishes has swelled from 590 (as reported in twelve dioceses) to 2120, as reported in 33 dioceses. The number of communicants has increased from 36,416 in nineteen dioceses to 136,611 in 33 dioceses.

New-Jersey Missionary Society.—A meeting of the Protestant Episcopal Missionary Society of New Jersey, was held in Trinity Church, Mount Holly, on the 25th ult. This Society was organized about three years ago, on the voluntary principle, with the desire of awakening a renewed interest in the missionary work of the Diocese, which had sadly declined, and also of aiding pious young men who need help in preparing for the ministry. It has been eminently successful. It has now five parishes depending on its appropriations; and four young men are sustained in preparing for the ministry of the Church. A special feature of this Society is, that it keeps its funds always a year in advance, hence there are no disappointments in meeting its engagements.

BAPTIST.

The Liberty Association.—The Territory of this Association is in Tenn. and Ala. Its last meeting was held with the Zion Hill Church, Madison co., Ala. It consists of 24 churches; which churches have an aggregate of 1764 members, including 390 colored. Amount contributed for all purposes by the churches, $342 43; besides which $81 was paid and pledged for the support of a beneficiary at Union University, Murfreesboro, Tenn.

Quite a number of Baptist clergymen in Kentucky, recently met and resolved to drop the sectarian name of Baptist, and call themselves the Disciples of Christ.

Death of Elder B. F. Lea.—The Mississippi Baptist announces the death of this well known Baptist minister.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Churches in Baltimore.—Roman Catholics 21; Protestant Episcopal Episcopal 20; Presbyterian 16; Methodist-Episcopal 20; Methodist Protestant 6; African Methodist Episcopal 5; German Reformed 4; Baptist; 10 Christian Church 1; Lutheran 9; Evangelical Association 2; Independent Churches 2; Seamen's Union Bethel 2; Friends 3; Universalist 1; Unitarian 1; Swedenborgian 3; Jewish Synagogues 4; United Brethren in Christ; 1 Otterbine Church; 1 St. Peter Evangelical Lutheran Congregation of the Unaltered Congregation 1; making an aggregate of 167 church edifices in the city. Several more are now proposed to be built.

Missionary Movement in New York.—The New York Evangelical Alliance, an organization based upon the midnight meeting movement in London, held a meeting lately, at which it was decided to have open-air preaching during the spring and summer months, and for the occupation of theatres or halls during the winter season. One place is to be opened upon Broadway every Sunday evening. Halls and cellars are recommended in the lower wards of this city. The members, mostly young men connected with the different evangelical churches, have entered into the matter with spirit.

French Protestants.—In the present aspects of French Protestantism there are said to be many very encouraging facts. It is believed that there are now about one million six hundred thousand Protestants in France—an increase of perhaps half a million since 1800.

Religious Movement in Prussia.—A Prussian clergyman has come to this country on a special mission from the religious department of the government, to investigate the great religious movement of 1857-8, which still lives in the daily union prayer meetings. They have heard of the great revival in this country, and have read our publications relating to it. The King and the people feel a deep interest in the subject, and he has been sent over here to gather up the results and learn the facts. He has traveled over England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, with his inquiries on his tongue, and now he is here where the revival began.

New York City Missionary Society.—The City Missionary Society employs eight male and thirteen female visitors who have made during the year, 20,204 visits, of which 1,819, were to the sick; have distributed 112,241 tracts and 187 bibles and testaments; held 903 social meetings; gathered 365 children to Sabbath Schools; aided 608 families.

The Bible Society.—To the praise of that noble institution—the British and Foreign Bible Society—the Word of God is now freely circulating in almost all of Italy. The agents of this Society have followed close on the victorious armies with their Bibles and Testaments, in the Italian and French languages. They may now be found in the book stores, and in the stalls of the hawkers. The people receive them with avidity.

DOMESTIC.

We are in possession of the following important intelligence per telegrams received in this city yesterday:—

The Pettifeat Crisis.—From New York we learn that the secession movement in the South greatly affects the money market in that city, and transactions are carried on with great difficulty. The Bank of Sing Sing closed its doors last Saturday. It is expected that others will soon follow. Senator Toombs has not yet resigned his seat in the United States Senate, but intends doing so next March, unless Georgia secedes from the Union. We are informed from Charleston that Hon. M. L. Bonham, M. C., will not take part in the proceedings of the approaching session of Congress. It is also understood that the whole South Carolina delegation will resign before the meeting of Congress. A despatch from Washington City states that the Representatives in Congress from California are in favor of the formation of an Independent Republic on the borders of the Pacific. Another dispatch from the same city informs us that Mr. Floyd, Secretary of War, has expressed his determination to deliver up the Forts and Arsenals in South Carolina intact to his successor on the 4th of March next. A telegram from Alpalachicola, Fla., says the majority of newspapers in that State advocate strong secession principles, and are urging the Governor to convene the Legislature at as early a day as practicable.

The following we gather from our exchanges:—

LOUISIANA.

The Political Crisis.—It is now well understood that the Louisiana Legislature will be called together by the Governor; at an early moment, to pass a law authorizing a Convention of the people, to take into consideration the present state of the affairs of the country.

The Sugar Crop.—The Houma Ceres learns that the planters in Terrebonne are making a fair article of sugar.—A majority of them are under the impression that the canes are fast deteriorating—in some pieces they are badly sprouted, and do not at present contain as much saccharine matter as previous to the late disastrous storm.

MISSISSIPPI.

The Political Crisis.—The Legislature will meet next Monday, for the special purpose of taking action in reference to the election of Mr. Lincoln. On Tuesday, the 13th inst., a large meeting was held in Jackson, to organize a corps of Minute Men. Among the speakers were Governor Pettus and Senator Brown. Strong secession resolutions were unanimously adopted.

Population of Mississippi.—A table published in the Mississippian, embracing returns from all the counties in the State except Hancock, Tallahatchie, and Winston, shows the increase in the population of the State, since 1850, to be 187,189.

The Gulf and Ship Island Railroad.—Madison county, Miss., voted on the 6th inst., by a majority of 134, to subscribe $100,000 to the stock of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad. Rankin county gave a similar vote by a majority of 118.

Murder near Grenada, Miss.—A negro murdered a white man last Friday week, near Grenada, Yalobusha county, Miss. His motives for so doing did not transpire. The murderer was arrested and finally confessed his crime.

ALABAMA.

The Political Crisis.—From the Montgomery Advertiser of the 13th inst., we learn that the Governor of Alabama, after consultation with the most profound lawyers of the State, is of opinion that he is not authorized by the wording of the act of the Legislature to issue his proclamation for the election of delegates to the convention, until after the electors have formally voted in the electoral college on the first Wednesday in December. We are authorized to state, however, and we desire our readers to remember, that the proclamation will appear immediately after the first Wednesday in December. The election for delegates will be held as short a time thereafter as possible, and the convention will meet on or about the first Monday in January. A dispatch from Montgomery, dated the 16th, says: Gov. Moore will call the State Convention on the 6th proximo.

The Vote in Alabama.—In the forty-one counties (twenty-nine official) heard from, the majority for Breckinridge over Bell and Douglas combined, is 6400. The counties yet to hear from are Baldwin, Blount, Coffee, Covington, Dale, Fayette, Henry, Lawrence, Marion, Washington, Walker and Winston, in which the probable majority of Breckinridge over both Bell and Douglas will be 4500, making in the entire State about 11,000 majority.

A Heavy Fine.—At the last term of the court at Havneville, the Mobile Medical college opened on Wednesday under very encouraging auspices. Fifty names were enrolled, and more were expected soon.

GEORGIA.

Proceedings of the Legislature.—A bill was introduced on the 16th inst., for suspending the collection of debts till the year 1866. Laid over. A resolution was introduced and passed authorizing the Governor to employ the military of Georgia against Federal coercion. The joint committee on the State of the Republic have unanimously agreed to report a bill recommending resistance. It is expected that Gov. Brown, Messrs. A. H. Stephens, H. V. Johnson, and all other leading men, will indorse the bill. It is expected to pass unanimously, the immediate secession men being in large majority.

State of Feeling in Georgia.—The leading men of all parties in conference unanimously agree to a Convention of the people. They recommend resistance, the time and mode to be settled by the Convention. Senator Toombs made a powerful secession speech on the 15th inst. He drew followed urging a Southern Confederacy with Sovereignty in the Federal Power and all State lines obliterated. Hon. A. H. Stephens delivered a long speech at Milledgeville, on the 15th inst., demanding the States which nullified the Fugitive Slave law to repeal their acts. If they refused, the South could go out of the Union with a clear conscience. The secession feeling is so strong in Savannah, that it is difficult to prevent the populace from seizing Fort Polaski. Mr. Jackson addressed an immense meeting last week in favor of the immediate secession of the slave holding States from the Union.

Increase of Property in Georgia.—According to the recent Treasury report of the State of Georgia, the taxable property returned this year over the last is $62,732,901. The increase the previous year was $70,534,762, which makes an increase in the valuation of property in that State for the last two years $133,267,663. This is the evidence that cannot be gainsayed of the growing wealth and prosperity of this great State. And yet this naked report of the Treasurer of the State gives but little idea of the real increase of wealth and progress therein. To properly estimate this, we must also take into consideration the vast increase of the population in every portion of the State; the occupation and reduction of the rich cotton lands of the South and Southwest; extension of railroads; erection of depots and other public buildings; increase of shipping, and especially the addition of two new lines of steamships, the importance of which in their bearing upon the prosperity of the State can scarcely be overrated. It is from this point of view only that we get the true dimensions of this great and growing empire.

The Vote in Georgia.—In 118 counties of Georgia, Breckinridge has 48,402; Bell 41,071; Douglas 11,574. Fourteen counties, still to hear from, gave Gov. Brown a majority of 4325.

A statue of General James Oglethrope is about to be erected in one of the public squares of the city of Savannah, Georgia. The Statue is to be colossal, and, with the pedestal, to be constructed of the best quality of Carara marble—the whole to be upward of twenty feet in height.

FLORIDA.

The State of Feeling in Florida.—We learn, per telegraph, from Washington, that a dispatch has been received there from the Governor of Florida stating that Florida follows the example of South Carolina in the movement of secession.

The Vote in Florida.—The Charleston Mercury says: "From Florida we have official returns from fifteen counties, which give Breckinridge 2364; Bell 431; and Douglas 51.—Partial returns from other counties have been received, which would indicate a majority of about 4,000 in the State for Breckinridge."

The Sponge Trade.—A Key West paper states that the amount derived from the sponge trade for the past year, in that district, was $72,000.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Charleston Banks.—There has been some misconception of the action of the S. C. Legislature in relation to their Banks. The Legislature has not, as is generally believed, directly legalized the suspension of specie payments. It is what may be called an anticipatory or ante factum law, for it evidently anticipates such an emergency, and the effect of it doubtless will be to hasten it. The bill in question contains three clauses. The first clause is to suspend the act of 1857, which requires the Banks to have one third specie to every three of circulation. The second clause of the bill suspends the operation of the seventh section of the Act of 1852, which imposes a penalty on the Banks in case of suspension. The third section provides a relief from that measure which prohibits the banks from paying out the bills of another bank.

Fasting and Prayer in Carolina.—In the South Carolina House of Representatives, on the 9th, the following resolution was adopted, and immediately sent to the Senate: Resolved, That, in view of this solemn crisis in our country's affairs, the 21st November instant, be appointed, as a day of "Fasting, Humiliation and Prayer," and that the Governor be requested to issue his proclamation, inviting the clergy and people of all denominations to assemble in their places of public worship, to implore God's direction and blessing in this our hour of difficulty, and "to give us one heart and one mind firmly to oppose, by all just and proper means, every injury to our rights."

Without a Parallel.—A correspondent of the Charleston Courier, writing from Conwayboro, S. C. says: "I know an old gentleman, aged 73 years, having five sons, and all have families. Not one of themhas ever owed a dollar, ever took a drink of spirituous liquor, ever used a cap of coffee, ever used profane language, ever was 100 miles from home, ever wanted for any thing, ever lost his vote in an election; are all Methodists and Breckinridge Democrats, and hate snakes and tobacco."

The loading of a steamship with cotton for New York, at Charleston, was discontinued on receipt of the news of Lincoln's election.

The ladies of this State are raising a subscription for the purpose of presenting a handsome testimonial to the Hon. Caleb Cushing, of Massachusetts.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Feeling in North Carolina.—The Raleigh Press says: "Never, since we have any recollection of any political results, have we seen such a feeling as pervaded our community yesterday. There was no rejoicing, on the part of either of our political parties; there was no excitement, but every man seemed to be impressed with the conviction that a struggle had been passed in which the South had been overpowered by the 'irrepressible conflict' against her rights. On the street crowds of men might have been seen in grave consultation, breathing no threats against the Union; indulging in no anathemas against this or that man, or this or that party; but gravely and calmly discussing their duties as freemen and as Southern men under the peculiar condition of affairs. Such a feeling we have never seen in our midst before. There was nothing said about secession, but the calm and determined spirit which exhibited itself in the countenances of our citizens spoke volumes. Ours are now a united people, and whatever may befall our country, one thing is certain, our people will be an unit."

Legislature of North Carolina.—The Legislature of this State will meet on the third Monday of the present month. It will probably be one of the most interesting sessions ever held since the commencement of the State Government. A United States Senator, a Judge of the Supreme Court, and three Judges of the Superior Court will be elected, and other matters of great and vital importance will be discussed and disposed of.

Cotton Raised in North Carolina.—The total number of bales of cotton raised in North Carolina for the year ending August 31, 1860, was 182,807, valued at $9,000,000. This is more than ever before produced in the State by 25 per cent. The next year's crop, ending August, 1861, it is supposed, will reach as high as 200,000 bales. This is a remarkable yield for the cotton lands of the old North State.

The Vote in North Carolina.—We find in the Wilmington Journal returns from thirty-three counties in that State, in which the vote stands as follows: Breckinridge 26,969, Bell 21,234, Douglas 1,834. Reported majorities in ten other counties give Breckinridge 2,381 majority over both Bell and Douglas. There are forty-two counties still to hear from.

New Telegraph Line.—A new line of telegraph, constructed by Adam's Express Company, has been opened between Wilmington and Charlotte, N. C.

Lieutenant Henry M. Robert, of the corps of Engineers, has been elected Professor of Engineering and Drawing in the North Carolina Military Institute. Lieutenant Robert is a native of South Carolina and graduated at West Point with the second honor of his class.

VIRGINIA.

The Political Crisis.—A telegram from Richmond, dated 15th inst., says: Governor Letcher has issued a proclamation calling an extra session of the Virginia Legislature on the 7th of January, for the purpose of taking into consideration the condition of affairs, and to determine calmly and wisely the action necessary.

The Vote in Virginia.—In 110 counties in Virginia Breckinridge's majority is 406. In the remaining 43 counties, to be heard from, Letcher's majority was 204.

MISSOURI.

City of St. Louis.—By the census just completed, St. Louis has a population of 162,178. The property valuation of the city is, $1,453,356 16, of which $68,000 is from "merchants' licenses," and $46,230 from "dram shops, brokers and insurance licenses." The bonded debt of the city on the 1st of October, 1860, was $5,006,700, of which $1,634,000 was for railroad purposes, and $190,000 for water works.

Railroad Iron Made in Missouri.—It is stated that one mill in St. Louis is now prepared to turn out one hundred tons a week of railroad iron of splendid quality. It costs sixty dollars per ton, but will last twice as long as the inferior English article, which costs about fifty dollars. But we can make railroad iron as cheap as England, and it is clearly improvident to buy poor foreign iron on long credit, becoming the slaves thereby of foreign capitalists, while our own operatives are striving for employment.

MARYLAND.

Union Meeting in Baltimore.—A telegram from Baltimore, dated Nov. 15th, says: "Ex-Mayor Swan addressed a large Bell meeting last night, advising a General Convention from all the States, at which the North should guarantee the enforcement of the Fugitive Slave law, and the equal rights of the South to occupy the Territories. The Breckinridge Central Committee have issued an address, deprecating secession."

The Vote in Maryland.—The National Intelligencer has the following footing of the vote of Maryland: It gives Bell 31,419; Breckinridge 31,823; Douglas 4,065; Lincoln 1,492. Plurality for Breckinridge, 404.

Population of Baltimore.—From the official returns of the twenty wards of this city, the census returns make the total population of Baltimore 214,637, black and white, free and bond. The American says that the increase of the last ten years is 44,983, while between the years 1840 and 1850 it was 66,711, a difference of 22,758.

TEXAS.

Crops, Stock, &c.—Texas already manifests signs of recovery from the panic caused by the drouth. The copious rains of August and September have revived vegetation generally, and caused abundant water for stock. The grass was never better, or stock in finer condition at this season of the year. The top crop of cotton promises favorably. The second crop of corn planted may yield well with a late fall. The panic in regard to abolition emissaries, town burnings, &c., has subsided. Indian depredations on the frontier have, to a considerable extent, ceased. The future of the State was never more promising. A larger amount of wheat has been raised in Texas in 1860 than during any former year.

The Late Troubles in Texas.—The Mobile Mercury, of Thursday, says: We saw a gentleman yesterday direct from Texas. He came from the region of country where the hanging process was rife some while back. He says the distant public is not informed of the extent of the hanging. He is a member of a vigilance committee, which has been in correspondence with the committees of other counties, and estimates that no less than two hundred and fifty [illegible] executed.

Thanksgiving.—Governor Houston has appointed Thursday, the 29th day of this month, a day of Thanksgiving and prayer.

Several volunteer companies have left for the frontier, with intent of carrying the war into the haunts of the Indians.

Cortina is within the limits of Tamaulipas, and at the head of an armed force.

A medical college has been organized at Houston.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

California Census.—A correspondent of the New York Times says that the census of California will not much exceed 400,000, whereas a year ago it was supposed that the State contained one-half million people. The population of San Francisco, which has been set down at 80,000, will not much exceed 50,000. In Calaveras county the whole population is returned as 16,215, of which 9216 are foreigners, and of them 3639 are Chinese. In Klamath every third man was a pig-tail. The agricultural counties have the largest proportion of females. In some of them the voters are to the whole people as one in five, while in some of the mining counties more than half the population are voters.

Lower California.—By advices received at Fort Kearney on the 14th inst., we learn that in Lower California bands of Indians, Mexicans, California thieves and murderers, have of late committed atrocious outrages and murders. The whole country is alarmed, and many have fled to the Governor for protection. The Governor has sent to San Diego for assistance.

New Silver Mines.—Oregon advices announce the discovery of rich silver mines in Douglas county. The mines, it is believed, are very extensive.

MISCELLANEOUS.

General Land Office.—A proclamation has been issued by the President for the sale, in June next, of about three and three-quarter millions of acres of public lands in the State of California. This proclamation embraces some of the best agricultural lands in the State, in the valleys of the San Joaquin and Sacramento rivers and their tributaries, with an ample supply of water and timber; soil of the best quality, and capable of producing almost every variety of crops. Tobacco, maize, rice, &c., flourish in the lateral valleys, while in the main valley the cereals produce most extraordinary crops. The grasses are luxuriant and nutritious, and all, or nearly all, of the fruits and vegetables of the temperate zone thrive admirably.

Japanese Tea.—There are increasing indications that eventually the United States may enjoy a large and profitable trade with Japan. In all, there has been received from that country about 360,000 pounds of tea, mostly of the inferior grades; but a few days ago there were imported per ship Enrosio, about 10,000 of a choice quality, branded "Oolong," but differing in flavor and appearance from the Chinese product, having been evidently prepared without manipulation, or the use of artificial heat. The specimen submitted to us for trial can be furnished at lower cost than China teas of a corresponding grade, and may prove to be an acceptable substitute. One of our largest importers of tea, while in conversation with the Commissioners from Japan, was informed that the ten districts of that country were very extensive, and that the production might be indefinitely extended.—N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

The Recently-Discovered Cave in Florida.—A correspondent of the National Intelligencer, referring to an alleged discovery of a cave in Florida, in which was found a Latin inscription certifying that it was inhabited or visited by Europeans in the eleventh century, directs the attention of American antiquarians to Cardinal Wiseman's treatise on "The Connection between Science and Revealed Religion," in which that accomplished scholar and archæologist states it as a fact, when speaking of the aborigines of America, that there are manuscripts in the Vatican Library at Rome which say that this continent was known to missionaries of the Eternal City in the tenth century, and concludes his remarks by asking the question, "Who can enlighten us on the subject?" The records found in the Danish archives since the work of Cardinal Wiseman was written, prove that this continent was known to the Northmen before it was discovered by Columbus.

The New Pemberton Mill at Lawrence.—The reporter of the Post has visited Lawrence, and obtained some interesting statistics of the manufacturing interest in that flourishing city. The new Pemberton Mill, which was commenced last March, is now roofed in, and will be in full operation in January next, giving employment to 1,000 hands, male and female, in making ticking, shirting, stripes, cotton flannels, cotton pantaloon cloths, cottonades, cotton vestings and ginghams. The mill has been rebuilt in the most thorough manner. It is 84 feet wide, 284 feet deep, 90 feet high to the cornice, and with a dome 116 feet high to its highest point. It has 480 windows, 4 feet wide and 9 feet high, 4 feet 4 inches apart. The number of bricks used is set down at 2,200,000. One contractor supplied 1,417 barrels of lime, and 521 barrels of cement. The cost of the whole mill, when completed, will exceed $80,000.

The Lady Elgin Victims.—Every day additional bodies of persons who perished on the Lady Elgin near Milwaukee, are being discovered on Lake Michigan, washed ashore by the treacherous waves, that yield them up, lifeless and disfigured. Last week twelve corpses were washed to the beach in the vicinity of Michigan City. The whole number of bodies recovered thus far is about 225. The number lost is thought to have been 400.

Death of an Army Officer.—The telegraph has announced the death of Brevet Brigadier General Clarke, Commander of the Department of California, who died at San Francisco on the 14th ult., of chronic diarrhea, after an illness of two weeks. He has served in the U. S. army since 1812, was in it through the war of Mexico, and was promoted to the distinguished position occupied at the time of his death for meritorious conduct at the siege of Vera Cruz.

What it Cost.—The New York Herald estimates that the Prince's tour of a month in the American States cost him $100,000, and that other people spent on themselves and him, in wardrobes, balls, decorations and displays, not less than two or two and a half millions. The New York ball, estimating each wardrobe at $200 (and some of the ladies spent thousands,) represented alone an outlay of a million dollars.

Potato Crop of Iowa.—The potato crop of Iowa for the year 1860 is astonishing. The yield in some instances, it is stated, comes up to 400 and 500 bushels to the acre, and the general average is not much less than 200. The quality of the potatoes is better than usual. It is not uncommon to find them weighing a pound each, and some three, four, and even five pounds. Not a sign of rot or imperfection has been discovered. So plenty and cheap have they been, that many loads were sold at ten cents per bushel. No danger of starving in Iowa at these figures!

Railroad Investments.—The Illinois Central Railroad represents a capital of $30,000,000, employs over 3000 men, and covers a territory larger than the State of Connecticut. The Erie Railroad represents $37,801,000; the New York Central, 33,333,771; the Pennsylvania Railroad, $24,000,000; and the Baltimore and Ohio $25,000,000. The Grand Trunk of Canada has cost $60,000,000.

Court of Claims.—The United States Court of Claims has resumed its session at Washington after a long recess. The number of cases on the docket is small. Renewed efforts will be made to procure an amendment of the law establishing this tribunal, so that awards not exceeding three thousand dollars may be final, instead of having, as now, to be definitely acted upon by Congress.

Blacks and Mulattoes.—According to the census of 1860, 2,857,637 of the slaves of the United States were black, or of unmixed African descent, and 240,656 were mulattoes. The mulattoes of the United States are about one-eighth as numerous as the blacks—the free blacks, whilst the slave mulattoes are only about one twelfth of the slave blacks.

Census of Delaware.—The census of the State of Delaware has been completed and shows the following results:—White and free colored inhabitants, 110,512; slaves, 1805; number of dwellings, 19,257; families, 19,261; farms, 6666; slave owners, 615. Total population of the State, 112,317, against 91,532 in 1850. There were 2290 slaves in the State in 1850.

Upwards of Thirty Millions of People.—The United States census returns are said to come in very rapidly. Many of the States are already complete. Several weeks, however, must elapse before the Superintendent will be able definitely to determine the exact number of inhabitants. They will considerably exceed thirty millions.

Peaceful Separation Denied.—The New York Tribune says the North will not permit peaceful separation of a Southern States and that peace would not continue sixty days after the dissolution of the Union.

Thanksgiving in Kentucky.—Thursday, the 29th inst., has been appointed by Gov. Magoffin of Kentucky, as a day of thanksgiving throughout the State.

A treaty has been effected between the French Government and the American Transatlantic Telegraph Company, by which a telegraph is to be laid down by the Azores and Newfoundland. It is to be exclusively French and American, is to be finished in three years, the French Government allowing an annual subsidy of $200,000.

The population of the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., is 273,245, being an increase of about 68,000 in five years. Brooklyn is the third city in the United States.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The latest accounts from Europe inform us that Garibaldi, after the capitulation of Capua, left for the city of Naples, where, at the latest accounts, he had arrived. The arrival of King Victor Emanuel was daily expected. It is reported on what is called the best authority, that the fortress of Gaeta had sent a proposal to surrender to the Piedmontese troops. Turin despatches announce the departure of French troops from that city for Naples. The city of Viterbo, in the Papal States, has been proclaimed in a state of anarchy. This season's corn crop in Italy is deficient. The reported conclusion of a treaty between England and Austria is unfounded. At Hong-Kong teas were unchanged and silks were declining. Shanghae telegraphs say that negotiations at Tien-Tsin are disturbed.

The following we gather from our exchanges:—

GREAT BRITAIN.

A Modern Jonah.—A whale was caught and towed to the Isle of Dogs, England, some time ago, and the late Mr. Clift went down to see it. He found it on the shore, with his huge mouth propped open with poles. In his eagerness to examine the internal parts of the mouth, Mr. Clift stepped inside the mouth, between the lower jaw, where the tongue is situated. This tongue is a huge spongy mass, and being at that time exceedingly soft from exposure to air, gave way like a bag; at the same time he slipped forward toward the whale's gullet, nearly as far as he could go. Poor Mr. Clift was really in a dangerous predicament; he sank lower and lower into the substance of the tongue and gullet, till he nearly disappeared altogether. He was short in stature, and in a few seconds would doubtless have lost his life in the horrible oily mass, had not assistance been quietly afforded him. It was with great difficulty that a boat hook was put in requisition, and the good little man hauled out of the whale gullet.

Heavy Ordnance.—A rifled cannon, said to be the largest of the sort in the world, was recently tried at Shoeburyness, England. It weighs six tons, and carries a 174-pound shot. It is made of puddled steel, and contains the greatest mass of this material ever put together. With a charge of 28 pounds of powder, it is stated, a shot was thrown 5½ miles.

FRANCE.

The inhabitants of Paris are to be gratified with another magnificent promenade. The Emperer has given orders for the construction of a road around Paris within the fortifications. It will be twenty miles long and one hundred and twenty feet wide. The footpaths will be bordered with trees.

On the 16th of August last a flash of lightning struck a windmill at Lappion, in France, in which there was a female, who was killed by the flash, and on whose body there was left the picture of a neighboring [illegible] and the municipal authorities of the place.

The Emperor Napoleon has just made over in a definitive manner, to Prince Napoleon, the Palais Royal for his winter residence, and the Chateau de Maudon for his summer habitation, thus confirming his possession of the palaces of his deceased father.

War Preparations.—Formidable naval and military preparations are going on, and some writers construe the recent Council of War at St. Cloud as a palpable indication of an eventual campaign.

The French Government has reduced the duty on the importation of rice.

SPAIN.

Population of Spain.—An enumeration of the population of Spain has just been completed. It makes the number of inhabitants 15,464,000. In 1850 there were 12,042,000. There are 194,782 square miles in the kingdom, which would give a population of nearly seventy-nine to a mile, a density of about one-third that of Great Britain. Four cities of Spain contain over one hundred thousand inhabitants. Madrid has 281,170; Barcelone, 183,787; Sevilla, 112,529, and Valencia 106,535.

Movement for a Universal Language.—A Sociedad de la Lengua Ubiversal has been formed in Madrid, where it is meeting with much attention. The project of a universal language has been renewed by Senor Sotos Ochando, who has enlisted in it many of the best minds in Spain. Committees have been formed and rules made, and by the payment of about four dollars a year each member will be entitled to receive gratis the statutes, grammar and dictionary of the universal language, and the journal and all the other publications of the Society. A preliminary publication is full of faith and hope in the enterprise, the honor of which is to belong entirely to Spain. But it is a terdy protest against the confusion of Babel.

Judicial proceedings has been commenced against Rodrique Servia, the man who fired at the Queen of Spain. He has confessed, and says he was employed by Hornoro Prade, a deputy of the Cortes.

A Madrid telegraphic dispatch says that 2000 riels have been collected by bishops in various portions of Spain and sent to the Pope at Rome.

AUSTRIA.

Austrian Policy.—There are contradictory reports as to Austria's hostile threats against Sardinia. Count Reichenberg had given an explanation to the diplomatic corps relative to the Warsaw interview. Austria put the three following questions to Russia. "Will your Government recognize the facts which have been, or may be accomplished in Italy?" "Should Austria be attacked by Sardinia, and the letter supported by another great power, what would be their attitude?" "In the event of another war, and its being transferred to German territory, what would Prussia do?" The answers are not given, but Count Reichenberg stated that Austria was about to

Children's Column.

AN ALPINE ADVENTURE.

I arrived in Chamouny on the 6th of August, 1859, with a friend and companion, an Englishman like myself. We two had been about five weeks in Switzerland, and in that time had "done" every thing considered necessary by our countrymen. We had acquired some experience in glacier-work, having ascended the Aiguille Horn, whose summit had been reached for the first time by an Englishman, a member of the Alpine Club, only two months before. We made the ascent successfully, and were proud of having been the second exploring party to stand on its lofty peak, nearly fourteen thousand feet high. On that occasion we passed two whole days on the snow and glacier.

I remember well the first glimpse I had into one of those terrible crevasses which intersect glaciers. Getting a guide to hold my hand, I leaned over its yawning brink and gazed carefully into the fathomless abyss. The two perpendicular walls of ice appeared to join together about three hundred feet down; an appearance resulting from the convexity of the crevasse. Usually, I believe, the great gulf ends only where the glacier touches the ground beneath.

No one who falls into one of these ever comes out alive," said one of our guides. "Yes," said another, "a man once escaped, and lives still at the Grindelwald. He was a chamois hunter, and when coming home over the glacier, his foot slipped, and he was precipitated into a crevasse. His fall was broken by projecting ledges and blocks of ice; which, however, gave way as he clung to them. After falling three hundred feet, he reached the bottom of the glacier, with a leg and an arm broken. He found a hollow space between the ground and the ice, through which a stream of water ran. Instinctively he followed its course, despite the great pain he endured, and after crawling along for three hours, found himself freed from the glacier."

Ordinary crevasses are from three to eight feet wide at top, but the sides approach each other rapidly, so that a man would be wedged in between the two walls of ice long before he could reach the bottom. And then, unless there should be ropes at hand long enough and strong enough, what an awful death! An unfortunate Russian gentleman perished thus, in a crevasse only last year, half-frozen, half-squeezed to death, the rent of his body ever melting the ice, he ever sinking deeper and deeper into his dreadful grave.

My companion and I ascended the Brevani, and, as few climbing travelers leave Chamouny without visiting the Mer de Glace and the Jardin, we arranged to make that excursion. To shorten our day's work, we left Chamouny in the evening and slept at Montavert, a solitary little mountain inn on the edge of the Mer de Glace.

We were up betimes in the morning. We provided ourselves with some eatables and wine, and started with our guide, whom we had brought from Courmayeur. It was a glorious morning, and promised well for our expedition. Our road, for about half an hour, was along an uneven path skirting the glacier, which lay below us on our left hand, very much crevassed and covered with debris. The path then came to an end, and the guide said we must now take to the glacier. We descended on to it, and threaded our way among the numerous crevasses.

The excursion to the Mer de Glace not being looked upon as a regular glacier expedition, is not made with the attendant precautions of axes or ropes. We had neither. We were in high spirits, and went along at a great rate; so quickly, indeed, that our guide, who had fallen behind, cautioned us once or twice, and requested us to allow him to take, and keep, the lead. Just then, our progress was arrested by a wide crevasse. Looking to the left, I perceived that it terminated, some twenty feet from us, in a steep slope of ice, which I thought I could easily climb. As the crevasse was about sixty yards long, I determined to try this slope rather than go round by the other end."

Using my Alpenstock instead of an axe, therefore, I began making foot-holes in the ice with it. The guide had now come up with us. He looked at the ice-slope and the wide crevasse, and said, very seriously: "It is dangerous; let us go round." By this time I had, with the aid of my Alpenstock, climbed about half-way up the slope. I had already come to the conclusion that it was much too steep too scale without an axe, and had determined to retrace my steps. So, when the guide had spoken, I carefully stretched back my right leg, feeling for the last hole I had made in the ice. My foot went past the place, and I felt that I was slipping. There was not the least projection that I could grasp. The slope became perpendicular, and I fell head-foremost into the yawning crevasse below.

I heard a loud cry of despair from my fellow-traveler and the guide. My own sensations can not be described, or even distinctly separated from the whirl and shock. I felt that I was being bumped from side to side between the walls of the crevasse, as I was falling a great depth; this death. Suddenly I felt that I was checked by a horrible thing; that I hung suspended, I was able to take breath, and to call out for "A rope! a rope!"

By the most extraordinary chance my fall had been arrested by a little ledge of ice which spanned the crevasse like a bridge. On this frail structure, not more than two inches wide at the top, and (as well as I could judge) about two feet deep, I had fallen so that my head hung down on one side, my legs on the other. Instinctively and immediately, by means which I can not recall, I raised myself from this dreadful position to a standing one on the ledge, in which there was a little niche sufficiently wide to admit one foot. I was now so far collected that I could hear my fellow-traveler saving from above: "We never hoped to hear your voice again. For God's sake, take heart. The guide is running to Montavert for men and ropes, and will soon be back."

"If he is not," I answered, "I shall never come up alive."

My position was an awful one. The little ledge was so narrow, that I could not get both my feet upon it. I was, in fact, supporting myself on one leg, half-leaning against one side of the crevasse and pressing my hand against the opposite side. It was perfectly smooth, and there was nothing to grasp. A stream of water poured over my shoulders, drenching me to the skin, and freezing me with its icy coldness. Overhead I could see the long narrow strip of blue sky, bounded by the mouth of the crevasse. There was a terribly stolid, unrelenting look in the intensely blue ice that surrounded me on all sides. The grim walls of the crevasse looked as if they would unite to crush me rather than relinquish their victim. Numerous rills of water poured into the crevasse, but in the whole sixty yards of its length I could see no projection except the little ledge on which I had so miraculously chanced to fall.

I ventured to look down, only for an instant, into the fearful chasm in which I was suspended. At the depth to which I had fallen the crevasse was barely two feet wide, but downward it narrowed rapidly, and about two hundred feet below me the sides appeared to join. I believe that if I had fallen six inches on either side of the little ledge, I must inevitably have been jammed in head downward, at a depth where no rope that could have been brought there could possibly have reached me.

I had now been about twenty minutes standing in this perilous position straining every nerve to prevent myself from giving way; looking up at the blue sky above me and the clear ice on all sides, but seldom daring to cast a glance into the abyss below. Blood was trickling over me from a cut in my cheek, and I felt that my right leg (fortunately the idle one) was badly bruised. In the mean while my left leg was becoming exceedingly painful from the strain upon it, and I was afraid of losing my balance if I tried to relieve myself by changing to the other. I felt that I was growing benumbed by the intense cold of the ice against which I was leaning, and of the stream of water from under which I durst not move.

I called to my fellow-traveler to know if any one were in sight? There was no answer. I called again. No human being seemed to be within hearing. A dizziness came over me, as the thought struck me, "He has gone to look if any help is coming, and he can not find his way back to the crevasse. There are hundreds of them. I am lost.

Again I had to strain every nerve to keep myself from sinking; I almost gave up hope; felt inclined to throw myself down and have the agony over. At that miserable time, I suddenly heard my friend shouting from above. He had gone to look if he could discern the guide; and, when he turned round to retrace his steps, had been thunderstruck to see the surface of the glacier intersected by innumerable crevasses all so similar in appearance as to leave him no landmark by which to know my living grave. Thank heaven! he had caught sight of a little knapsack left at the mouth of the crevasse by the guide. This had directed him back. I called to him to look at his watch—five minutes more were passed. The cold was growing more intense. It is no figure of speech to say, that I felt the blood freezing in my veins. I called to him again, to know if any were in sight. It was thirty-five minutes since the guide had started, but not a soul was visible. It was most unlikely that he could be back so soon, for we ourselves had been three quarters of an hour in coming thus far.

I felt that I hold out but a very short time longer; and besides that, I did not know at what moment the little ledge, which was my only safety, might give way under my weight. I remembered that I had a large clasp-knife in my pocket, and I determined to try to rescue myself with its aid. I called to my fellow-traveler above that I was going to attempt it. He implored me not to try; but my situation was becoming so desperate, that I did try. I began by making a little hole in the ice as high up as I could reach, large enough to admit one hand. My next endeavor was to cut a deep foot-hole about two feet above the ledge. I succeeded in this, and found that by placing my foot in it, holding fast by the place I had made for my hand, and at the same time, pressing with my back against the opposite side of the crevasse with all my strength, I was able to raise myself and stand firmly in my new position. I again let myself down on the ledge, and commenced cutting another foot-hole, about two feet above the last. It seemed to me possible that in this manner I might escape from my icy prison; but, a single slip or a false step, and I knew I must be precipitated down the crevasse.

I was working diligently at the second foot hole, when I heard a joyful shout from above. "They are in sight—three men with ropes—running as hard as they can!"

I steadied myself on my terribly narrow and slippery footing, in order to be able to seize and attach the rope when thrown to me. I saw the end of it dangling over my head. "Merciful God! It will not reach me! It is too short!" "We have got another rope," was answered from above; and it was knotted on and lowered. I caught the end, and tied it firmly round my waist. Grasping the rope above, with both hands, I gave the word. The strain began, and I felt that I was safe. In another minute I was standing on the glacier. I had been fifty minutes in the crevasse, during which time I had not lost consciousness for a single instant.

When I felt myself once more upon a firm footing, an all pervading sense of gratitude for the wonderful escape I had had came over me and made me faint, and I should have fallen if they had not held me up. This was soon over, and we prepared to start for Montavert. Before leaving I took a last look at the mouth of the crevasse which had so nearly been my sepulchre. I saw that it would have been utterly impossible to climb out, as I had so nearly been trying to do. The mouth was so wide that, as I approached it, I could have had no support from behind; and without no support, not even a cat could have scaled the perpendicular well.

Our guide was in a terrible state, and had run the whole way to Montavert; but could not find a rope fit for the purpose in the house. He was in despair, and was starting off to Chemouny when two muleteers met him. Their mules were laden with wood fastened on with ropes; he begged hard for those ropes, telling the men that a young Englishman was being frozen to death in a crevasse. They threw the wood from the backs of the mules, and came to my rescue with the guide, bringing the ropes with them. Knotted, (it seemed there were three in all,) they made up a length—about sixty feet—enough to reach me.

With the assistance of my deliverers, I was able to walk slowly back to Montavert. Here I was immediately put into a comfortable bed, where the injuries I had received (which were insignificant considering the depth I had fallen) were carefully dressed. I dreamed, with unspeakable dread, of what had happened, when lying in that bed, and I have dreamed of it in many beds since. I believe that nothing would induce me to go among ice and snow, without a long and strong rope. I offer the caution to all other travelers in Switzerland, out of a great experience and a great escape.—All the Year Round.

LITTLE WALTER.

"I knew a little lame boy once," said a lady to some village children; "he was called Walter; he had a hump on his back that you would have felt quite sorry to see, and a very pale face."

He could not walk about, or even sit up in his chair; he was obliged to lie nearly always, and she only change he had was when he was wheeled in the morning from the bed-room where he slept at night, to the little back parlor where he stayed all day. Walter's father and mother were dead, and the people he lived with had not much time to notice or think about him. They used to come into his room every morning, and then he saw them no more till dinner-time. He used to hear them running up and down stairs, going out and in. Shall I tell you how he spent the long hours when he was left by himself?

A kind lady had given him a few story books, and a little horse and cart that made a tinkling when it moved its wheels. The first thing he did every morning was to push this cart up and down the room with a long stick; he liked to listen to the little bells ringing as the cart moved, but as he had no one to talk to about it he soon got tired of playing with it, and then shoved it into its place under the table, and took his picture story books. He could not read; no one had ever taught him: but he liked to look at the pictures, and fancy what they were all about. And he liked to look down into the street, and watch the people passing his window, and to learn to know their faces.

The first person who used to come every morning was the butcher's boy. When he came in sight he always set off running, and he made an odd face as he looked up at the little window, which at first frightened Walter, but afterwards he thought that perhaps the butcher's boy did it to amuse him, and if so it was kind of him to do so. The milk boy used to look up at the window and touch his cap, and that pleased Walter. At four o'clock the baker's cart passed down the street: and at five on Winter evenings came the lamp-lighter. It was a treat to Walter to watch him. He could see five lamps from where he lay, and there was one just opposite his little window.

But there was something still better about the little street into which Walter's window looked: there was a day school for girls and boys at the end of it; and as Walter saw scholars pass down the street four times every day, he learned to know their faces, and thought he made out a great deal besides. On his very worst days, when he was obliged to lie back and often shut his eyes, on account of the pain in his head, he used to brighten up and feel better when the time came for afternoon school to break up.

He used to long so to know who would go straight home, and who would stay to play in the street, and what games they would choose. He made up names for boys from things he had seen them do. There was Beat-his-little brother; Walter could not like that boy, or feel too-late. [illegible] There was Always-a-little-ter longed every morning to call out to him, how. Walter to be quick when he saw him sauntering round the corner of the street, with his green bag trailing in the dust, just as the school bell stopped ringing. Then there was a nice boy whom he called Give-his-apple-away; and little Just-in-time, who always reached the school-room door the very minute before it was closed, but who had to run for it, which made poor Walter very anxious on his account.

Besides there was a little boy and girl who always walked to school hand in hand. Walter thought he would fancy them to be Johnny and Naomi. They were not too full of their own business or their own play to think about Walter. The very first time they passed Naomi touched Johnny's shoulder, and they both looked up at the window and smiled and nodded; and after after that, four times every day, they used to stop, and Walter nodded and smiled, and kissed his pale thin hand to them. Even when it rained they did not forget Walter, and so Walter liked seeing them pass better than anything else that happened to him all through the day.

Johnny and Naomi did not stay often to play with the other children in the street; it was now and then on a sunny afternoon, that Walter could see Johnny win a race; and Naomi play at shuttle-cock, and he was always pleased when he thought they won, and sometimes used to clap his hands and shout, though he knew well that no one could hear him.

A winter passed and a summer and it was winter again, and Walter had seen Johnny and Naomi every day; when one cold, snowy morning, Johnny passed, and stopped to look up and smile, but without Naomi. Walter felt sorry.

"I wish to-morrow morning was come," thought he, "that I might see them both." To-morrow morning came; all the children passed the window on their way to school, except Johnny and Naomi. Day followed day, but poor Walter never saw them again.

Three weeks passed away, and one morning Walter was looking down the street from his window, when an old man came and knocked at the door, and asked to see him.

The old man took hold of Walter's thin hand and sat down in a chair beside him; then he took a parcel out of his pocket, and began to unpack it. There was a doll in it, and a top, and an old story book.

Walter knew the doll and the top well; they were Johnny's and Naomi's favorite playthings, which they had shown him at the gate.

The old man then said to Walter: "My little grandchildren used often to tell me about you; they were afraid you would be unhappy when you did not see them come down the street. They begged me to give you these playthings, that you might have something to amuse you, now that you will not see them again."

"Not see them ever again?" said Walter, "why will they never come again?"

"Look here," said the old man, and he opened a book and showed Walter a picture of a flock of white lambs feeding near a beautiful river; and he told him a beautiful story of a Good Shepherd who calls little children His lambs, and who sometimes sends for them to live with Him in a happy place, where no one is ever ill or in pain, and where all is beauty and happiness.

When the old man saw that Walter liked to hear about this, he told him that there is indeed a Good Shepherd, that He would take care of Johnny and Naomi, and that some time in that happy place he hoped that Walter would see them again.

After this time Walter grew paler and thinner, and though doctors came to see him they could do him no good.

One warm spring evening he asked his nurse to wheel his sofa once more to the little window. The sun was setting, and all the school children were playing in the street. He watched them through a long game at oranges and lemons, and tried to clap his hands when Just-in-time won the race.

Then the sun set, and all the children stood wishing each other good night by the gate. With a great effort, Walter raised himself up, and leaned over towards the open window.

"Good night, good night," said he to the children.

It was the first time he had ever spoken to the children, and it was the last; for when the nurse turned round to look he had fallen back on the sofa—he was dead.

THE SACRED VOLUME.

Some writer gives the following analysis of the Book of Books—the Bible:

It is a book of laws, it shows the right and wrong.
It is a book of Wisdom, that makes the foolish wise.
It is a book of Truth which dissects all human errors.
It is a look of Life, and shows how to avoid everlasting death.
It is the most authentic and entertaining history ever published.
It contains the most remote antiquities, the most remarkable events and wonderful occurrences.
It is a code of laws.
It is a perfect book of divinity.
It is an unequalled narrative.
It is a book of biography.
It is a book of travels.
It is a book of voyages.
It is a book of the best covenant ever made, and best deed ever written.
It is the best will ever executed, the best testament ever signed.
It is the young man's best companion.
It is the school-boy's instructor.
It the learned man's master-piece.
It is the ignorant man's dictionary, and every man a directory.

TRIFLES.

Nothing so small that God has made
But has its destined end;
All in their turn His purpose serve—
All to His glory tend.

The grain of dust, in sight unseen,
With myriads may combine
To form a bulwark to the sea,
Its limits to confine.

The little drop of pearly dew
Which on the blue-bell lies,
May, in the sun's bright beams, appear
A rainbow in the skies;

Or else the trackless ocean main,
With others, form to share,
On which the ship, when homeward bound,
Some loving heart shall bear.

And thus the humblest of us all
God's instrument may prove,
To bless and shed o'er fellow-man
The bounty of His love!

Obituaries.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

REV. LEWEL CAMPBELL.—At the Fourth Quarterly Conference for Cayuga circuit, held at Rives Chapel, on Saturday, October 13th, 1860, the Chair, in accordance with a resolution unanimously passed, appointed a committee of three to draft suitable resolutions relative to the death of Rev. Lewel Campbell, who was to have presided over said Conference in the stead of the lamented Dr. Drake; with directions to forward a copy of said resolutions to the Nashville and the New Orleans Advocates for publication, and to the widow of the deceased.—In compliance with the duties thus imposed, the Committee respectfully offer the following tributs of respect:—

Death is an event altogether inexplicable, save as it is viewed in the light of revelation, not only as regards the dissolution of the body, but of those important relations and tender associations which its subject often sustains to those who are called upon to deplore its ravages. To the eye of that faith, however, which the blessed gospel inspires, it loses its mystery and becomes only the terminus of the good man's pilgrimage below, and the portal of a blissful immortality, which is to crown his past fidelity. Therefore—

Resolved, 1st. That in the death of our venerable Elder and beloved brother, the Rev. Lewel Campbell, our loss is but his gain; and that whilst the silent tear, which appropriately bedews his memory, is shed for the one, a shout of victory is due the other.

Resolved, 2nd. That in his death, society has lost a star, the church a pillar, the domestic circle a counsellor, whilst to the bosom of her whose joys were most dependent on his presence, there is left a vacuum which heaven alone can fill.

Resolved, 3d. That to that lone one, and her fatherless children, we extend the gushing sympathy of hearts which have learned "to feel another's woe," and the sincere prayer that her bereavement, though sore, may prove indeed a blessing in disguise, revealing behind a frowning Providence her Father's smiling face.

JOHN F. RIVES,
ROBERT MILLER,
WILLIAM E. LOTT. } Com.

DUHOSE, son of J. D. and Ellen Saint, aged two years, nine months and twenty seven days, died of remittent fever, after a lingering illness of fifteen days. Again has the reaper, Death, visited the field of innocence and childhood, cutting down in his rapid march, one of the loveliest flowers that ever bloomed therein, and again are we forcibly reminded that "in the midst of life we are in death." "Bosie" was in many respects a remarkable child. Possessed of a mind developed beyond his years, and a heart that knew no guile, we do not wonder that he attracted the attention and won the hearts of all with whom he was thrown in contact. We cannot forbear mentioning one incident in the short life of the dearly beloved, departed one, which plainly indicates the current of his thoughts and young aspirations, and which should be a source of consolation to his parents and grandmother, upon whom this sad bereavement has fallen with such crushing weight. Often has "Bosie" been seen to gather his little playmates around him, and in the beautiful simplicity of artless, innocent childhood, go through with all the forms of worship with singular correctness. What a beautiful example of youthful piety! This touching incident in the life of "Bosie" was a sufficient foundation for the cherished hope of his parents and friends that, at some future day, he would become one of God's faithful ministers. Had God, in his mercy, seen fit to prolong his life, we believe he would have been an ornament to the pulpit; had he chosen the ministry for a profession. Cold words but feebly express the heartfelt sorrow we feel for the bereaved parents and grandmother of the little lost one. May they bear with resignation this visitation—believing that God orders everything for the good of His creatures, and may they pass through the furnace of affliction as gold purified in the fire. May their sorrow and grief be mitigated and assuaged by the reflection that their little flower has only been transplanted from this sin-cursed earth to the paradise of God.

"That brighter home to bless,
With all his loveliness."

Yes! thou art indeed gone, little 'Dosie,' and thy every [illegible] innocent prattle to which thy parents have so often thy now silenced ear was a charm. Thou hast left a void in thy loss with resignation, comforted by no longer he heard lu wast taken from them "ere guilt had power to stain thy cherub soul and form," and cheered by the hope that they will hereafter meet their little "angel" in the better land.

A FRIEND.

DR. A. W. JONES, of Morehouse parish, La., died Oct. 2d, 1860, in Buncombe county, N.C., where he had gone for his health, aged 50 years. He was born in Person county, N.C., September 9, 1810; came to Alabama in his 22d year; there he married and lived until 1853; then moved to Morehouse parish, La., where he resided until his death. He was one of the strong pillars of the Methodist Episcopal Church for about 20 years.—His house was the minister's home. He had been a faithful class-leader, and exhorted sinners to repentance as well by his pious life and example, as by his persuasive teachings; he had been Sunday-school superintendent for many years. No man did more in a community for the cause of Christianity than he did, and few, if any, were more respected in his sphere, not only as a christian, but as a truly benevolent and upright man in all his dealings with his fellow creatures. He left a devoted wife and four children, as well as many relatives, and an innumerable circle of friends, to mourn his loss.

T. M. J.

MRS. ELIZABETH SHELTON, wife of R. J. Shelton, died at Webster, Winston county, Miss., on Sunday evening, Sept. 23d, 1860, after a lingering illness of several months. She was the daughter of Elijah and Nancy Anderson; was born in Union district, South Carolina, Oct. 7th, 1815. In the fifteenth year of her age she professed faith in Christ, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, in which she lived a consistent member till her death. She always exhibited a strong faith in her Savior. Frequently on her dying bed she remarked that her way was clear before her, and that she had no fears of death.—She requested her husband, children, and friends, to prepare to meet her in heaven. On being asked by her pastor, a few hours before her death, if all was well, she answered in the affirmative, and said, "I am going home to glory." Many witnesses could testify that she died in the faith, believing that soon she would be with the Lord. Thus we believe her spirit has gone to the portals of the skies, and will there remain to welcome the spirits of those who may follow. She left a husband, seven children, together with many connections and friends, to mourn her loss, yet we believe that though it is our loss, it is her eternal gain.

A FRIEND.

MRS. M. C. M'QUEEN died Oct. 16, 1860, aged 32 years. A protracted illness, almost unparalleled in severity and duration, terminated a life that had been little else than one of suffering from the cradle to the grave. The sweetest, gentlest amiability, combined with a correct sense of and firm adherence to principle, marked her whole life. As child, wife, mother, friend, she was tender, kind, considerate, loving, charitable; and though unusually quiet and retiring in her habits, was most tenderly beloved and cherished by all who knew her. Dear Millie! we will cherish sweet memories of thee! We know that God in His infinite mercy was present to sustain and cheer your trembling spirit, when the frail clay tenement was crumbling away, and that yours is now the home of the blest. If consistent with the economy of His grace, may your sainted spirit hover about the pathway of your loved ones on earth, and softly woo them to glory and to God!

Chunnenuggee, Ala., Oct., 1860.

LEMUEL BURKET THOMPSON was born June 10, 1780, in North Carolina; removed to South Carolina with his parents, when young; embraced religion in 1801, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church; about which time he married Miss Mary Adams, daughter of William and Joanna Adams. He filled the office of class-leader for several years; removed to Mississippi Territory, Amite county, in 1810; continued to hold his office of class leader till licensed to exhort, which office he labored hard to fill profitably; was licensed to preach soon after. He was zealous, laborious and faithful, until he lost his speech in 1840; he continued faithful to the church; he lovingly said he was ready and waiting patiently his change. He closed his pilgrimage on Sunday night, Sept. 16. He has left a number of children and a wife to mourn his departure, but they mourn in hope. The church has lost a valuable friend.

H. H. SENNUCK.

CATHARINE DEWEESE, daughter of Richard Smith, was born near Raleigh, N.C., and emigrated to Dallas county, Ala., in 1837. Here she was converted and joined the Methodist E. Church at a camp-meeting, near Pleasant Hill, in 1839. She was married to Mr. A. C. Deweese in Feb., 1811, and moved to Walker county, Ala., in 1852, where she lived till Aug. 22, 1860. Then she died in peace, after a long and painful illness. Sister D. was a good woman. Her qualities as a wife and mother were excellent; her character as a christian was consistent and pious. For a long time she was prevented by affliction from attending public worship. Rev. A. Williams visited her a short time before her death, and obtained the assurance that she was a saint bound for heaven. The morning she died she said to her friends "I see Jesus," and then left the shores of time.

C. S. M'DONALD.

MRS. SUSANNAH M'PEIL, wife of Elbert M'Peil, died in Wilkinson county, Miss., Oct. 17, 1860. She was a daughter of Reuben and Mary Cassels; born Jan. 28, 1819; united with the church when quite young; was converted at her father's house, at the family altar, in presence of the sainted Steele, in 1835; married the year following. She adorned the doctrine of God our Savior in the manifestation of a great degree of christian consistency; frequently prayed with her children; was often seen amid the trials of life to rejoice with exceeding great joy. During near five months of severe affliction she often encouraged her friends by expressions of resignation to the Divine will.—She left eight children.

J. J. C.

SUSAN MARY HOBBS, daughter of H. and E. B. Hobbs, born Jan. 30, 1851, died Oct. 27, 1860. The hopes that bright and beautiful childhood inspire in the heart of father and of friends, went with her to the grave. Heaven, not earth, must furnish the conditions of life to her. Ah, just Heaven! let the gospel's balmy hope alleviate the parting pang, and forestall the rising sigh.

EDUCATIONAL.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.—THE next term of this Institution will open on Monday, the first of OCTOBER, 1860.

FACULTY.

REV. JOHN C. MILLER, M. A., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
REV. W. H. SCALES, M. A., Professor of Mathematics.
REV. JOHN J. WHEAT, M.A., Professor of Greek.
GEORGE H. WILEY, M.A., Professor of Latin.
A. R. HOLCOMBE, M.A., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. J. E. SUNDSTROM, M.A., Professor of Modern Languages.
REV. A. G. MILLER, M.A. } Principals of Preparatory Department.
WM. N. POTTER, M.A. }
R. D. NORWORTHY, M.A., Tutor.
LEWIS FITZHUGH, Tutor.

Tuition per Session of five months, payable in advance.
In Preparatory Department..... $21 50
In College Department..... 30 50
Matriculation Fee on entering College Department..... 5 00
Music, extra.

Board can be obtained at the Steward's Hall, or in private families at prices varying from ten to fifteen dollars per month. This institution having an able Faculty, extensive buildings, large library, cabinet and apparatus, commends itself to all desiring a thorough classical or scientific education.

Centenary College is located at Jackson, La., twelve miles East of Bayou Sara.

For information apply to Rev. C. C. Gillespie, No. 112 Camp-street, Dr. John C. Keener, New Orleans, or, to the undersigned, Jackson, La.

JOHN C. MILLER, President.

Aug. 5, 1860. 1y

COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE, COLUMBUS, MISS. The Fifteenth Annual Session of this Institution will open on MONDAY, the 1st day of OCTOBER, 1860.

THIS IS NOT A SECTARIAN SCHOOL.

Tuition and Board not higher than at other Southern Female Colleges. The Teachers are all experienced in their profession. The location is remarkably healthy, and the society moral and refined.

Columbus is accessible from various directions by daily Stage Lines, and by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, a branch of which terminates only a few Squares from the College buildings. Pupils should endeavour to be present at the opening of the Session.

MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY:

Rev. B. F. LARRABEE, M.A., President.
J. W. M. SHATTUCK, M.D., Secretary.
Rev. W. T. H. SCOTT, M.A.; Professor A. PORTMAN, M.A.; Mrs. L. E. EDGAR; Mrs. A. POLLARD; Miss C. R. SHANBURY; Miss K. S. SANDATH; Miss L. STREET; Miss M. A. WITTER; Miss R. K. TUCKER, Miss E. H. SOUTHALL.

BRANCH DEPARTMENT.—Mr. Larrabee and family, and Dr. Shattuck and family, reside with the boarders, and have charge of that Department.

For further particulars apply for a Catalogue.

Sept 20th, 1860. 3m

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE, Located Seven Miles east of CANTON, has recently received a new and elegant Philosophical Apparatus; and is prepared to give young Ladies a thorough Course in Natural Sciences, Languages and Mathematics; also in Music, French and Embroidery, and the various primary and Collegiate branches of English education. Lessons in Vocal Music, gratis.

Board, $12 per month; Washing and Lights, extra. Tuition, from $12 to $22 per Session, of five months. Payments due in advance.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, President.

Nov. 7, 1860. 8t

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, BROOKHAVEN, Lawrence County, Mississippi. Rev. J. P. Lee, A.M., President, assisted by competent teachers.

The Exercises of the School for 1860-61 will begin September 12th, 1860, and end on June 19th, 1861.—Friday, June 14th, Annual Examination begins.

Sunday, June 16th, Commencement Sermon.—17th and 18th, Examination continued, Night Concert.—Wednesday, June 19th, Commencement Day.

For further particulars apply to

Rev. J. P. LEE, President and Secretary.
Rev. M. J. WHITWORTH, Proprietor.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.—The Exercises of this Institute will be resumed on Wednesday, 10th October. As the number of Pupils is necessarily limited, those who wish to secure places will do well to apply as early as practicable.

W. H. S. MAGRUDER

Aug. 5, 1860.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE.—The Twenty-Third annual Session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, OCTOBER 1st, under the superintendence of the following corps of Instructors:

Rev. J. M. Bandell, President, and Professor of Modern Science, Rhetoric, &c.
Rev. G. W. Smith, Professor of Mathematics.
Rev. F. H. Forster, Professor of Ancient Languages.
Rev. W. C. Bass Professor of Natural Sciences.
C. Schwartz, Professor of Modern Languages and Painting.
Miss M. E. Carleton, Assistant in Academical Department.
Miss C. M. Semple, Assistant in Primary Department.
P. G. Guttenberger, Senior Professor of Music.
W. S. S. Matthews, junior ditto.
Miss L. Guttenberger, and Miss M. A. Matthews, Assistants in Music.
Mrs. S. Schwartz, Teacher of Ornamental Branches.

$150 will meet the annual expenses of a Student for board and Tuition, if no extra studies be taken. The expense of furnishing a room varies from $5 to $12.

In addition to the regular College classes, there will be hanceforth an Academic and a Primary Department, all under the charge of the same general faculty.

Letters on Financial business should be directed to Professor C. Schwartz, the Accountant of the Faculty; on all other matters, either to the President, or to

W. C. BASS, Secretary.

Macon, Georgia, Aug. 21, 1860. 1m

BASCOM FEMALE SEMINARY, Grenada, Miss. This Institution, with a neat Boarding Department, and superior educational facilities will commence its next Session, Sept. 24th 1860.

Rev. S. D. OGOURN, President

Aug. 28, 1860.

Dora Gibson Collegiate Academy for Young Ladies now in course of erection will second annual session on the 1st Monday in November next. Its buildings are new, and have been erected with accommodations for thirty additional boarders. A [illegible] been erected ten Cabinetries, with implements for scientific physical training, which give beauty, grace and health.

The College is furnished with Maps, Charts, Globes, a Cabinet of Minerals, Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, a full corps of efficient and faithful teachers, and we offer to young ladies desiring an education a high order of advantages.

Terms per session of forty weeks, board and tuition in English branches, from $190 to $210. Music, Languages and ornamental branches at moderate extra charges.

Catalogues, with full information, can be had by addressing

REV. B. JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

sept2

GREENSBORO' (ALA.) HIGH SCHOOL.—A Select School for Boys.—Rev. J. W. N. MAES, A. M., M. D., Principal and Proprietor.

Six boys from ten to fifteen years of age can board with the Principal. The whole expense of board, tuition, washing, fuel, lights, and books and stationery, except books of reference, per scholastic year, $300. at 2-3m

READVILLE SEMINARY, BATON ROUGE, LA., will commence its next session October 10th. The patrons of the school are earnestly requested to have their daughters and wards present to enter classes at that time.

Sept12-6m* MRS. M. W. READ, Principal.

Feliciana Female Institute, Jackson, La.—The regular exercises of this Institution will be resumed on Monday, October 1st. Large additions have been made to the buildings and premises. With good discipline, thorough teachers, complete apparatus, and newly furnished apartments, superior facilities are afforded for a thorough female education.

Sept. 12, 1860. THOS. W. CROWN, President.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAMES J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama., will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties. [ja24]

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY - AT - LAW, BATON Rouge.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Gaines and Chisn & Bolton, New Orleans; Leatherd and Co., Broadwell & Haynes, and Pritchard & Flower, Baton Rouge. W. S. Pike and A. Matta..... mar 7-1y

FUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Clinton, Louisiana, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, and East Baton Rouge.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., W. and C. Winans & Heath, New Orleans. J. T. HEATH.

WINANS & HEATH, ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS at Law, Shreveport, La. Office—Market street. Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO, ATTORNEY - AT - LAW, Harrisonburg, La., will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

J. C. & T. H. LEWIS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, will practice in the Parishes of Catahoula, Caldwell, Franklin, Ouachita and Morehouse.
Office at Harrisonburg, La.
Oct 3, 1860. 1y.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

A. H. MAY & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No 94 Gravior street, New Orleans. au24y

J. D. PAYNE. J. P. HARRISON.
G. W. ANTHINGTON. WM. B. DAMERON.

PAYNE & HARRISON, COMMISSION MERCHANTS No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

LEONARD FASH. F. B. LUCASSE.

LEONARD FASH & CO COMMISSION MERchants, and Dealers in Western Produce, 81 Magazine street, New Orleans. Oct 24.

JOHN F. WYCHE & CO., COTTON FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No 119 Common street, New Orleans.

JOS. W. CARROLL. W. S. KIMBALL.
JOS. HOY. J. N. NIVEN.

CARROLL, HOY and Co., Cotton Factors, No. 38 Perdido-street, "Factors Row," New Orleans. July 10, 1860. 12 m's

MOORE & BROWDER, Successors to Munroe and Vancolin, Commission Merchants, and Cotton Factors, No. 44 Carondelet-street, New Orleans. oly-16, 1860.

LANE, SALTER & Co., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS, No. 128 Common-st. Oct. 17, 1860.

STONE'S INFIRMARY—Corner of Canal and Claiborne streets, New Orleans. This well-known Institution is fully provided with everything necessary for the comfort and convalescence of patients.

Separate Buildings have been erected for the accommodation of Negroes.

TERMS, including Medical attention, Nursing, Medicines, &c., $3 to $5 per day for Whites; $1 to $2 per day for Negroes.

Extra charges for Surgical cases and operations.

T. G. RICHARDSON, M.D.,
Attending Physician and Surgeon,
WARREN STONE, M.D.,
Consulting Physician and Surgeon.

P.S.—Special accommodations for females affected with Vesico-vaginal Fistula, Prolapsus and other diseases peculiar to the sex. Also for patients with diseases of the eye.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CUDDY, BROWN & CO.—HAVING CLOSED THE office of MILES OWEN & CO., the first day of January, 1857, my business connections in future in this city will be with Messrs. Cuddy, Brown & Co., 58 Camp street. MILES OWEN

L. SAWYER, DEALER IN WOODEN-WARE, PAper, Brooms, Matches, Cordage, Twines, Scales; and DEARBORN'S CELEBRATED BALANCES for Weighing Cotton, Sugar and Tobacco., No. 60 MAGAZINE STREET, New Orleans. ap20

J. H. KELLER, SOAP MANUFACTORY, CORNER of Howard and St Andrew streets, New Orleans.
☞ A good supply constantly on hand, and all orders promptly filled.

PRINTERS' ROLLERS.—T. BEAULIEU IS READY cast Printers' Rollers of the best quality, upon reception of orders either from city or country, at short notice. It is just as foolish for each pressman to cast his own rollers as it is for each man to make his own shirt. Work warranted to be of the best kind.

Address, T. BEAULIEU,
Office of the Christian Advocate.
112 Camp st., New Orleans.
no19

PH. P. WERLEIN, PUBLISHER AND DEALER in SHEET MUSIC and MUSIC BOOKS. Dealers will be supplied at the regular Board of Trade prices. The PIANO FORTES are of the best manufacture, and sold at Eastern prices. MELODEONS of the celebrated George A. Prince & Co., "the best in the world," (Home Journal,) at wholesale and retail. PIANOS, VIOLINS, GUITARS, and all other instruments tuned and repaired.

Call at the Music Store, No. 5 Camp street. PH. P. WERLEIN.

ISAAC T. H

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 48. WHOLE NUMBER 511.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE. OFFICE—112 CAMP ST.

AUTUMN, OR THE ANGEL OF IMMORTALITY.

BY LETHA FONTELLE.

Poets, with Bryant in the van, have sung to every varied measure, or, with Irving in melodious prose, the glowing beauties of autumnal days. The States which he loves best, greets first, and dwells among so he lays undivided claim to the rare pageantry of his every gorgeous hue, which precedes his fierce conand fades into his sober monotint. Their rolling wide forests and deep vales seem to have gathered the summer's warmth and light, until they dazzle with their golden beams, glow with their living flame, and rival the imperial drapery with which the king of reils his retiring. They need these rainbow tints promise, those mellow days, the "after heat," in which to gather up their strength and hopes, to battle fearfully with their long winter.

Autumn comes to our fair summer land, not like a fading widow, boasting of many conquests, but with dignified repose, and the matured, yet modest charms of one who mourns her lord, but murmurs not, and with a chastened grace and genial smile won from life-sorrow and acquaintance with grief's comforter, she gladdens every heart, and scatters blessings with her gentle noiselessly. The pitiless destroyer flees abashed from her pure presence, and all our myriad, tormentors, that like the parasite, drank up our blood, or like the fiery slanderers that fatten on the wounds they cause, feed themselves, or perish suddenly.

The sky, with serene and rose, bends lovingly above, reflecting as of the earth and air weave silently a mystic web in which she wraps herself to hide her brightness; its diaphanous, it only renders her more wondrous fair. Dwelling beauties and enhancing every charm. It is a gift to live in her pure presence, to inhale her balmy breath, to listen to her sighs that whis-per to our souls of love immortal, and of milk that tears do future; though it may be lone, and dark, and sad, knowing the end is joy's fruition.

The woods diversify their long word livery of grey-tinged green. Scarlet and crimson vines hide the brown trunks which they engwreath, as if they poured the cypress their life-blood to shield their firm supporters. The cypress arcades mote alluring grow, warming above to a mellow brown. The nyssa, (gum tree) puts on vivid crimson. The Cuno tree rings all the changes from green to flaming gold. The sycamore's round ball gleam and the waxing foliage, whiter than ivory. The orange groves retain their brilliant green, but hang in myriad globes of gold, the storied fruit that won the fair Atlanta. We look out on broad fields of spring cane, with Spring's bright hue crowning their waving stores. And near at hand wide plants all white in snowy wealth, yield with a large philanthropy, the proof our genial clime, their fine soft the cup to enjoy the world.

As I was looking through an old portfolio this morning I found a pretty sketch of Autumn's mission, written by Emily B., an enthusiastic girl, who had not been quite won her diploma. I could scarcely believe it original, truthful and talented as she was, but I have seen it in print, and I give it to you now as too good a thing for private possession:

Autumn passed ere he started upon his mission. Spring had wakened the earth and made it glad with the smiles of promise. Summer had flung over it a veil of light, and filled it with song and bloom, but it was his to lay blighting fingers on all that was beautiful, to leave decay and desolation beneath his tread, and to bring only sorrow and mourning. Autumn mused, and his heart was sad, and a cloud was on his brow, for he is a tender spirit and grieves at the mission of death. He walked through the groves, and all the trees reared exultingly their crowned heads, and they twined together their graceful arms; still the breeze sang to the zephyr, and bent caressingly over the earth that had built homes in their shadow. The zephyr had grown cold, some bird-wings had flown, and here and there a leaf had faded, but as yet they knew their doom. As he looked he drew deep sighs. He passed among the flowers. They were still nursed in their cells to the sunbeams, and unfolding their leaves to the kisses of the breeze. Some were breathing forth tones of melody, and some flowers were [illegible] the dying spirit. He bowed his head and wrapped his dark mantle more closely around him.

Alas," he said, "that it is given unto me to destroy, that I must blight what my love yearns over. I will shrink from me; they will call me harsh names, but I am not the destroyer. If I make dust of the beautiful, it is but to plant there the germ of life. If I cover them with a shroud, it is to weave beneath a resurrection robe. It, that thy knew, me."

Then he bethought him of the harp by his side with its strange-like notes, mingled a celestial tone, and with and immortality blended in one mystic strain.

"Yes," he said, "I will strike my harp when I give my summons to fade. Perchance they will understand my mission, and those whom I destroy shall bless me."

So, with a chastened smile, he went forth:

"The fading time! the fading time!" he shouted, as he passed over the hills, and through the vales, and along the banks of the streams. Earth knew the voice of Autumn. Every blade of grass shrank away from his footstep. The forest trees knew and called one to another in dismay. The elm bowed its head, the aspen trembled, and the willow swayed to and fro in its grief. He reached the garden, and the lily's brow grew pale; the fringed lids of the hairbell quivered, and the dahlia stood out her royal robe and defied his approach.

Then the harp sounded, and its sweet notes rang through the forest.

"Child mortal, O my sons, though I tear away your joys, and wreath you with the chaplet of death, I will cause the life giving sap to course swift and warm through your veins, and you shall become strong and awake in beauty again."

Then the trees were comforted and gave themselves gladly to his rude touch, with a smile in their decay as gleamed like a rainbow through the forest. And the days wore on, and leaf by leaf faded and fell, still they were not desolate, and the tide of life beat hopefully in their hearts.

More tenderly came the strain to the flowers:

"Fear not, sweet sisters, nor shrink from my cold breath. Be not afraid to hide down in the dark ground. There I will mould your tiny buds, and polish your glossy leaves, and when the robin comes, you shall rise and put on your beautiful robes again."

So, the flowers bowed submissively, and strong in trust, yielded themselves to death.

Men spoke of Autumn by the names of the "spoiler," the "blighter," and the "stern reaper," as they saw the earth growing desolate, and many a pale one fleeing to the tomb at his approach. For them he woke a deeper strain, even of the resurrection from the dead. All could not interpret the language of the finely strung harp, but many blessed its ministry. And Autumn reigned in the name they gave him, the "Angel of Immortality."

THE LAW OF COMPROMISE IN NATURE.

In the beautiful world of nature are there not twenty blooms to one rose? Aye! but how many hundred pebbles, each a very master-piece of beauty and fragrance in itself, go to make up the queen of flowers? The very poisonous plants and minerals, skillfully subdivided and prepared, are but restorative and healing medicines, and every child knows that close to the vicious stinging-nettle grows the friendly, soothing dock-leaf. So the beasts of prey reproduce their kind but sparingly, and at long intervals, whilst the lower animals, whose destiny it is to supply them with food, are abundantly prolific, and, as far as we can judge, specially adapted to the enjoyment of that life which they hold by so precarious a tenure,—the wilder kinds, like the human savage, are subject to cold and exposure, constant dangers, and occasional short commons. Such is the price they pay for their liberty. The domestic animals, again, enjoy warmth, food, and comfort, but in consideration of these advantages they must work, or at least obey. All the way up the scale of inferior nature, from the snail carrying its house on its back, but unable to move faster than a yard or so in an hour, to the eagle soaring aloft in the blue empyrean for a whole afternoon, a theme for poets and romancers, the glorious child of air, the messenger of love, watched, perhaps, for some poor, miserable rabbit, that goes to ground after all, and disappoints him—compromises seems to be the very condition upon which each and all hold their existence. The very changes of the seasons, the very system that governs the universe, the principle of attraction and repulsion, that keeps this old world rolling in its allotted orbit through the infinity of space, what are they all but extensions or modifications of the great rule of compromise? "Thus far shalt thou go, and no farther," saith the Creator.

He who foresees calamities suffers them twice over.

OVER THE VAR.

Deeply embosomed in a sweeping bay, whose waters surpass in their clear depths even the pellucid azure of the Mediterranean, lies a fair, white-walled town, whose palatial villas stretch for miles along the sunny beech.—Close by to the north and east, ascend the lofty peaks and olive-terraced slopes of the Maritime Alps; to the westward, irregular and purple, are seen the Estrelle Mountains, like a giant wall; and the rocky promontory that shuts in the view on the side of Italy stands out against the horizon, with edges as sharply chiseled as if wrought by the art of the sculptor. Landward, there is a rich confusion of orange groves and gardens, and trellised vines and deep pine-woods, and all the luxuriant, overbrimming richness of the vegetation of the south.—Cradled in this lovely landscape, like precious pearl in a golden setting, and basking under a cloudless sky and a brilliant sun, lies the city of Nice, the last acquisition of his majesty Napoleon III.—an Italian town but yesterday; to-day, a town of France. It is a prize worth the winning, this birth-place of Garibaldi, this flower of the world-renowned Riviera del Ponente. Statistically speaking, it has 50 000 inhabitants, a tunny-fishery, an extensive coasting-trade, a very large production of olive-oil, fruit, and purple Comte wine.

In a political sense, it is the key of Italy.

It is the most fashionable and frequented of all European winter watering-places; and to a lover of beautiful scenery, as the emperor is acknowledged to be even by the lett dowagers of the Faubourg, there is doubtless a charm in acquiring one of the very driest and most bewitching gems of the purple Mediterranean. Let us also Nice justice—but na begin at the beginning. The Var is, or was, before that pugnacious sovereign, the Re Galantuomo, Victor Emmanuel, bartered away his old dominions, the frontier of Italy. It is from three to four miles from the town of Nice, that broad, turbulent river, perhaps twice as broad as the Thames at Richmond, but half of shingly shoals and dry banks of sand, between which rush furious channels of foaming yellow water.—More than one tourist has tried to ford the Var on horseback, and has perished in the attempt. The natives have an instinctive respect for the broad, capricious river. It is not navigable, not fit for the oarsman nor for the fly-fisher. Its one natural use is, to keep out Gauls from Italy; and that use, thanks to the treaty of Villafranca, is at an end. This dangerous river is spanned by an enormously long, rickety wooden bridge. At either end are gates. A French sentry keeps the westward gate, and, till lately, a Piedmontese douanier maintained a less warlike watch and ward at what might fairly be called the Door of Italy. The French gates were closed at 7 P. M. every evening; and travellers from Italy, in spite of passports and safe-conducts—the 'most favored nation' not excepted—were rigidly locked out. When across the Var, on the Italian side, you have a pleasant drive to Nice, and the choice of two roads.—Landward you have the tall cane-brakes, where every ready stem is tipped with a pear-shaped leaf; the umize-fields, rich with gigantic grain; the white cottages of peasants; the gay stone walls of immense gardens. On the other route, you have the sea. Let us choose the sea. It is pleasant to bowl along a road as smooth and white as sand and powdered shells can make it; on one's right hand the magnificent bay, with a score of white-winged felucca spreading their fantastic canvas and long lateen yards to the breeze, and 'chawing' out so as to round the promontory. There is a patch of snowy foam far out beyond the sandy point, which shows where the great tunny shoals are running in, and every red-capped, bronze faced fisherman is up, sharpening his spear, hauling at his boat, getting out his nets, while his wife bustles around, and his brown-visaged, bright-eyed brood clap their hands and pray to be taken out to sea too.—We shall see plenty of the tunny fish presently; let us toll on to the town.

On our left are endless villas of every size and style, from the conventual dwelling of the Dowager Empress of All the Russias, to the white-washed and green-shuttered cottage, which Captain Smith, of the Hallinasloe Bombardiers, has hired for the winter at a hundred francs a month, and which the complaisant natives call the 'Palazzo Snoco.' Let us hasten to own that the gallant bombardier's home is exceptionally small, and that most of the villas are ample and commodious residences, while Blossoms of the bridal orange trees peep in at the windows, to the delight of the young lady-inmates; and later, the golden globes thrust their ripe fragrance into the open casements, to the gratification of all British school boys spending their holidays at Nice. Now we are in the town—that town that shone like a fairy crescent-shaped city far off along the sea-line, as we drove from the Var Bridge; and as we enter the shady streets, a sort of disappointment falls upon us like a chill. Dear, dear me, is this all? Are these the streets? Are these the shops? I thought they would be a sort of eastern bazaars, crowded from floor to ceiling with all that is gay, grand, and splendid. Have a little patience, fellow-traveller. The way to enjoy Nice, or most other southern towns that I am acquainted with, is to get outside it—just outside it, only a little way off, and sit down, and fall in love with it, and take its portrait. No, the shops are not equal to those of Paris, or even to those of Trieste or Vienna; and the streets are a little narrow and dark; and the pavement of most part of the town, which must surely have been constructed of little petrified pears, is more profitable to your chiropodist—if you patronize correctors—than to yourself: but never mind; let me act as guide and showman.

That marble shop, full of pure white statuary from Carrara, and mottled Tuscan marbles, and those wonderful straw-hats, which ladies from France, and England, and Russia buy so many of, and all the straw and ivory gimcracks, is surely worth looking at. Then Viscomte's great cool library; did you ever see such a library before? Behold it, with its orange and almond garden, its huge reading-rooms, and its general character of refrigeration, as if it were a literary ice-house.—You read your Times or your Galignani there, and forget the heat. That is a confectioner, who is no mean artist on sugar; yonder worthy fellow is cunning in wood-mosaics, and his inlaid tables are sent even to New York. There! I am exhausted in my career as counsel for the defence. I give you up the lest of the Nice shops; they are nothing to boast of, I own it; but what of that? This is not a commercial city. It is a grand old watering-place, the oldest in the south, for did not Sultan Djem (or Zem), Bajazet's rebellious younger brother, come here, and live here, and love the place so well that he wrote Turkish verses in its praise, the originals of which I never met with, but trust they surpass the mediocrity of their French translation.

People do not come to Nice to 'shop,' they come to bask in the sun. We cross the square, and there is the barrack, looking like a theatre; and there the theatre, strongly resembling a barrack. However, in that theatre you may hear some of the best singers of Italy give effect to the best operas; and the inside, as usual in Italy, surpasses the exterior. That cool shadowy building, where the sentinels are pacing, and the gorgeous footmen lounge like tropic birds, is the royal palace. Very rarely the king of Sardinia sleeps in it for a night or two—twice in a reign, possibly. The intendant of the province has those snug quarters to himself, but a tribunal of justice has found a niche on the ground-floor.

Now for the old town, the true Nice of Sultan Zem, and Montfort, and Montesquieu. We plunge into the dark, and it is some time before our eyes grow accustomed to the dimness, and we can discern objects accurately. Even then it requires great stoical philosophy to bear the sudden transitions from broad smooth flags, such as Florence and Padua are paved with, to sharp little cobble stoned pavements, that lacerate and bruise the feet, and turn our neat Paris boots into instruments of torture. But what a feast of color, of dappled light and shade, of nationality written in quite signs, of the quaint and the wonderful, does that old town present! It is almost oriental in its arrangements, like some petty eastern city, too small to boast its bazaars, and exposing its wares on each window-sill and threshold. In Old Nice, every house is a shop, every shop is a stall. Here, fruit is piled up in almost fabulous plenty; great melons striped gold and green; Barbary figs, all prickled over like hedgehogs; the tamer figs of Italy, red and purple and green, luscious, ripe, and bursting, so as to shew the yellow seeds and tempting fruit; mountains of grapes, piles of brown carobs, fresh dates, almonds just off the tree, pistachio nuts, olives, the peach and the pear and the pine, and all the family of Pomona. There are flowers of every tint and hue, and seeds for gardens, and huge golden ears of ripe Indian corn, masses of yellow globes on a stout stem: and beyond are fish of twenty new kinds; and then there is a heap of game, all sorts of birds, called, in defiance of ornithological professors, 'pheasants,' indiscriminately. Wonderful varieties of the pheasant, certainly! There are red legged partridges, and our brown friend, whose relations live among us in Britain, the slim-legged quail, the woodcock, snipe, mallard, the true gold-plumaged pheasant, the black game, too, all labelled alike, up to a great black-featured fowl of prodigious dimensions. What is this noble fellow that you poise and weigh admiringly? He is a huge bird, dark plumed, with white tips to the feathers. He comes, they tell you, from the pine-forests about the Alpine Pass of Tenda, six thousand feet above the sea. Is he a heron, or a sea-eagle, or a prize turkey? 'Fugione, Milordo, Fugione!' is all the dealer can say. Pheasant again! Bah! O for a scientific friend to tell us at a glance that the bird is a cupercuizie of the Alps!

There are other stalls besides those that deal in creature-comforts. Yonder is an establishment where Greek caps, gay Calabin scarfs, gaudy shawls and kerchiefs, and pretty toys of Greece, Spain, Tangiers, and Egypt, are being retailed to the black-eyed contadini. It would not surprise me to learn that the old crone who presides, she with the piercing eyes, heavy earrings, and yellow handkerchief twisted round her head, was a native of Marseilles, and not unconnected with the smuggling interest. See, she catches sight of us, and offers us tobacco—choice Latakia—amazing cigars—just imported. I suspect the Royal Dogana profited little by that importation. On through the villainously paved dark lanes, where the tall houses almost meet overhead. Even here the vine takes root and grows. You see the interlaced tendrils stretch from gable to gable, and make a green net between you and the strip of blue sky. There is a surprising crush of people, and you are jostled as if in a country fair; blue-jacketed or brown-jacketed mountaineers, with red sashes round their loins, and felt hats; young girls, proud of the gold cross on their bosoms, and the bright kerchief that wreaths their pitch black hair; noisy urchins, unearthly hags, with fire in their eyes, and curses never very far off their lips, push you to right and left. On come, gesticulating the while, a troop of evil-visaged 'lifters,' brawling and squabbling as the wine of the taberno mounts to their heads. It is better to leave a clear passage to that band of dissolute swaggerers, with their bloodshot eyes, and loose black hair, and the handle of a knife peeping out of every crimson sash. They can use knives as well as exhibit them. The advocate Lebrino, who was wantonly murdered, a year ago, at his own door, perished by the stiletto of just such a gang of Italian Mohocks, and the two assassins who were convicted, escaped the extreme penalty of the law, and were 'commuted to the galleys.' To say the truth, those idle, gambling, stabbing hangers are the curse and terror of Old Nice; and if the imperial police can tame them, there will be one advantage in the annexation, after all.

Which way, now? There is a most embarrassing choice of routes, certainly. Shall we go up the Turin Road, with the brawling torrent-river on our left hand, and mount the slopes of the Tenda Pass? Or shall we climb the mountain, up which the road to it meanders like a twisting snake, through woods of pine, and terraces above terraces, where the silver-gray olive-trees spread their glossy leaves like unpolished silver to the sun? It we choose the latter, we may climb on and on, higher and higher through gray rocks and black pines, and hedges of tall roses; while the Alpine peaks tower up above us, higher and higher, bluer and more blue yet, until we get to the lichens and the mosses, and see a spotless helmet of snow on the cones afar off. In mid-winter, I have ascended that steep road for a mile or two, and reached the deep snow, which lay white and calm all around; while Nice and its valley beneath were positively bathed and steeped in a golden glory of sunbeams and warmth, and the roses still bloomed, and the birds still sang, close to the white wintry covering of the hills. But now, instead of such an ascent, we can pass those gay rafts and that lime-shaded parade, and before us is the port of Nice.—A pretty little port enough with its two or three English or Yankee merchant-men, looking perfect monsters in naval architecture, in comparison with the picturesque mob of gaudily painted felucca, zebeques, and other lateen-rigged craft that lie anchored around, their blue striped sails negligently swinging, in not ungraceful festoons, from the long and tapered yards; while the red-capped, ear-ringed crew are busy with their garlic and oily stews, and singing in patois over their sour wine.—Slim and swift craft are those felucca, elegant of rig and sharp of stem, and admirably adapted for smooth water and light winds, as indeed are their swarthy, lively crews. But in heavy weather, or in one of those terribly sudden Mediterranean squalls, one would rather, I fancy, be in a shipmate of Captain Brown yonder, of and from Liverpool; or of that lovely hunk, resolute-eyed Boston skipper, the gallant Captain Molasses, who is sunshine beside the like blackness, wide white trousers of almost Moorish amplitude, red sashes and caps, boots and jackets of a sort of chocolate color. See that old Triton, who offers us a basketful of the choice dattole di mare, and hesitates to name his price, lest he should ask less than Mior would give, were the tariff but higher. Those rare shell-fish—these seadates in their crustaceous covering—are worth a good price, after all, not only for their flavour, but for the wonderful trouble taken in boring and blasting so as to get them out of their rocky bed, just beneath the high reef, out at sea.—Nothing but gunpowder, judiciously applied in tiny dribblets, can sap that rock where the datiole burrow, and of course care is needed lest the dainty fish be destroyed along with their stronghold. We will go on to Villafranca, over this fine broad road of new construction, commanded by a fort that is perched on the stony hill above. Or shall we prefer the old picturesque path along the face of the precipitous rock, rising up and up in irregular curves, and overlooking the deep sea, which moans and splashes among the caverns below? It is a fine view, that we have from that steep path, but the footing is none of the best, nor of the widest: we have a wall of rock above us, and a sheer descent below us; and see, here come in Indian file a score of mules and asses, each descending with his brace of panniers slung, in which the animal his carried up mortar, and stone, and brick, to strengthen the fort on the cliff. Mercy on us! the path is not wide enough for us all; however, we flatten ourselves against the rock, and the mules and their long-eared relatives brush by us, the baskets just nudging us. How fearlessly the surefooted brutes walk, or amble, on the extreme edge of the path, close above the tremendous precipice that it makes one dizzy to gaze down!—The creatures are trained to walk thus, that their loads may not strike the wall. Had we attempted to pass them on the outside, they would probably have pushed us over, for a mule is not easily turned from its course.

We are up now, and a pleasing surprise awaits us.—Nestling among the Maritime Mountains, shut in by a green promontory, a perfect natural breakwater, is the famous harbor of Villafranca—a sort of basin full of deep green water, still and sheltered, and admirably protected by hill-forts from assault. A comfortable resting-place for a squadron this, in time of war! This is the port, the acquisition of which by Russia, not long ago, caused such excitement and uneasiness to our politicians. There are the quarantine buildings over which the Muscovites hoisted their flag; there are their store-houses; there hay their fleet during twelve months. Where are they now? Just as one bird of prey sometimes serves a writ of ejectment on another, so, at the coming in of the French eagle, the double-headed one abandoned its new eyre, and flew off screaming. No sooner had the vanguard of Napoleon crossed Mont Cenis, than the Russians gleaned up all their stores, hauled down their flag, and left Villafranca to be the spoil of a stronger than they. But they had held possession of it long enough to give their neighbors some idea of the working of that lordly vaunted system of Russian civilization, of which we have most of us heard a good deal. Two deserters—one of them a boatswain, the other an ordinary seaman—were knouted to death on board the Russian flag-ship, and the bodies were flung into the sea.—The Sardinian authorities were of course powerless to interfere, but I remember the looks of disgust with which the Russian naval officers were greeted at the king's ball a day or two after, as they swarmed around the rooms in their tight blue coats and bee-hive epaulets. The affair was soon forgotten, though.

We are on our way now to Carabacel, where the prettiest villas are built, and where the handsomest gardens are wooing the hot sun. The climate of Nice is ultra-Italian enough; Florence and Rome are chilly in comparison, but Carabacel has an African climate, and an African luxuriance of vegetation. With what power the white sunlight falls on those rocky terraces, and stone-walls, and stately houses, painted with gay frescoes of marine or mountain scenery! The dust crackles as we pass through the deep lanes; and very welcome is the plash of the fountain yonder, in the courtyard of the villa. We peep through the iron gates, and see a fair basin of white Carrara marble, and a shower of sparkling drops rising and falling, half hidden by the gold and green of the oranges and pomegranate shrubs that cluster jealously around it. The tall garden-walls are capped, not with churlish broken glass or surly spikes, but, with a multitude of scarlet geraniums, growing in the earth between the stones, and forming a broad stripe of bright colour along the top. Carabacel is the paradise of lizards. How boldly the little brown fellows, lithe and slim, sport over the hot stones, and dart after the flies with lambent tongues, and eyes that shine like fire itself! There is a cane-brake that would grace a Brazilian landscape; and there, an avenue of roses; and here, a garden paved with buds of every hue—blue, blue, pink, white and carmine. A little way on, and we come to a stately dwelling with Corinthian portico, and fountains flickering in the sunlight. You see the white limbs of the marble statues peeping through broad green leaves all over the garden, like real nymphs and dryads of the Golden period. The open windows give you a glimpse of lofty and vast rooms, gorgeous with gilding, and crystal lamps, and rare pictures, and marbles, and armor, and all that modern Aladins can collect by the magic of wealth and taste.

The fruit is in wondrous profusion here, where water is the only element needed to insure the utmost fertility, the sun doing the rest. You are seriously surprised, now, to hear that twenty oranges may be bought for as many centesimi; and that a man must be poor indeed who cannot get his daily food, so he be content with rice and water-melons. Cart-loads of casks, drawn by lazy oxen, jolt and rumble past us; one longhead is imperfectly secured, and the purple wine trickles out in great drops, and makes a trail of wine in the dust of the road, that thirstily drinks it up. But wine is cheap—too cheap for the sobriety of the population—and nobody reeks of the loss. Perhaps the most surprising sight which Carabacel affords, is the profusion of cactus flowers. There are great hedges of cactus surrounding orange-gardens and pastures, there are tufts of cactus on every rock, there are wildernesses of cactus in every neglected corner. No puny plants are these rich tinted natives of the tropics, which seem greedily to drink in the rays of the broad sun, but superb specimens, equal to those of Barbary in beauty, and proudly exhibiting their monstrous blossoms of flaming scarlet and crimson, while their huge spiked leaves repel the intruder. Indeed, Nice has a climate that is more African than Italian; and when you go on to Tuscany, you will miss the un-European luxuriance which that fair Riviera di Ponente adorns.

Monaco, and especially San Remo, eclipse Nice in palm trees; but see, there are some handsome trees in yonder walled garden, and the happy owner has gilded the bark of the largest palm, until, as the sun flashes on it, you might take it for a stray pillar of Solomon's temple. How gracefully the palm-branches wave in the south wind, like magnified marabout feathers; and how the very scales of the bark, and the peculiar appearance of the trunks of these transplanted exotics, spirit us away with resistless power to other lands—the Syrian mountains, the yellow deserts, the dim Nile, and its brooding sphinxes! We pass on, and are in the Place d'Armes; and the strains of military music make our pulses beat quicker and higher, as a column marches by with swift yet measured tramp—Piedmontese infantry, a war-worn regiment that fought at the Tchernaya against the Russians, and at Solferino against the Austrians. The men have almost all got the Crimean decorations shining on their breasts, and you can see that the horses of the field-officers are Arabians, picked up in the anti Muscovite campaign. A fine body of men enough, two or three inches taller than an average battalion of Frenchmen, but more languid. You can tell, at a glance, that they lack the fiery elan which the Gaul possesses. Yet there are Sardinian natives who have elan enough, and spirit, and faith, and self-sacrifice enough, and who are equal to the task of reviving a dead heroism, and inspiring mettle into a generation of slaves. That little house before us, with its low stone-porch, is the house where Garibaldi was born. Alas! the very dwelling where the hero first saw the light is now Italian no longer. And that other small abode attracts not a little interest, for the sake of the exiled family it shelters—a family imprisoned, evil-entreated, driven away from home and friends, for the crime of reading a Protestant Bible—the Madiai. Not far off is the British chapel, an unpretending white building of stone. Tolerance is the order of the day now; but when that chapel was first reared, the permission from government to erect and open it was one of the most extraordinary and insulting documents ever promulgated in modern Europe. It set forth that there were many English residents in the town; that they were well-conducted folks who merited indulgence; that they had the singular absurdity (betise) of appertaining to the Protestant faith; and that, therefore, under certain restrictions, the king was graciously pleased to permit them to worship according to their own [illegible]. Bishops governed the royal councils; but those days are gone. Even the poor Vaudois now have their little chapel, and are suffered to pray in peace. As for the Russians, their rites are celebrated at Nice with uncommon splendor; and, as I live, there is one of their ecclesiastics, a strange-looking papas, in a high square velvet cap, a gown, and long curled hair flowing behind on his shoulders, while the front of his head is shaved. How he bows, and folds his arms, and bends his knees, as the imperial carriage comes rolling over the bridge, with the empress seated in it, drawn by four fine thoroughbred grays, and preceded by a mounted chasseur, with a silver-hilted sword, who calls to the people to clear the way.

The dowager-empress, the widow of our old Ice Nicholas, or, as the natives of Nice call her (not understanding imperial titles), the Duchess of Russia, has brought much custom to Nice. See, as her carriage sweeps up to that villa where the sentries present arms, how many hats fly off, how many Tatar head sare bowed before her! There is a powerful Russian colony now, with its archduchesses and its counts and barons, and its princes and princesses by the score. There always has been a very considerable British colony, tempted, some by health, more by gaiety, and most by the novelty of basking in almost eternal sunshine, and dining on Christmas Day with windows open, flowers in bloom, and green pease, fresh gathered, to match the traditional roshif. Now the Russians come in increasing swarms, year by year, to elbow the Britishers off their old accustomed parade, and to make lodgings dear. Superb are the abodes of some of these Tatar dignitaries, richly furnished apartments, gorgeous with gilding, with frescoes, with apocryphal Titians, armour, malachite, velvet, crystal, and Bohemian glass. The natives are dazzled by this new and profitable incursion of the Barbarians.

When the king of Sardinia left Nice after his brief visit in the winter of 1857-58, he was followed with prayers, tears, enthusiasm by the entire population. Triumphal arches, fireworks, illuminations; not only galaxies of light on palace and mansion, but pale poor lamps in the window of the meanest hovel: the love and good-will of the lowly and the wealthy alike were freely given to the Re Galantuomo; and they have been bartered away for market-value. Nice is French soil now—that fair flower is torn from the peninsula: even Garibaldi is only an Italian under sufferance!

MICHAELMAS AND ITS BIRD.

Saint Michael is the Mars of the Christian calender. His name never occurs in the Scriptures save in connection with strife and warfare. The prophet Daniel records how Michael subdued the Persian prince who had for one-and-twenty-days successfully withstood a less mighty angel; and he concludes his prophecies with foretelling how 'the same great prince which standeth for the children of Israel, shall in time to come deliver them out of the hands of their enemies.' St. Jude alludes to the conflict between Satan and the archangel over the body of Moses. The seer of Patmos tells how 'there was war in heaven; Michael and his angels fought against the dragon; and the dragon fought and his angels, and prevailed not.'

Headlong themselves they threw
Down from the verge of heaven; eternal wrath
Burnt after them unto the bottomless pit.

Tradition says Michael bore the banner of the celestial host, and led them against the rebellious angels, till he chased Lucifer and his adherents from heaven, and enclosed them in dark nir till the day of judgment, not in the upper regions, or upon earth, but, like Mohammed's coffin, between the two; so that when they look upwards, they may see the joys they have lost, and when they cast their looks downwards, behold mortals ascending to that heaven from which they fell, and to which they can never hope to return. At one time there was preserved in a castle in Normandy a red velvet buckler, declared to be the identical shield borne by the mighty archangel in that fearful fight. In guerdon of his success, Michael is said to have succeeded revolted Lucifer as chief of the celestial armies. The apocryphal 'Book of Enoch' calls him 'one of the holy angels, who, presiding over human virtues, commands the nations'—Raphael superintending the spirits of men, and Gabriel guarding Paradise and the cherubims.

In ancient heraldic books, Michael is described as the head of the order of archangels, and represented armed with a dart, and carrying a banner hanging from a cross. He has given his name to no less than four orders of knighthood. The order of the Wing of St. Michael was instituted in 1172 by Alfonso of Portugal, to commemorate a signal victory obtained by him over Albarac of Seville, in consequence, as he believed, of his having invoked the aid of the archangel before the battle. Louis XI. of France founded in 1469 the order of St. Michael which was afterwards revived and remodelled by the Grand Monarque. Both these orders are now extinct; but there still exists a Bavarian order, instituted in 1693, and our own Maltese order of St. Michael and St. George, founded so lately as 1818, and ranking after the older order of the Bath.

The festival in honor of St. Michael was kept in Apulia early as 493, and has ever since been celebrated with great solemnity. By the ecclesiastical law enacted in 1014 by the Saxon king Ethelred, every adult Christian was obliged, for three days prior to the festival of St. Michael, to fast on bread and water and raw herbs, and to go to church and confession barefoot. The priests and their flocks went in procession barefoot during the same period. Every well-to-do person was to have his commons for three days prepared (without flesh), as if for his own eating, and then to give them to the poor. Every servant was to be exempt from labor for three days, or allowed to do only what he chose, that he might better perform the fast on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday before the feast. For breaking the fast, a serf was to 'make satisfaction with his hide,' or, in other words, be well flogged; a poor freeman, pay a fine of thirty pence; and a king's thane, a fine of one hundred and thirty shillings—the money so collected being divided among the poor.

Michaelmas boasted but few customs peculiar to itself. In the west of England, maidens used to go up and down the hedges gathering crab-apples; when enough were got, they were taken home, and arranged on the floor of a loft, so as to form the initials of the names of the damsels' various suitors. The initials which were found most perfect on Michaelmas Day, were supposed to be those of the most eligible swains, the strength of whose passions was symbolized by the completeness of the tell-tale initials. In Hertfordshire, the youngmen used to assemble in the fields on Michaelmas Day, and choose a leader, whom they were compelled to follow through ponds and ditches—

Over hill, over dale,
Through bush, through brier,
Over park, over pale.

Every person they met in their wild career was stopped, taken up by the arms, and bumped on the ground, or swung against another captive. On these 'ganging days,' as they were called, each publican they chose to visit was expected to produce a plum cake and a gallon of ale for the refreshment of his unpleasable guests.

Englishmen, however careless of keeping up old customs in general, cling with tenacity to any in which eating and drinking are concerned. Lent salt fish has outlived lasting; people who despise confectionary, like a thick crossbun on Good Friday; and roast-beef, plum-pudding, and mince-pies well, we may be sure, survive us Christmas dishes, even if the misletoe and holly follow the yule-log and Christmas mummers into oblivion. And so will Michaelmas be associated with goose, although how they came to be indissolubly united is a mystery it passes our skill to fathom. Tradition of course has its way of accounting for this as for everything else; and it is a popular belief that glorious Queen Bess one 29th of September, was busy discussing a roasted goose with appetite and enjoyment, when a messenger arrived with the welcome news that the Spanish Armada was defeated, upon which her majesty, laying down her knife and fork, said: 'From this time forth let all English subjects eat goose on this day.' Unfortunately for the truth of this, the fleet met its fate in July; and although the intelligence did not travel with the speed of electricity, it yet reached the court soon enough for public thanksgivings to be offered in London on the 20th of August. This custom seems to have been transferred from Martinmas to Michaelmas, goose being a standing dish on the continent at the former season, in honor of St. Martin, who, having modestly hidden himself when elected to a bishopric, was discovered by a goose.

Norfolk has long been celebrated for its geese; but most of the Norfolk geese sold in the metropolitan markets are not natives, but raised in Prussia and the Rhemish provinces, and fattened in Norfolk for the London consumers. Still the goose is looked upon as the county bird, and at the Old Man's Hospital in Norwich—which has existed since 1249—Michaelmas day is kept as the grand gala-day of the year. Before the glowing fire, a ton of coals strong, slowly revolves a skeleton cylinder of seven or eight feet, after each of which a goose, or rectified on a platter. A little turnspit assists in the operations; but he is obliged to be relieved every now and then, lest he should share the fate of the noble birds he watches so sedulously.

In England, apple-sauce is the common condiment served with goose; in Ireland, they rejoice in kall-common—a melange of potatoes, parsnips, cabbages, and onions, mashed up together with butter; in Wales, we have eaten goose with pease-pudding, but cannot conscientiously recommend the conjunction. But however served up, so long as it is properly cooked, the goose may hold its own, for flavor and richness, with any bird that gourmands delight to honor.

Can roasted Ptiflomel a liver
Fit for a pie produce?
Fat pies that on the Rhine's sweet river
Fair Strasburg bakes—pray, who's the giver?
A goose!

At Michaelmas time, says a Suffolk rhyme—

At Michaelmas time, or a little before,
Half an apple goes to the core;
At Christmas time, or a little after,
A crab in the hedge, and thanks to the grafter.

In the north of Ireland, they have a saying that, 'On Michaelmas Day, the devil puts his foot on the blackberries,' from which we may learn that after that date blackberries are not worth the plucking. It is to be hoped there is not equal truth in another piece of proverbial wisdom, 'So many days the moon is old on Michaelmas Day, so many floods after.' If so, as the moon will be fourteen days old on this present day of St. Michael, the rain of 1860—considering what is past—will be memorable indeed.

ALGERIA.

The country now called Algeria, after being successively under the government of the Carthaginians, Romans, and Vandals, for more than twelve hundred years, fell into the hands of the Arabs, who, newly converted to Muhammedanism, were spreading their faith with fire and sword. About the year 1500, it was overrun by Turkish pirates, who made it their nest and the terror of Christendom for three hundred years. About the middle of the seventeenth century, Admiral Blake, with an English fleet, attacked them and gave them a severe lesson, and fifty years later, Admiral Mathews did the same. Commodore Decatur's brave fight with them in 1815 is well remembered, as well as the final attack by the English and Dutch fleets in 1816, which entirely broke up the concern. Tens and perhaps hundreds of thousands of Christian captives have languished in captivity in Algeria between the years 1500 and 1800. The French invaded and subdued the country in 1830, in consequence of an insult offered to the French Consul. But a few years after, Abd el-Kader, at the head of the Mascara Arabs, led a rebellion and kept up a war of fourteen years.—He was one of the bravest of men, but was finally conquered, and taken to Paris. He was at length set at liberty by Napoleon, and now lives at Damascus, where he greatly distinguished himself at the time of the massacres, by helping the Christians. Algeria cost the French, in 1845, 35,000,000 more than they got from it. But a considerable change for the better is going on. The reduction of the army has greatly diminished the expenses of the colony, and the establishment of peace has much encouraged emigration. An Arabic college, and naval and medical schools, have been established, which are flourishing; while roads, bridges and dykes have been constructed at great expense. The European population is now about 180,000.

THE STUDENT AND THINKER.

It is interesting to trace the progress of that intellectual work by which the mere student is changed into the thinker. The subject of this work passes, gradually, into a new being. His tastes, views, habits, recreations, speech,

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1860.

SYRIA BECOMING ONCE MORE THE CENTRE OF THE WORLD.

Many signs seem to progenerate, says the Edinburg Witness, that the hour of political and social resuscitation is drawing near to Palestine. It is now resuming its old place, as we have said, is the centre of the world, and at the heart of the world's revolutions. Palestine has been an anomalous country from the very first; there has been something about the influence it has wielded inexplicable on ordinary principles. It never possessed any great political influence of its own, and yet it has powerfully influenced the destinies of other countries. The Jews were forbidden to extend their territory; wars of aggrandizement therefore they could not undertake; alliances, in the strict sense, they could not form with other nations; they stood among the kingdoms, yet were not of them. Their little country, moreover, had drawn around it a formidable wall of mountain, and ocean, and desert; and yet, despite this triple line of isolation—this all but impassible barrier between the Jew and all other men, between Judea and all other countries—both the people and the country have been strangely mixed up with the affairs of other nations. The little territory has been the pivot around which the affairs of great kingdoms have revolved. In the first ages it stood between Egypt and Chaldea, and had much to do with the politics of both these kingdoms. Empire in due time shifted its seat; but an invisible power kept it still in the close neighborhood of Judea, and tied its fortunes to those of that little country. The great kingdom of Persia arose on the one side of it, and that of Greece on the other; and the fate of Palestine began to act and react upon that of its warlike and powerful neighbors. Rome next arose; and no sooner had it grown to importance than it came in contact with Palestine. Thus has it been ever bound up in a strange mysterious way with all the great kingdoms of the world, and has had its share in all the great political revolutions which have changed the aspect of the world and the condition of its nations. And now, after being hidden in the deep shades of the Asiatic night for so many ages, and having neither part nor lot in the world's affairs, it suddenly starts up, challenges its old place in the world's regard, and this insignificant and forgotten country becomes in truth one of the grand political problems of the day. Palestine stands once more in the midst of the great kingdoms of the earth. It has France and Britain on the west, it has Russia on the North, it has India on the east. The great lines of the world's policy meet once more, where they have so often met before, in that little country which stands midway betwixt the colossal North, and barbarous East, and the civilized and powerful West. The paramount question of the hour after Italy is Syria. To leave that country as it is, is to erect a standing menace to the world's peace, and to make sure of a future fall of revolution and war. And yet how to effect a settlement of it is a question which the wisdom of no politician has yet been found adequate to solve.

Meanwhile, the question presses hard for a solution, and threatens to give the world no rest till it be settled. A hundred considerations may be urged why that settlement should be delayed, and essayed now. Immensely it undeniably is. These dater statesmen from risks and persuade them to hope that time may bring a remedy for its dangers; but these hopes are fallacious: delay will but increase the mischief, and destruction will come at last like an armed man. The Ottoman rule is manifestly doomed. The House of Ottoman is detested by those kingdoms and nations which it acquired by plunder and conquest at first, and which it has retained by injustice and force. There is no instance in history of any other race which has reigned so long over so large a portion of the world, and has done so little as the Turks for the progress of mankind. Their work has only been to barbarize and destroy. They have been the authors of no one science, the discoverers of no one beneficent invention. Letters and the arts owe them no thanks. Nothing that tended to enlighted mankind or ameliorate the condition of the world has ever come from them. From the moment the magnificent provinces over which they dominate came into their possession they began to decline, their cities to moider, their trade to stagnate, and their soil to decay. That decline has gone steadily onward, and now Turkey is perhaps the most frightfully demoralized and devastated region on the earth. The army is a hot-bed of fanaticism and intrigue. The judges are corrupt, the provincial rulers are generally venal, treacherous, and ferocious tyrants, years of selfish indulgence and expenditure have exhausted the finances, public credit is gone, virtue and truth have perished from the mass of the nation, and society is radically and incurably rotten. Why should any sacrifices be made to preserve such a race from the ruin to which it is hastening?

EUROPEAN AFFAIRS.

In an article, glancing at the present condition of affairs in Europe, the Mobile Advertiser says: The most casual observer of things foreign, must remark that European affairs are in a very interesting because portentous condition. The struggle in Italy is of some consequence in itself, but may be shrewdly esteemed only the incendiary brand which lights up a grand conflagration. Chafing to be at it, but fearing to undertake it, Austria on the one side is concentrating her forces on the Po and preparing for a swoop upon Lombardy, to recapture it to her crown, and avenge herself upon her mortal enemy, Victor Emanuel, and his man Garibaldi. On the other side, Louis Napoleon, that tremendous man, "grand, gloomy and peculiar" as his uncle, and thrice as powerful, the nightmare horror alike of the house of Romanoff and Hapsburg, of Bourbon and Guelph, is crouching in his Gallic lair, his basilisk eye watching Austria and ready for the spring upon his prey, at the head of the four hundred thousand men whom he has under arms, at the very moment that she commits the "overt act" of trespassing one foot upon the soil of Lombardy.

Austria is painfully aware of her position, but with a sort of trembling desperation seems inclined to dare the worst, only delaying now in the hope of identifying in her cause such potential backers as Russia and Prussia, and to this end a conference of the triumvirate has been appointed to meet at Warsaw. This is indicated by their declining to invite Louis Napoleon to join them. The European intelligence informs us that he feels mortified by the slight. Not a bit of it. He knows what is to be done there and knows he could not take part in it. He sits down in his closet at Paris and holds a high authoritative and confidential consultation with himself. His Imperial head has a better filling of policy, foresight and general wisdom than all the three heads of Czar, Emperor and King combined, which will harmoniously bob-sob at the pow-wow in Warsaw.

He foresees that they are likely to unite in common cause against him, that they put forth Austria to bring on the foray by striking a blow for the recapture of her cis-Alpine territory. Prussia feels that Napoleon has fixed a covetous eye on her Rhenish provinces, and with such allies as Russia and Austria is willing to take time by the forelock and enfeeble him if possible. As to Russia the Crimean wound still rankles, she is his hereditary enemy, and her fingers itch to clutch Turkey which he has quietly informed her, as only a Bonaparte could, she cannot lay a finger upon while he wields the terrible power of France, swift as the lightning, sure and terrible as doom.

This, we think, is a true position of the paramount political affairs of Europe, and what they portend time will show. Meanwhile the chill of distrust of its French ally is still on England, and she continues to strengthen her borders and marshal her forces (volunteer and military) as they never were strengthened and marshaled before. The Bonaparte constantly assures them that he is their dear friend; but they remember Waterloo and St. Helena, and don't believe him.

MISSIONS.

The Chronicle (Baptist) has a valuable article on the success of Missions. We cite a passage which may serve our missionary advocates:—Modern missionary effort has given to 20,000,000 of people in Asia, Africa, and America the inestimable benefit of a written language. Twenty dialects of Africa have thus been enlisted in the cause of truth. In one of these, the language of three millions of men, a newspaper is published, printed by the natives themselves, and circulating amongst 3000 readers. Thus, then, the Word of God has been translated and a Christian literature commenced for five-sixths of the heathen inhabitants of the world. In this department of effort most of the difficulties have been overcome. May we not regard this as a promise of still greater success? In benighted Africa about one hundred churches have been organized in different parts of the coast and interior and more than ten thousand converts have been gathered into them. In India 1170 missionaries, native preachers, and catechists are employed; 75,000 scholars are taught in the mission schools, of whom 15,000 are Hindoo girls; and 125,000 converts have been gained, not including those who have finished their course. In China about ninety missionaries are laboring at fourteen different stations. Throughout the whole mission field nearly 3000 European and American missionaries and their assistants, and more than 6000 native agents of all kinds, are engaged, having around them about 500,000 persons brought under the influence of the truth. The churches thus gathered are germinal churches, generally dispersed over the wide field of labor, and at the same time occupying positions of great influence.

TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

This body convened at Clarksville on the 10th inst., and was opened by Bishop Pierce at 9 o'clock A. M. Bishop Soule was present most of the session, and took much interest in the proceedings. A large number of the members was present, and the business, which has grown to be very heavy, was transacted in the usual mode, and with much harmony. A large number of candidates for admission was received on trial; and, as will be seen from the list of appointments, several were transfered to various sister Conferences. The finances fell below the demands of the Church; but this was owing, mainly, to the great pressure on the monetary affairs of the country.

Three brethren had died during the year, namely: Revs. A. R. Erwin, D.D., W. J. Cooley, and Coleman H. Cross. These all died in the faith. An appropriate and affecting discourse was preached on Tuesday, in memory of these brethren, by Dr. Green. The effect on the congregation, as well as on the members of the Conference, was deep—all mourned the loss of their worthy colleagues, but rejoiced in their triumph over the fear of death.

the preachers; and his sermon universal satisfaction of deep impression on all who heard him. His visit will be long remembered with pleasure.

The citizens of Clarksville displayed much hospitality in the entertainment of the Conference and visitors, and the various railroads were generous, in conveying the preachers on liberal terms.

The Conference adjourned on Thursday the 18th inst.

THE PAPAL CHURCH.

A letter from Rome, in the Monde, gives the following statistical details: The Catholic world is divided into 1007 bishoprics, or prelacies with episcopal jurisdiction, under different titles—apostolic vicariates, abbatial jurisdictions, or territories, nullius diocesis. Of the 1007, 681 are in Europe, 228 in Asia, 29 in Africa, 146 in America, and 25 in Oceanice. In Europe there are 2 patriarchs, 116 archbishops, 484 bishops, 45 concathedrals, 15 abbots or priors, with quasi-episcopal jurisdiction, 6 military chaplains, 18 vicars, delegates and apostolical prefects. In Asia there are 6 patriarchs, 3 archbishops, 54 bishops, 65 apostolical vicars and prefects. In Africa there are 10 bishops and 19 apostolical vicars and prefects. In America there are 23 archbishops, 115 bishops and 9 apostolical vicars. In Oceanica 2 archbishops, 12 bishops, 8 apostolical vicars, 1 apostolical prefect. As regards Europe, the following is the detail: In Italy, 1 patriarch, 47 archbishops, 215 bishops, 44 concathedrals, 11 abbatial territories and 1 military chaplain. In Spain, 9 archbishops, 45 bishops, 1 concathedral, 4 military chaplains or prelates. Portugal—1 patriarch, 2 archbishops, 14 bishops. France—16 archbishops, 65 bishops, 1 military chaplain. Belgium and Holland—2 archbishops, 9 bishops, 1 apostolical vicar. Austrian Empire—16 archbishops, 48 bishops, 1 abbot, 1 military chaplain. Germanic Confederation—6 archbishops, 18 bishops, 2 apostolical vicars or delegates. United Kingdom of Great Britain—5 archbishops, 38 bishops, 3 apostolical vicars. North of Europe—2 archbishops, 14 bishops, 2 apostolical vicars. Malta, Greece, Turkey—6 archbishops, 14 bishops, 8 apostolical vicars, or prelates, under different names. Switzerland—5 bishops, 1 abbot, 2 apostolic prefects.

A GOOD REPORT.

The following is an extract from the letter of a student at Greensboro' University to his parents:—

"I went to class-meeting on last Sunday evening, and before I left I felt like a new being. I know I am a better christian than I was before I left home. I have often heard mothers and fathers advising (very properly too) their sons of the dangers of college life. Now what I have to say about the Southern University as regards that, is this, that if any young man will come here, and attend our students' class-meeting, there is not much danger of him. I say "our," because of the superiority of those composing it. I have had nothing that excited me more to be religious than our class-meetings. I am trying to be a better christian every day. While Mr. Ramsay was preaching on Sabbath evening, I felt willing to be anything and to do anything that would make me a better Christian. Such is the effect of the teaching and hearing of the faculty, and of the associations with my class-mates and the pious and intelligent citizens, as well as the faithful ministrations of our pastor."

GIVING.—The Old School Presbytery of Philadelphia at a late meeting, adopted the following: "Whereas It is believed that in all our churches there are members who hear the Gospel preached from Sabbath to Sabbath, and yet do not contribute by pew-rents or otherwise, to the maintenance of the Church; and whereas, it is due both to themselves, and to the Church, that they should contribute; therefore, Resolved, That to the judgment of this Presbytery, it is the duty of every member of the Church to contribute regularly to the support of the Church, directly or indirectly, according to the ability which God has given."

LITERARY NOTICES.

LECTURES ON THE PHYSICAL FORCES.—By Prof. M. Faraday. 12mo. Harper and Brothers. 1860. For sale by Thos. L. White, 105 Canal street.

These lectures were delivered to an audience of boys and girls at the Royal Institution of Great Britain, during the Christmas holidays of 1859-60; and are printed as they were spoken, verbatim et literatim. It has often surprised us that parents take so little pains to introduce their children to the most interesting of all knowledge, the wonders of their own pulse, and breath, and motion. There is more to think of and to delight the mind in the hand of a little child, than in all the framework and movement of the heavens. "I do think," says Prof. F., "that to a young person of ten, fifteen, or twenty years of age, perhaps the first sight of a cataract or a mountain would occasion him more surprise than he had ever felt concerning the means of his own existence: how he came here, how he lives, by what means he stands upright, and through what means he moves about from place to place. Hence, we come into this world, we live, and depart from it, without our thoughts being called specifically to consider how all this takes place; and were it not for the exertions of some few inquiring minds, who have looked into these things, and ascertained the very beautiful laws and conditions by which we do live and stand upon the earth, we should hardly be aware that there was anything wonderful in it."

THE VOCABULARY OF PHILOSOPHY, Mental, Moral, and Metaphysical. By Wm. Fleming, D. D., Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Glasgow.—Revised, &c., by Chas. P. Krouth, D.D. Philadelphia: Smith, English & Co. 1860. Pp. 650, 12mo. For sale by Cleghorn & Co., 94 Camp street.

The author informs us that the original design of this work was to teach the student of philosophy what to read and how to understand what he reads. Had the the title been, "The Dictionary of Philosophy," the purpose of the writer would have been more accurately suggested to the public. In these days, when philosophical words occupy so large a place in the language—words of the English, French and German philosophies—one reads a book pretty much as if many passages were blotted with ink, and made impossible to decipher. For instance, "objective" and "subjective,"—how many tolerably well informed people have a horror of those well and badly used words. The "absolute," the "unconditioned," the "ego," and the "non ego," "objective idealism," and "subjective idealism," the "subject of incision," and the "subject of operation," the "materia inqua," and the "materia circa quam," they are all an many banks of fog to a homeward bound vessel, and when encountered put a most painful arrest upon the speed and thought of the reader. This work proposes to dispel those provoking mists in the easiest and shortest way. We hail it as the sun rising over the banks of Newfoundland. Let the reader take a sample: "Subject, Object.—We frequently meet," says Dr. Reid, "with a distinction between things in the mind and things external to the mind. The powers, faculties, and operations of the mind are things in the mind. Everything is said to be in the mind of which the mind is the subject. * * Excepting the mind itself and things in the mind, all other things are said to be external." "The mind and things in the mind constitute the ego. All other things are said to be external. They constitute the non ego." We can commend the book to any reader of the English language who desires to read understandingly,

THE LAKE REGIONS OF CENTRAL AFRICA. By Richard F. Burton, Captain H. M. I. Army. Harper & Bros. 1860. For sale by Thos. L. White, 105 Canal street.

Barton, his physical configuration to admire in Captain information, or the richness of his style as a writer. The Crimean correspondent of the Times, Mr. Raskin the artist, and Capt. Barton, we esteem as the best word-painters in the language. Everything which he says is interesting, from the way in which he says it. His explanations have added largely to the map of Africa. It is rapidly ceasing to be "that undiscovered country from whence no traveller returns," which our schoolboy imagination conceived it to be. Thanks to the Englishman's desire to get possession of some goodly land where cotton is, we are in a fair way to know all about its lakes, deserts, and mountains. It is curious to see how unresistingly these great travellers,—Livingston, Speke, Barth, and Burton—struggle against the great facts of the negro's inherent barbarism, and how they at last return home the unwilling witnesses of the hopeless inferiority of his normal condition.

"A 'sentimental squedron,'" says Capt. Burton, "like the West African, would easily, by means of steam, prevent any regular exportation to the Asiatic continent. But these means would deal only with effects, leaving the causes in full vigor; they would strike at the boll and branches, the root retaining sufficient vitality to resume its functions as soon as relieved from the pressure without. Neither treaty nor fleet would avail permanently to arrest the course of slavery upon the seaboard, much less would it act on the far realms of the interior. At present the African will not work. The purchase of prediul slaves to till and harvest for him is the great aim of his life."

All who wish to know more of the home and the habits of the inevitable negro should avail themselves of this elaborate and wonderfully entertaining medium.

COMMENTARY ON ECCLESIASTES. By E. W. Hengstenberg, D. D., Prof. of Theology at Berlin. Translated from the German by D. W. Simon. 8 vo. Philudelphia. Smith, English & Co.. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by Cleghorn & Co.

The philosophy of this author's comment can be reckoned by the Biblical render. "We shall prove," he says in the preface, "that Solomon is not only not the direct author of the book but that it does not even profess to be by him; that, on the contrary, the very first words indicate him not to have written it." So the reader can see that the work is not deficient in the elements of novelty; and in that respect it is strongly German. The German mind is Ishmaelitish, as well as speculative. A position which has to be maintained against the past and the present fascinates a German, and he directly takes it. According to Prof. Heugstenberg, Chap. I. teaches that the splendor of the age of Solomon was vanity; Chap. III., that the nation of Israel was being tried; Chap. IV., that the earth was then a scene of violence, Israel was then a poor people, in contrast with their rich heathen tyrants. According to Chap. VII, Israel was then in the house of mourning, the heathen sat in the house of feasting. "The condition of the power which then ruled the world is depicted in Chap. X., XI.–XX.," and so on. We are forcibly reminded, while looking over this labored work, of the great contrast there is between the far-fetched conceits and attenuated theories of the German Commentator, and the direct, strong, natural, and common-sense views of the English. After half a hundred years, the German mind, in its most orthodox mood, comes to accept the Scriptare renderings of Barrow and Hooker; but through what endless processes of mazy reasoning! The reader will be interested in comparing this work with that of the Rev. James Hamilton, "The Royal Preacher," a comment on Ecclesiastes; who, in a style only equalled by Addison, readers the Book as the record of Solomon's experience during his estrangement from God.

THE FOUR GEORGES. By W. M. Thackeray. With Illustrations. 12mo. Harper and Brothers. 1860.—For sale by Thos. L. White, 105 Canal street.

This book embodies, the sprightly and word-rich lectures of the great English satirist. One can scarcely imagine a more readable, racy book.

PULPIT THEMES, AND PREACHER'S ASSISTANT. Philadelphia. Smith, English, & Co. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by Cleghorn & Co., 94 Camp street.

This is a neatly gotten up volume of 440 pages, fair paper and clear type. It contains 54 "themes" and 95 skeletons of sermons. From looking over the table of contents we find the themes and skeletons are practical and evangelical. We must say, however, that we do not much approve of works of the class.

ODD PEOPLE. For sale by Thos. L. White, 105 Canal street.

A most readable book, especially for the young and curious. Buy it for your boy.

PASTORAL INEFFICIENCY.

REPLY TO NO. II. OF "J. WILL."

MR. EDITOR: If "J. Will" had published in the Nashville Advocate, where my articles on "pastoral inefficiency" appeared, I should not likely have troubled you, or any one, with anything more, as I would be quite willing to leave the decision as to the merits of the contents of our articles with the Methodist public. But as he reviews me in this paper—but few of whose readers have read my articles,—I think it necessary to reply. I regret that "J. Will" thought it necessary to answer my views by making me as odious as he could by disconnected quotations. The preacher who took from the 17th verse of the 24th chapter of Matthew, in order to preach against reaching up the hair in front,—"top not come down,"—was certainly an ingenious but hardly legitimate expounder. In order to set myself fairly before your readers, it will be necessary for me to state here some of the statements made, and positions assumed, in the Nashville Advocate: I said in my first article, that our ministers were "religious and spiritually-minded men," that "no wise man, competent to the discharge of the arduous and responsible duties devolving on itinerants would assume them unless actuated by proper motives," and that "no ministry has been more abundant in labors and sacrifices." Now after saying this, and saying I was an itinerant myself, and had been for more than half my life, I hardly expected to be charged with slandering our ministers, by insinuating that they would be actuated by improper and "sinister" motives in discharging their duty. I said as I think truly, "there is no question but the ecclesiastical arrangements and conditions under which ministers work have an influence upon them, and give direction and character to their work." Assuming this statement to be true, I stated in substance that men who who went to pastoral fields to occupy them one year, or at most two years, would feel that it would be difficult for them to do as much socially, to build Churches, schools, and parsonages, and therefore would be more likely to turn their attention and exertions to that part of the work which seemed most hopeful of immediate results, and so labor mostly towards immediate conversions and accessions to the Church. This certainly was wise in them, and the work they did "honorable and glorious." But it was not likely to make them so efficient in other departments of ministerial work. My idea was, that if ministers could stay longer than one or two years they would not only labor to have revivals, but to build up the Church by pastoral visiting, expository preaching, church-building, and school-building, for they would feel that there was time for the cultivation of each and all of their fields of usefulness. And as ministers are men, husbands and fathers, they would naturally feel more interest in communities where their children were to go to school four years, and where the communities were to be their associates and neighbors a number of years, than as transient only one, or at most two years to be thus employed in all this "sinister" or slanderous to our ministry. I see nothing but what seems a natural and proper outgrowth of our social nature. Poets and novelists say that young people "fall in love," may be so; but among people of riper years the friendship that is solid must be founded upon esteem, esteem based upon those qualities of character which gradually develop themselves in the various offices and relations of life. No doubt our regular members will receive us kindly when we go to our appointments, and from our accredited position at once place confidence in us, but we must not expect that even they will love us for some time to come as much as the faithful brother who has just preceded us. Neither can we feel towards them, for some while, as we do towards the pious and kind with whom we have just spent two happy years in social and christian communion;—it is not in human nature that we should. All this is emphasized in relation to outside people. We have to make our way among them and into their confidence. This is not, and cannot from the nature of the case, be the work of a day or a month.

"Charity thinketh no evil." If "J. Will" had taken my whole article in its general spirit and bearing, instead of the course adopted, I don't think that his article would have contained some of the terms which (I must speak in the judgment of charity) mar its otherwise respectable claims.

Notwithstanding, "J. Will" says that he has "confuted" my opinion, I still think my position true—to wit: that a longer pastorate (I have said four years, but merely mention a definite time to relieve the Bishops of too onerous a responsibility. I should really prefer to leave it entirely discretionary with the Bishop to move us just when he thinks the work demands it, and let us stay just as long as we are successfully realizing the ends of our appointment)—a longer pastorate would make better preachers, build more and better churches and parsonages, and prevent locations. I do not honestly think that my reasoning has been successfully answered. But I admit to err is human, and so may be mistaken.

No one more heartily agrees with J. Will than I do, that the baptism of the Holy Ghost, the power from on high, is the grand and imperative necessity of the Christian ministry; but whether this without favorable ecclesiastical arrangements will always make efficient pastors, is another question.

Knowing as I well did that some people never permit you to propose any change in existing usages, without calling in question your Christianity or your Methodism, I rather pleasantly alluded to my Methodistic ancestry (of which, may be, I am a little vain), in order to show that I was sound, though I thought and said that improvement was possible even in our excellent ecclesiastical arrangements.

In his first article "J Will" intimates that my Methodism is dubious, but "supposes" in his second I must be "sound at heart," and charitably and courteously concludes that it is my "brain" that is wrong. This is an alarming diagnosis.

J. B. WALKER.

ASTRONOMERS have built telescopes which can show myriads of stars unseen before; but when a man looks through a tear in his own eye, that is a lens which opens reaches in the unknown, and reveals orbs which no telescope, however skilfully constructed, could do; nay, which brings to view even the throne of God, and pierces that nebulous distance where are those eternal verities in which true life consists.

THE richest lady in England is Miss Burdett Coutts, to whom Dickens dedicated his Martin Chuzzlewit. Her fortune is said to be fabulously large, but the most glorious thing connected with it is, that she is at the same time one of the noblest and most benevolent ladies in the world. Not only has she built several churches, but she provides for the poor, the ailing, and the oppressed.

AUTHORS AND BOOKS.

New York, Nov. 20, 1860.

In England has just been published a book called "The wit and wisdom of Sydney Smith." It is a collection of his "best things." I do not like such books, because the "best thing" has always a connection, and a joke, to be really enjoyable, must have a proper occasion. Joe Miller is the dreariest of books, and any man of your acquaintance, who is persistently and intentionally funny, you probably avoid as a bore. The beauty of genuine wit is the substratum of clear common sense in which it is founded or built up; and the use of it is that it makes some disputed truth clear, or sheds a flood of light on some fallacy crouching in the dark and awcing weak people by its vagueness and mystery. Now in most books of extracts, the service which the piece extracted did is necessarily lost, because the brevity of an extract will not often admit the whole relations of the phrase to appear.

Nevertheless, there are things in the book which are perfect in themselves; when Sydney Smith said "a man cannot be benevolent from 8 o'clock in the morning to 8 o'clock at night," he told a great truth, and dealt a hard blow at professional philanthropists, of whom some have been—aside from their profession—very hard hearted men; as a friend once asserted to me, that aside from their profession lawyers were generally honest men.—Howard was so severe towards his only son and child, that he drove the poor boy mad by pure ill treatment. But Howard was a philanthropist.

This instance, by the way, does not prove that all benevolent men are hard hearted; which word of explanation is put in for your sake, Mr. Editor, whom I know to be a benevolent man.

Sydney Smith was the genius and apostle of common sense. I think he was oftener right than most men of his day—though he did abuse us Methodists, and though he did try (in vain) to write down missionary societies, and though he was witty at the expense of repudiating Pennsylvania. Most people know of him only as a joker of jokes, but his best point is when he is most in earnest, and his Lectures on Moral Philosophy, which though reprinted in this country, are little known, are the most delightful good reading that I know of,—never flagging in interest, full of the happiest illustrations, and abounding with the finest sense, and the most elevating tone that can be brought to bear on the consideration of so high and serious a subject. Witness this paragraph on knowledge, and then get the book and thank me for the recommendation: "I solemnly declare that, but for the love of knowledge, I should consider the life of the meanest hedger and ditcher, as preferable to that of the greatest and richest man here present for the fire of our minds is like the fire which the Persians burn in the mountains—it flames night and day and is immortal, and not to be quenched! Upon something it must act and feed, upon the pure spirit of knowledge, or upon the foul dregs of polluting passions. Therefore, when I say, in conducting your understanding, love knowledge with a great love, with a vehement love, with a love coequal with life; what do I say, but love innocence—love virtue—love purity of conduct—love that which if you are rich and great, will sanctify the blind fortune which has made you so, and make men call it justice; love that which, if you are poor, will render your poverty respectable, and make the proudest feel it unjust to laugh at the meanness of your fortunes—love that which will comfort you, adorn you, and never quit you,—which will open to you the kingdom of thought, and all the boundless regions of conception, as an asylum against the cruelty, the injustice, and the pain that may be your lot in the outer world,—that which will make your motives habitually great and honorable, and light up in an instant a thousand noble disdains at the very thought of meanness and of fraud! Therefore, if any young man here have embarked his life in pursuit of knowlege, let him not be intimidated by the cheerless beginnings of knowledge, by the darkness from which she springs, by the difficulties which hover around her, by the wretched habitations in which she dwells, by the want and sorrow which sometimes journey in her train; but let him ever follow her as the angel that guards him, and as the genius of his life. She will bring him out at last into the light of day, and exhibit him to the world comprehensive in acquirements, fertile in resources, rich in imagination, strong in reasoning, prudent and powerful above his fellows, in all the relations and in all the offices of life."

Mr. Edmond About, whose book on the Roman Question I hope you have read (either in the original or in Mrs. Woods' excellent translation), has just published another work, entitled "Contemporary Rome," in which he further exhibits the frightful rottenness of Roman society. The book is, in fact, only a study of Roman society and manners. It exhibits a good deal of decay in the core of the apple, but the Pontiff himself is spared any further photographing. So also are the cardinals, with all the violet velvet processions of the Vatican.—Nobles, tradesmen, artists, and bandits occupy the foreground. In the rear is the Ghetto, with its nasal nation,—the Church, with marriage and funeral in rivalry for the spectator's eye,—the Barrack, and the Trastevere; and in the distance, the pasture lands which help to feed the State, and the pestilential Alsatia in which its outlaws find an asylum. It is a very readable book, full of matter of interest, and happily expressed as is M. About's witty way. This anecdote, which I quote from him, shows how we heretics are considered in christian Rome: "A Parisian Jew, who went to Rome to witness the ceremonies of the Holy Week, was lodged in a particular house. Some days after Easter he received, by mistake, the visit of a confessor appointed to collect documentary confession, and denounce to justice all who had violated the laws of the Church. "Excuse me, sir," said the Jew, upon opening his door; "but I am not a Christian." "You are a Lutheran, perhaps," inquired the priest, more politely than tenderly. "No, sir, an Israelite."—"Come," answered the confessor, "that is not so bad!"

Mr. Hepworth Dixon's "Personal History of Lord Bacon," which rumor and the London Athenæum report is to reverse Lord Macaulay's and the world's decision that Bacon was "The wisest, greatest, meanest of mankind," will contain more than a hundred letters never yet seen by any writer, from Bacon to his mother, to his brother Anthony, to Sir Robert Cecil, and many others; from Lady Bacon, from Essex, Cecil, and a host of others. They are full of personal and domestic interest, and reveal more of Bacon, the man, than has yet been known.

Among the memoirs about to be published, is the autobiography of Dr. Carlyle, of Inveresk in Scotland; a reverend gentleman noted in his day for his social powers, but who died in 1805, leaving nothing in print, but some volumes of sermons. After nearly sixty years comes this autobiography, in which to hear all about his celebrated contemporaries, the men who flourished from 1721 to 1805. He was the friend of Hume, Robertson, Smollett, Dr. Franklin, Wilkes, John Home, and other great men of that generation, and he furnishes much interesting matter concerning them. He was in the battle of Preston Pans, and gives a lively sketch from that action.

An English clergyman has just written a book to prove that the old story of Whittington and his Cat is no fable but a true story. In the course of his volume he gives some information about the animal to which Whittington owed his fortune, which is very interesting. With respect to its antiquity he reminds us that neither the cat nor the rat are mentioned anywhere in the Bible. The domestic cat was, it seems, first imported from Egypt to Cyprus, and thence to England. We then come to the value of this interesting animal. Mr. Lysons quotes from enactments of between A. D. 900 and 1000 (published by the commissioners on public records, 18-41), that—"1. The worth of a kitten from the night it is kittened until it shall open its eyes is a legal penny. 2. And to the time it shall kill mice, two-pence. 3. And after it shall kill mice, four legal pence," &c. It must be borne in mind that the value of money in Whittington's time, the 14th and 15th century, was from ten to twelve times that of the present day. A king's cat was valued "by holding it by the tail and covering it with wheat;" and the "teiths" (or qualities) of a cat, "that it be perfect of ear, perfect of eye, perfect of teeth, perfect of tail, perfect of claw, and without marks of fire." And good reason for this. "Cats that lie by the fire," observes our author, "are generally lazy and bad mousers, and also, if they have been singed the rats would discover them by the smell." The first Spanish cat taken to the Indies (i.e. Chili) cost Don Diego Almagro, a companion of Pizarro in 1535, 200 pieces of eight. (Voyages and Travels by Alonzo de Ovalle.) Then comes a story, apropos, from a description of the coast of Guinea, by one Jean Barbot, in the 17th century. "Cats," says M. Barbat, "by the blacks called Amboyo, whose breed comes from Europe, are much valued for clearing the houses of rats and mice, which are very numerous, especially the first, doing much harm to the inhabitants by gnawing and devouring all they can come at," &c.

The times are such that people read nothing but newspapers now-a-days, for which reason prudent publishers are holding back their works, even when ready for press. In this last week Dr. Tift's "Methodism Successful" is the most noteworthy book. It is published by Derby & Jackson; and is—so I judge from a hasty look through it—a kind of very complete hand-book of Methodism and Methodists. It is very full of ounces of eminent Methodists—living as well as dead—and is written in a very readable, energetic, and zealous way.

ORDER OF EXAMINATION AT LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

Rev. A. E. Goodwyn, communicates the following:

The Classes to be examined at the next session of the Louisiana Conference, will meet in the basement of the Methodist Church, at Baton Rouge, on Monday morning, the 3rd of December, at nine o'clock. They will be expected to appear before the Committees in the following order, viz.:—

COMMITTEE ON ENGLISH LITERATURE.—Class of first year, Monday, from 9 a.m. to 12 m. Class of second year, same day, 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Class of third year, Tuesday, 9 a.m. to 12 m. Class of fourth year, same day, from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

BIBLICAL LITERATURE.—Class of second year, Monday, from 9 a.m. to 12 m. Class of third year, same day, from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Class of fourth year, Tuesday, from 9 a.m. to 12 m. Class of first year, same day, from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

DOCTRINAL AND CONTROVERSIAL THEOLOGY.—Class of third year, Monday, from 9 a.m. to 12 m. Class of fourth year, same day, from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Class of first year, Tuesday, from 9 a.m. to 12 m. Class of second year, same day, 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY AND CHURCH GOVERNMENT.—Class of fourth year, Monday, from 9 a.m. to 12 m. Class of first year, same day, from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m. Class of second year, Tuesday, from 9 a.m. to 12 m. Class of third year, same day, from 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

HE TAKES NO RELIGIOUS PAPER.

Who takes no religious paper? A member of the church, and quite a leading man in the congregation to which he belongs.

Is he a poor man? No; he carries on a large business, and makes money faster than most of his brethren. If he were poor there would be some excuse for him. If he were, or professed himself, too busy, he might be excused. But he is not. He is posted up in political matters. You might as well think to turn the sun out of his course as to convince him that anything is wrong which his party advocates. And he wants everything done in the church according to his way, and he is perfectly sure that his way is the way things were done in the purest and best times of the reformation.

But he knows nothing about the missions of the church. He does not know where she has missions established among the heathen. He could not tell you whether they have done any good. He could not tell you whether a descendant of Abraham has been converted these fifty years. He knows nothing about how other congregations in his own church are getting along. So when one member rejoices with it, and when another member suffers, he cannot suffer with it.

He casts a dime into the hat once or twice a year when collections are taken up, and then wonders what the church does with so much money.

PROPHECIES—DR. CUMMING.

The Rev. Dr. Cumming, author of The Last Tribulation, is said to have another work on unfulfilled prophecy in course of preparation, entitled, Your Redemption Draweth Nigh. According to this popular preacher and writer, this dispensation is to end in the year 1868. But it somewhat militates against his credit as an interpreter, that he formerly fixed "the time of the end" for a year which has already passed; but then Dean Swift, who postponed the eclipse of the sun by proclamation, extended the period by several years. After what has occurred within the last few years, and even months, we are not inclined to doubt that very extraordinary events are in progress. The death-struggles of Mohammedanism in the East, and those of the Pope's temporal sovereignty in the West, proclaim this with more than a trumpet's voice. But "this dispensation" is Christ's reign on earth in the hearts of men by his word and Spirit, and these will vanquish opposition, and go on from victory to victory, till their final triumph in the universal spread of the Gospel; and it will continue as a probationary state, but a state of peace, prosperity, and righteousness, through the whole of the millenial period. The Providence of God, co-operating with his written and preached word, is preparing the way, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.—Methodist.

TRANSLATIONS OF THE BIBLE.—Dr. Van Dyck is going on with his labors in the translation of the Old Testament into Arabic, and is carrying on at the same time the printing of a vowelled edition of the Arabic New Testament. The ordinary Arabic text of all books printed at the American press, as well as all Arabic letters, newspapers, etc., is entirely destitute of vowel points; but the Koran and all the religious books of the Moslems are written with the vowels. In order, then, to induce Mohammedans to read the New Testament, one most important preliminary is to print it with full vowelling. This work will be through the press during the winter. The whole Bible has been translated into the modern Armenian and the Armeno-Turkish, and new editions are continually being printed. One of the American missionaries, Dr. Riggs, is now engaged in preparing a version of the Old Testament into the Bulgarian language.

A GLORIOUS THING.—When John Foster was prostrated by disease; when his noble intellect was like a strong man fettered and dungeoned, a friend said, "It must be hard for you to lie here, unable to write,—unable even to think." "Yes," he replied, "but I can still pray, and that is a GLORIOUS THING."

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

NOVEMBER 30, 1860.

APPOINTMENTS OF TENNESSEE CONFERENCE.

Greenville Dist.—Adam S. Riggs, P E; McKendree charge and Capers' chapel, also W Hanner, E Carr, sup.; Andrew chapel and Andrew chapel, W G Norris, W R Warren, sup.; Asbury street, J A Edmunson; city mission, J G Myers; Christian chapel, E G Robertson; Germantown mission, S Barth; Hobson chapel, E C Bryant; Tulip street, to be supplied; Edgefield and Trinity, W M Green; White's Creek circuit, J R Thompson; Franklin station, J A Ellis; Harpeth circuit, J W Culliat, Hill; Nashville circuit, F M Hickman, A T Crawford; Agent, J R McFerrin, and member of Holston Annual Conference; John F Hughes, Agent of Book and Tract Society, and member of Columbia Quarterly Conference.

Lebanon Dist.—F E Pitts, P E; Lebanon station, R A Kelly, sup; Lebanon circuit, R C Hatter; Dixon circuit, J J Ellis; Gallatin station, Jos Cross; Sumner circuit and Bethel charge, G L Staley, B B Hargrave, B F Ferrill, sup.; Round Creek circuit and colored charge, G W Winn, G S Allen; Mountain Hevl circuit, H M Fielding; Sandy Grove circuit, J J Creek circuit, J J Comer, J A Jones; La Fayette, W H Rowe.

Carthage Dist.—H M Stephens, P E; Carthage circuit, Wm Wariance circuit, J M Hamer; Smith's Fork circuit, J J Harris; Cumberland circuit, W D Cherry; Cookeville circuit, J H Hinson; Sparta station, A W Smith; Livingston and Obed's River circuit, G W Russell, J R Randle; Sparta circuit, P Terrell; Wm Jared, sup; Woodbury circuit, J H Ivey, J A Walkup, sup; Short Mountain, J W D Ensey, A H Adams, sup.

McMinnville Dist.—R P Ransom, P E; McMinnville station, J C Putnam; Hickory creek circuit, R T McBride; Mount Vernon, J H Gill; Fayetteville station and colored charge, H Brown; Bedford circuit, J G Rice; Pelham, W H Anthony, D Gwinn, sup; Tullahoma circuit, J W Judd; Winchester station, S M Cherry; Bellefonte, W A Turner; Salem circuit and Camden mission, A Tribble; Fayetteville circuit, R M Huggins; Manchester circuit, G W Anderson; J J Pittman, sup.

Murfreesboro Dist.—A L P Green, P E; Murfreesboro station, J B Baldwin, E J Allen, sup; Stone's River mission, R L S D Baldwin, sup; Stone's River mission, T N Lankford; Lebanon circuit, C C Mayhew, E R Shapard; Shelbyville station, H A Graves; Rock creek circuit, W M Shaw, J A Orman, McClare, sup; High Valley, T B Marks, J B Stevenson, Cornersville, R K Brown; Middle African missins, C H Moody, President of Shelbyville University.

Huntsville Dist.—J R Plummer, P E; Huntsville station, Kelly; West Huntsville and colored charge, F A Kimbell, Robinson, sup; Madison circuit, M E Johnston, J A Simpson; Vienna circuit, J C Solomon; Fort Deposit, H B Franklin station, J A Ellis; Harpeth circuit, J W Cullum, Nashville circuit, P M Hickman, A T Crawford; Hill; Nashville circuit, P M Hickman, A T Crawford; Agent, J R McFerrin, and member of Holston Annual Conference; John F Hughes, Agent of Book and Tract Society, and member of Columbia Quarterly Conference.

Lebanon Dist.—F E Pitts, P E; Lebanon station, R A Kelly, sup; Lebanon circuit, R C Hatter; Dixon circuit, J J Ellis; Gallatin station, Jos Cross; Sumner circuit and colored charge, G L Staley, B B Hargrave, B F Ferrill, sup.; Round Creek circuit and colored charge, G W Winn, G S Allen; Mountain Hevl circuit, H M Fielding; Sandy Grove circuit, J J Creek circuit, J J Comer, J A Jones; La Fayette, W H Rowe.

Carthage Dist.—H M Stephens, P E; Carthage circuit, Wm Wariance circuit, J M Hamer; Smith's Fork circuit, J J Harris; Cumberland circuit, W D Cherry; Cookeville circuit, J H Hinson; Sparta station, A W Smith; Livingston and Obed's River circuit, G W Russell, J R Randle; Sparta circuit, P Terrell; Wm Jared, sup; Woodbury circuit, J H Ivey, J A Walkup, sup; Short Mountain, J W D Ensey, A H Adams, sup.

McMinnville Dist.—R P Ransom, P E; McMinnville station, J C Putnam; Hickory creek circuit, R T McBride; Mount Vernon, J H Gill; Fayetteville station and colored charge, H Brown; Bedford circuit, J G Rice; Pelham, W H Anthony, D Gwinn, sup; Tullahoma circuit, J W Judd; Winchester station, S M Cherry; Bellefonte, W A Turner; Salem circuit and Camden mission, A Tribble; Fayetteville circuit, R M Huggins; Manchester circuit, G W Anderson; J J Pittman, sup.

Murfreesboro Dist.—A L P Green, P E; Murfreesboro station, J B Baldwin, E J Allen, sup; Stone's River mission, R L S D Baldwin, sup; Stone's River mission, T N Lankford; Lebanon circuit, C C Mayhew, E R Shapard; Shelbyville station, H A Graves; Rock creek circuit, W M Shaw, J A Orman, McClare, sup; High Valley, T B Marks, J B Stevenson, Cornersville, R K Brown; Middle African missins, C H Moody, President of Shelbyville University.

Huntsville Dist.—J R Plummer, P E; Huntsville station, Kelly; West Huntsville and colored charge, F A Kimbell, Robinson, sup; Madison circuit, M E Johnston, J A Simpson; Vienna circuit, J C Solomon; Fort Deposit, H B Marshall; Marshall circuit, J H Reynolds; Limestone circuit, W Beasley, T L Duncan; Limestone African mission, R P Hickman; Athens station, A F Lawrence, J L Coleman, sup; Lauderdale circuit, H H Thacker, L H Grubbs, sup; Elkmunt mission, H P Turner; Elk River circuit, A F Driskill, Huntsville College, J G Wilson, President.

Tuscumbia Dist.—F S Petway, P E; Tuscumbia station, J Barber; Valley station, J Milner; Chickasaw circuit, S W Russell's Valley circuit, to be supplied; Courtland circuit, J E White; Moulton circuit, W P Owen; La Grange, J S Morgan circuit, J M P Hickerson, J S Marks, sup; Decatur station, H W Bond; Somerville circuit, A G Copeland; Shelby station, R G Linn; Frankfort mission, J M Groce.

Florence Dist.—A W Whitten, P E; Florence station, R L Bowen; Cypress circuit, Chos Laxon, W G Davis, sup; Rogersville circuit, D H Merrymau; Waterloo circuit, J B Hardin; Lawrenceville circuit, R S Hunter, M R Tucker; Pulaski station, Reuben Mooney; Shoal circuit, D H Jones; Rodgersville and Mitchell's chapel station, M L Whitten; Prospect circuit and Elk Creek mission, Jas Morris, W W Graves, Richard J Bagwell, C A Harwell; Savannah, W H Browning; Shiloh circuit, H G Williams. Florence Wesleyan University, H H Rivers, President. Savannah Female College, W H Browning, President.

Columbia Dist.—A Mizell, P E; Columbia station, W Lay, J B Harmison, sup; Spring Hill station, S P Whitley; Mount Pleasant circuit, J H Allison, J McCurdy, sup; Duck River circuit, Eph L Kreidle; Mt Pleasant circuit, W Doss, D W Thompson, sup; Lynnville circuit, J M Locke, J S Williams, sup; Lawrenceburg circuit, W P Warren, A J H Foster, sup; West Florida mission, J W Pritchard; Santa Fe, C H Dunham; Chapel Hill circuit, W Mullins. Female College, J O Church, President.

Centerville Dist.—Thos W Wallawright, P E; Centerville station, J W Luther; G W Brawn, sup; Beaver Dam and Swan, H Johnson, T H Jamison; Wayne circuit, Thomas F Brown; Hohenwald circuit and Tennessee River mission, H F Smith and B Burns; Piney circuit, D W Stock; Waverly circuit, J H Harmon, J C Holton; Dover circuit, E M Baker, A G Dinwiddie.

Clarksville Dist.—J B West, P E; Clarksville station, W H Sawrie; Montgomery circuit, E T Hart, R A Davis; Cumberland Works, G W Martin; Dickson circuit, H C Wheeler; Antioch circuit, M W Gray; Asbury circuit, W Ranille, G P Jackson; Red River circuit, J M Pirtle; Springfield station, W T Berry; New Providence station, J S Malone; Ashland circuit, C C Pearson, J N Allen, sup. Clarksville Female Academy, A L Hamilton, President.

Sunday School Agent, T Maddin.

Mississippi.—H H McKennon, J G Ward, J H Warfield, H Johnson, to the Onachita Conference. W R J Husbands, to Arkansas Conference. A J Woldridge, S E Randolph, to Florida Conference. J Henderson, to the Louisiana Conference. S D Ogburn and Hinesca Smith, to the Memphis Conference. E G Nicholson, to the Pacific Conference.

APPOINTMENTS OF HOLSTON CONFERENCE.

Wytheville Dist.—Isha M. McTeer, P. E.; Wytheville station, W. C. Bowman; Wytheville circuit, Geo. Stuart, C. K. Fleer; Peerisburg, J. W. Dickey, Newbern and Pulaski colored charge, G. W. Mills, T. K. Catlett; Hillsville station and Hillsville circuit, J. D. Wogg, J. M. Saunders; Greyson, W. P. Thompson, J. D. Baldwin; Marion, Jesse Boring; Meadow, W. K. Forster; Princeton, W. B. S. Bishop; Flat Top, W. H. Eblin.

Dublin Dist.—J. S. Irvin and Silvester Johnston, W. M. Kelley; Tobacco circuit, W. W. Neal; Buchanan mission, C. Crumley; Russell mission and Guest River circuit, S. Edwards, W. F. Cooper; Eastville, J. T. Smith; Blountville, D. Sullins; Bristol station and Bristol circuit, Wm. Robertson, W. P. Doane; Emory and, Henry College, E. E. Wiley, President; J. A. Davis, Professor; Martha Washington College, R. M. Hickny and W. H. Kelley, Agents; W. G. E. Cannon, Missionary to Chilou.

Rogersville Dist.—W. C. Grures, P. E.; Rogersville circuit and Rawkins colored mission, S. D. Gains; Morristown circuit, O. Godby; Mossy Creek and Bethesda, G. W. Pealey; Flat Creek circuit, to be supplied by Joseph Milburn; Tazewell circuit and Clear Fork Mission, J. B. Little, W. B. Lyda; Thorn Hill mission, to be supplied by S. A. Miller; Powell's Valley circuit, W. Knusland; Jonesville, J. Torbit, B. B. Wells; Sneedville, to be supplied by R. Steele; Kingsport, L. C. Dehashmit, to be supplied, (probably by B. F. White.)

Knoxville Dist.—R. M. Stevens, P. E.; Knoxville station, J. E. Munsey; E. Knoxville and colored mission, J. W. Mann; Bearden circuit, J. T. Pope, D. Fleming; Little River, P. H. Sevierville, A. J. Greer; Dandridge, J. A. Hyden, W. H. Reaves; Maynardville, A. H. Wilson; Clinton, J. B. Gibson; Scarborough, T. H. Russell.

Cumberland Dist.—W. C. Daily, P. E.; Washington circuit, J. A. Gibbens, G. W. Reufro, sup.; Hamilton circuit, J. W. Dixon; Pikeville, to be supplied; Jasper, L. M. Renfro; Cumberland mission, H. Bemat; Spencer mission, to be supplied; Clermont mission, H. W. Proffit; Jamestown mission, D. R. Morgan; Montgomery and Huntsville mission, W. H. Moody, J. Freeman.

Chattanooga Dist.—A. G. Worley, P. E.; Chattanooga station, W. H. Howell; Trenton circuit, J. T. Curtis, H. B. Schaber; Cleveland station, G. McDaniel; Harrison circuit and Chattanooga colored mission, E. F. Sevier; Brabley circuit, J. Belt; Benton, A. G. Hunter; Ducktown station, T. F. Lamb; Murphy circuit and Fort Hembree mission, W. H. Talley, P. L. Chambers; Charleston circuit, J. R. Wiggins.

Athens Dist.—G. W. Alexander, P. E.; Athens station, W. Bates; Athens circuit, W. H. H. Duggan; Madisonville, J. Bradley; Maryville, S. S. Sweet; Louisville, A. E. Woodward; London, S. C. Horwell, T. K. Massey; Kingston, G. W. Sewee, L. C. Waters; Decatur, J. G. Swisher; Tellico mission, R. G. Blackburn. Athens Female College, E. Rowley, President; W. H. Rogers, Agent. John F. Bruner, President Grahame College.

Asheville Dist.—F. M. Fanning, P. E.; Asheville station, C. Wexler; Asheville circuit, H. P. Waught, W. F. Parker, and President of Beacom College; Asheville colored charge, John Reynolds; Hendersonville station, P. S. Sattor; Hendersonville circuit, J. P. Woodfin, A. F. English, sup.; Hooster mission, to be supplied; Calhawlee circuit, J. L. Mann; Greenville, S. S. Brent; Sulphur Springs, J. W. Lloyd, Webster, L. W. Smith; Waynesville, G. W. Green, W. Hicks, who is also President of Richmond Institute; Franklin, John Sisters; Cherokee and Cheva mission, J. H. Hallew.; Holston Female College, A. W. Cummings, President; R. N. Price, Professor. R. Long, Professor in Richland Institute.

Jonesboro' Dist.—C. Long, P. E.; Jonesboro' station, G. Taylor; Jonesboro' circuit, L. W. Crouch; Elizabethtown, G. C. Maney; Taylorsville, J. W. Bowman; Watauga mission, to be supplied; Fall Branch circuit, Wm. Milburn; St. Clair, Jas. Mooney; Greeneville, J. C. Hyden, J. N. S. Hullaker, sup.; Newport, M. Mimjish, G. W. Moore. M. B. Spencer, transferred to the Pacific Conference.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

METHODIST.

Our Home Work.—We compile the following interesting revival news from our correspondents throughout the Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi Conferences:—

Millikin's Bend, La.—Rev. R. Trippett writes: We are in the midst of a glorious revival at this place. We have been at work eight days, have had 36 additions—25 white, and 11 colored—with a large number of conversions. God is with us; to His name be all the praise. The good work is still spreading in North Louisiana. Bro. Clinton, from Miss., and Brothers Reed and Kimball, from La., have rendered us valuable service indeed.

New Prospect Circuit, Ala.—Rev. Dan'l Duncan writes: The Church is enjoying peace and prosperity. Individually, there is evident improvement. Conversions, 60. Of these, 32 are whites; 28 whites have joined on probation, and 24 colored. The Presiding Elder is paid; the preacher in charge, ditto; the Missionary and Conference collections, both well over the assessment; all newspapers and periodicals paid for.

Geneva Circuit, Ala.—The Pastor writes: The glorious work of the Lord, which manifested itself on the old Geneva circuit during the last of October, is still spreading around the circuit. We have organized a church at Cluttonville, a beautiful little village, with 30 members. At Geneva we have just closed a glorious meeting of five days; some of the most prominent men of the place joined. About 100 have joined the Church during the last quarter.

Perryville Circuit, Ala.—Rev. T. Moody writes: This circuit has been graciously visited during the present year. Our meeting at Perryville closed a few weeks since, with about 40 conversions; 34 united with the Church. At Newhope, some 13 or 14 joined; at Bethel, 9 or 10; at El Bethel, 15; at Harrisville (new appointment), 17; at Mt. Pleasant, 18 or 20; and still the work goes on. In the last two months we have taken over 120 on probation, besides the colored, estimated at over 100. And there still is a gracious interest among our people.—In connection with this we have to say, with regret, our collections will be short, from the fact that crops are cut very short by the distressing drouth.

Eversbaken Circuit, Ala.—Rev. B. L. Selman writes: The good work is still going on here. The Lord is doing great things on this circuit. Since I wrote to you last, I have taken into the Church 30 new members, making in all 70 in a short time; and I am not through with all my meetings yet. I shall close my work the 9th of December. I presume I shall enlarge my list to one hundred by that time.

The following we gather from our exchanges:—

Revivals in the N. C. Conference.—During the closing year nearly every pastoral charge in the Conference has been blessed with a gracious revival. Many hundreds have been added to the church, and the faithful labors of the preachers have been abundantly rewarded.

Old Fashioned Methodism.—A correspondent of the Richmond Christian Advocate, quotes the following note from of 1773: "There were some debates among the preachers in this conference, relative to the conduct of some who had manifested a desire to abide in cities and live like gentlemen."

The Illinois Conference report on slavery was adopted with only five dissenting votes, among which we see the names of Peter Cartwright and Jonathan Stamper.

In the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, there are five thousand local preachers, more than two hundred of whom are in the North Carolina Conference.

PRESBYTERIAN.

Rapid Disintegration.—At the time of the division of the New-school Presbyterian General Assembly, the Synod of Missouri had under its care fifty-seven churches. It is stated that it now has only seven. Some of their churches have disbanded, a few have gone to the United Synod of the South, and others have come back to the Old-school.

Cadillton Presbyterian Church.—Rev. Dr. J. Perviance, who was invited to supply this church, has commenced his labors.

New Church Organized.—A Presbyterian church has lately been organized at Richmond, La., consisting of twenty members. They have a good house of worship in process of erection which will soon be completed, and the people are anxious to obtain a minister, as soon as possible.

The Bible in Schools.—The old-school Synod which recently met in Stockton, California, says a correspondent of the World, debated the question in relation to the introduction of the Bible into the public schools by state law. Rev. Dr. Anderson offered a resolution that it should be done. Dr. Scott opposed it, and an animated discussion ensued. The Synod voted in favor of the resolution, ten ayes to five nays. The Rev. Dr. Scott and Rev. Mr. Woodbridge entered their protests.

Presbyterianism in Iowa.—The Old-School Presbyterian Church has now 71 ministers, 138 churches, and 5595 members in the State of Iowa. Efforts to establish and multiply these churches have been vigorous and prosperous. Few available points are unoccupied where a nucleus for a church could be found. This denomination is also furnishing educational advantages quite equal to the wants of its own membership in that State.

Presbyterian Mission in Japan.—A letter has been received from Dr. Hepburn as late as the 12th of July, mentioning the safe arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Nevius, of the Ningpo mission, at that place. It was expected they would remain at Japan, to labor in connection with Dr. and Mrs. Hepburn.

The Presbyterian churches of Philadelphia are thus divided: New School, 18 churches, 31 ministers; Old School, 33 churches, 33 ministers. It will be perceived that the number of churches belonging to the Old School branch is nearly double the New School.

The Northern and Southern Indiana Synods of the Old School Presbyterian Church both meet at Indianapolis on the same day next year, so that there will be a reunion of all the ministers in the State.

BAPTIST.

Baptists in North America.—According to the statistics of the last Baptist Almanac, we learn that the Associations in the United States number 570; the churches 12,371; ordained ministers 7,831; licentiates, 1,115; baptized in 1859, 73,086; total, 1,020,442. The number of Baptists in Nova Scotia is 14,057; in New Brunswick 7,703; in Canada 13,715; West India Islands (estimated) 36,350; making a grand total in North America of one million and ninety-one thousand one hundred and sixty-seven regular Baptists. Of other denominations that practise immersion, the almanac sets down the Anti-mission at 60,000; Freewill Baptists 59,731; Six Principle Baptists, 3,080; Seventh Day Baptists, 6,577; Church of God, or Winebrennarians, 13,800; Disciples, or Campbellites, 350,000; Tunkers, 8,200; Mennonites, 36,280. If these are added to the above, it will make one million six hundred and eighteen thousand eight hundred and fifteen who give in their adhesion to the doctrine of baptism.

The New York State Convention, at its recent annual meeting, reported that during the year 172 stations had been occupied to 30 counties, 4615 sermons preached, 4,592 prayer-meetings attended, 6,290 religious visits made, 274 converts baptized, 4 new churches organized. Receipts, in round numbers, $8,000; sum asked for next year, $15,000. Evangelical effort among the Indians wore a hopeful aspect.

The Circular Letter of the Philadelphia Baptist Association represents that there are 400,000 children under fifteen years of age connected with Baptist families in the United States, and takes strong ground on the importance of training them in the primitive doctrines and practices of religion.

There are ten churches in the Nebraska Baptist Association, with a membership of 235—an increase of about 100 during the year.

Religious Interest in Australia.—The revivals that have taken place in different parts of Great Britain have, without doubt, been productive of much good far beyond the immediate localities in which they occurred. All the world over they have had the effect of rousing Christians to deeper thought and more zealous concern for the spread of religion. Ministers have become more earnest, and people more active, and, so far, even they in Australia have shared in the indirect advantages resulting from the revivals reported from time to time within the last year.

A Season of Special Supplication.—The officers of the British branch of the Evangelical Alliance have issued circulars proposing that the eight days from Sunday, 6th January to Sunday, the 13th January, 1861, inclusive, should be observed by Christians throughout the world as a season of special supplication. This circular has been suggested by the similar request for a week of prayer made last year by the American missionaries at Lodiana, and which had such marked results.

"That they all may be One."—It is stated that there are a thousand union prayer-meetings in the United States, eight hundred in England, four hundred in Ireland, and three hundred in Scotland and Wales.

Tri-Centenary Commemoration of the Reformation from Popery in Scotland.—For some months past there has been considerable excitement in Great Britain, among Evangelical Christians, with reference to a two-fold celebration, arranged to occur in Edinburgh, on the 17th of August last, and on the 20th of December ensuing. The first has already taken place, amid many displays of religious enthusiasm; the second is still expected with feelings of lively interest.

—Anniversary of a Missionary Society.—The twelfth anniversary meeting of the American Christian (Campbellite) Missionary Society was held in Cincinnati, on Oct. 23d and following days. The total receipts reported amount to $18,468.01; the expenditures to $16,330.90; leaving a balance of $2,138.03. The figures show a decided increase in the receipts, which the report says has been largely owing to the employment of agents to urge the claims of the Society and collect funds. Concerning the missionary operations the figures are these: Whole number baptized, 993; whole number received from other religious bodies, 332; of these there were in Jamaica—baptisms, 92; other additions, 11; Nova Scotia,—New Brunswick, 80; Canada West, 33; Kansas, 190; Massachusetts, 10; Maine, 178; New York, 6; Ohio, 113; Indiana, 67; Kentucky, 185; Arkansas, 55; Missouri, 114; Iowa, 52; Michigan, 190; Miscellaneous—Disciples in Churches, 300; The number of Churches collected, 24; Number of preachers employed in home fields, 23.

The Fulton street (N. Y.) Prayer-meeting has become an institution so important that enlarged accommodations are found to be imperatively necessary. The old hall and staircase of the consistory building in Rear of the North Dutch Church, have been thrown into the upper room, and outside stairs, with covered ways, erected. The upper and lower apartments of the building are now completely disconnected.

There are 1500 Evangelical Missionaries abroad in the heathen world. Ninety thousand are wanted to give one preacher to every 10,000 souls.

There are 130 Congregational churches, with a total membership of 7000, in the State of Michigan.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Carlyle's Essays.—Of the beautiful three-volume edition of Carlyle's essays, printed at the River-side press in Cambridge, and published by William Veazie, in Boston, the satirist-philosopher has thus written to a friend in this country:—"It is one of the prettiest books imaginable; printed with accuracy and taste; beautiful paper, careful index, nothing deficient, nothing superfluous, perfectly got up in all respects." A finer compliment to the proprietor and maker of the edition could not be paid. We trust that the success which has attended this effort will lead to the appearance of a similar edition of the other great essays of the day—Lord Macaulay's.

M. D'Algueres has published "Talden sans fin," the result of ten years' labor. By these, the product of multipliers and multiplicans of three figures is read by inspection, and thus it is easy to multiply any or divide with any number of figures by the use of a little addition and subtraction. His simplifications are so great that the squares of the hundred thousand first numbers, which would otherwise form a large volume of nine hundred pages, are contained in a little book of less than a hundred pages.

Tennyson is engaged in writing a new poem, founded on the history of Queen Boadicea. He can fairly claim the title of English poet laureate; for the subjects of all his largest works—"Maud," "The Princess," "Idyls of the King," an well as many of his shorter poems—are suggested by incidents in English life or history. "In Memoriam," too, is a tribute to a young Englishman.

Dickens has produced thirty-eight successive works in twenty five years.

The first elaborate history as yet written of the Russian army, from the pen of Captain von Stein, a Prussian officer, resident for some time past in Russia, is on the eve of publication. The subject is treated on a large scale, and the work will comprise many volumes, with plates, illustrations, &c.

The demand for American books in Italy is becoming of some importance. The house of Bailleix Co., of Milan, has effected an arrangement with Mr. Charles B. Norton, of New York, for the supply of American books and periodicals. A specimen copy of every journal in the United States has been ordered by the house referred to.

During the past eighteen months, about a thousand books and tracts have appeared in Europe and the United States, relating to Italy, and all more or less bearing on the question of temporal power of the pope. Three hundred of these books and pamphlets have been published since the first of January last.

American Newspaper in London.—A first-class newspaper, devoted to American politics and interests, called the London American, has at length been established in London. It is to be republished in New York. According to English usage, the names of the editors are not announced.

DOMESTIC.

From the latest telegraphic dispatches to this city, we are in possession of the following intelligence:—

The Secession Movement.—The extra session of the Mississippi Legislature organized on Monday last, the 26th inst. The Governor's Message was read in both Houses. Its tone is said to be uncompromising. The members all appear to be unanimous for secession. From Washington we learn that the President and his Cabinet have under consideration the expediency of recommending Congress, at the approaching session, to call a Convention of the States. It is said the South Carolina delegation will take their seats in the House of Representatives.

The Commercial Crisis.—Recent dispatches from New York inform us that the worst of the crisis is past, and that confidence is fast returning, both in financial and business circles of all kinds. This is owing to the association of the banks of that city for mutual protection. Similar association is being resorted to by the banks of New England. A telegram from Philadelphia says all the banks in that city have suspended. Another dispatch states that the North Carolina banks have also suspended specie payments. The Baltimore banks still hold firm. The Planters and Union Banks, Nashville, Tenn. suspended on the 26th inst.

The following we gather from our exchanges:—

LOUISIANA.

Proclamation of the Governor.—Gov. Moore issued his proclamation last week, convening an extraordinary session of the Legislature on the 10th December, for the purpose of taking action with reference to Lincoln's election to the Presidency.

The Bayou Sara Ledger contains an account of a large meeting in that town, at which, it says, three-fifths of all the voters of the Parish of West Feliciana were present. Strong Southern Rights resolutions were passed.

MISSISSIPPI.

Action of the Congressmen.—The Senators and Representatives from Mississippi, in the Federal Congress, held a meeting in Jackson on the 23d inst., and unanimously declared for separation from the North, and for the formation of a Southern Confederacy. Great enthusiasm for disunion is prevalent throughout the State.

The Election.—Returns from all but six small counties give the following result: Breckinridge 40,406, Bell 23,877, Douglas 3221. Breckinridge over Bell 16,529—over all 13,408. The counties to hear from will slightly increase Breckinridge's majority.

We understand that a Southern manufacturing company, with shares at $500 each, is to be formed at Rodney, Miss. This enterprise recommends itself to all who feel an interest in Southern progress and development.

A company of Minute Men, numbering forty, was formed at Bay St. Louis, Miss., on Saturday week last.

ALABAMA.

The Montgomery Mail has heard it rumored that Hon. H. W. Hilliard has accepted a Church, in Brooklyn, N. Y., at a salary of $5000.

We learn that the railroad from Chehaw to Tuskegee, Ala., is completed to a point within one mile of Tuskegee.

GEORGIA.

The Crisis.—A telegram from Milledgeville, dated Nov. 22, says: "Gov. Brown, of this State, has sent into the Legislature a special message in reference to the choice of Presidential electors. In view of the certain election of Lincoln, and to promote unity of sentiment in the State, he incidentally advises the Legislature not to vote for President and Vice President." A motion in the Senate, however, that the Legislature elect electors, will be introduced." Gov. Brown's message also suggests the passage of a law similar to that passed by the Alabama Legislature, exempting from tax, goods found in any country imported into this State through Southern ports. On the 19th large meetings were held in Green and Hancock counties, and resolutions of a conservative character were adopted. The majority of the counties in the State are, however, in favor of secession.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Commercial Crisis.—A telegram from Charleston, of Nov. 21, says: "Yesterday was the gloomiest commercial day experienced. A heavy cotton house and other smaller ones have suspended. The Banks positively refuse discounts. Cotton is declining. The stock on hand amounts to 50,000 bales. Several heavy planters refuse to forward their crops until re-action takes place. Exchange on London is quoted at 95. Trade is completely prostrated. The banks, however, do not mean to suspend as long as New York pays specie.

VIRGINIA.

Warlike.—According to an article in the Richmond Despatch, Virginia can, at the present time, arm efficiently about 25,000 men. She has at least 60 bronzed and rifled field pieces and howitzers. A contract has been made for 3,000 shells and schrapnel, in addition to those purchased and stored in the magazines built for the purpose. The model for a new Virginia musket is determined, and other warlike preparations are in progress.

Mr. Simon Lanck, of Newtown, Frederick county, Va., was killed last Saturday, by a kick from a horse.

There have been several bank suspensions in Virginia during the past week.

The Greatest Oil Discovery Yet.—In Clark county, Va., some time since, a Mr. Kains sunk a well one hundred and fifty feet, and is now taking out fifteen hundred thirty barrels, of heavy gamon oil. They have discovered a vein of oil coal one thousand feet thick, in a mountain on Hugh's river, a tributarly of the Kenawha. This coal, when put on a shovel and held over the fire, melts into oil, so that the discovery is a most important one.

Strange Fatality.—The Wheeling (Virginia) Intelligencer says that a few months ago an engineer was killed on the Central Ohio Railroad, near Cambridge. At the time of his death, he was making his last trip, previous to the fulfillment of an engagement of marriage with a young lady of Columbus. The young lady afterwards became the wife of Mr. James Frease, and a short time ago, while out riding, she was thrown from a carriage and killed; and Mr. Frease himself was one of the victims of the accident which occurred the other day near Cambridge.

On Saturday week, while Mr. Story, merchant, residing in Criglersville, in Madison county, Virginia, was handling a gun, it accidentally went off, the load shattering his hand to pieces, which was over the muzzle at the time.

The Virginians are about to erect a monument to the memory of Peter Francisco, whose herculean hand to hand struggles for liberty in the Revolutionary war with British troops are common themes for fire-side stories in the Old Dominion.

The total inspection of tobacco in Richmond from October, 1859, to October, 1860, was 46,633, being an excess of 4835 over the previous year.

FLORIDA.

Gov. Perry, of Florida has written a letter favoring seperate State action, which means immediate secession from the Union. His term of office is about expiring, but his successor, just elected, Gov. Jno. Milton, is of the same opinion.

The Legislature of Florida will meet on the 26th. Advices state that Florida will undoubtedly accede with or immediately after South Carolina.

TENNESSEE.

Banks of Tennessee.—The Memphis Avalanche regards the banks of Tennessee unpregnable. It says: All the banks of all the States might suspend within sixty days, and ours will be prepared for the emergency without the loss of credit, and without refusing to redeem in coin any description of liability. The Union, Planters' and State Banks, and the Bank of Memphis, are deemed to be everywhere above suspicion.

The population of Nashville, according to the last census, is 17,020.

NORTH CAROLINA.

North Carolina's Position.—The Legislature of North Carolina met Monday week last. A dispatch says: "A strong Southern feeling is manifest. The Governor's message takes strong Southern ground. It recommends a conference with the neighboring States, and then a State convention on Federal affairs. He recommends the enrollment of all men between 18 and 45 years of age, and the raising of a corps of 10,000 volunteers, with arms and equipments. He goes for resisting any attempt at coercion in any event." A telegram from Williamstown, N. C., dated Nov. 21, states that at a large meeting held there strong secession resolutions were adopted. A corps of minute men was being formed.

Thomas Shoalders was killed in Northampton county, North Carolina, a few days since, by the falling of a tree.

TEXAS.

Fall Season in Texas.—The State has not enjoyed such a favorable fall season for many years. Rains have descended in about the desired quantities, and at proper intervals. No frost yet to do any considerable damage. The grass is yet good. Mast for hogs is good, provision of all kinds plentiful. Roads in good traveling condition.

Texas Copper.—Professor Riddell, of the Geological Survey, has examined some specimens of copper and dead ore, found near Fort Davis, in Presidio county. The copper ore was 41 parts in 100 copper, while the lead was in one specimen 89 parts in 100 pure lead, and in the other 37 parts in 100. These specimens are from a place three hundred miles nearer San Antonio than the Santa Rita mines. The ores are of an excellent quality, and susceptible of being worked with considerable profit.

Wealth of Texas.—By a reference to the returns for 1856, '57, '58 and '59, from the State of Texas, the growth in wealth presented by that frontier State is truly surprising. The value of lands in one year, 1856, without the stimulus of railroads, increased $6,694,288. The total amount of land in private hands showed more than a thousand acres for every white male citizen assessed with a poll tax. The number of slaves was increased in the year 1856 by an additional number of 12,101. In 1857 and '58 the increase was a still larger number; while lands rose to nearly double their estimation in 1854, under the influence of railroads and other favorable circumstances. The production of the State was last year put down at $30,000,000, and its exports at $20,000,000.

Railroads.—The Houston Telegraph, says: "Our railroad enterprises are now making good progress. We hear of no more roads completed since our last, but the contractors on the Texas and New Orleans road, the Central, the Washington county, the East Texas and the S. A. & M. G. are all hard at work. On the latter 15 miles are now completed. The balance to Victoria only awaits the iron, some, if not all of which, is received."

Governor Houston has appointed Thursday, the 29th day of this month a day of Thanksgiving and prayer.

Several volunteer companies have left for the frontier, with the intent of carrying the war into the haunts of the Indians.

Cortina is within the limits of Tamaulipas, and at the head of an armed force.

A medical college has been organized at Houston.

KANSAS.

Abolition Raid in Kansas.—Official dispatches were received in Washington on the 23d, stating that Montgomery, the Abolitionist, and his followers, have already commenced making war on the Federal officers in Kansas Territory. The inhabitants in the vicinity of Osceola are under great excitement, apprehending an attack from the notorious Montgomery and his associates. It is said that a portion of his band is at Hall's Mills, twenty-five miles distant. The Washington correspondent of the New York Times says that General Harney has received orders to exterminate Captain Montgomery and his marauders in the most expeditious manner. The same correspondent adds that General Harney will have 500 troops, cavalry and infantry, from forts Riley and Kearney.

The Kansas Famine.—Seventeen thousand pounds of flour, corn-meal and potatoes arrived at Atchison recently from Illinois, and several trains from the destitute portion of Southern Kansas, which were in waiting, were loaded and started for their destination. There had previously arrived and been distributed from that point, 500 bushels of corn and 20,000 pounds of flour, groceries, potatoes, &c., most of which was sent to the Neosho country.

Kansas Claims.—Pearls are said to be very plenty in many streams in Kansas. One family have gathered from a single creek over 700 pearls, most of them small, but some of considerable value.

MISCELLANEOUS.

New York vs. the North.—The vote in the city of New York in favor of conferring the right of suffrage on colored men, on the same terms as white men, reaches only 1640, while 37,471 voted against it. In Schenectady the vote stood for it 197, and 1,111 against it.

A Frightful Leap and Miraculous Escape from Instant Death.—The Trinity Journal says: Little Lizzie, the bright-eyed, pretty daughter of Dr. Edward Trask, of this town, fell into an old mining shaft on East Weaver, last Sunday. Herself and an older or younger sister were out walking in charge of the servant, and Lizzie venturing too near to the edge of the hole, the dirt gave way, and she was precipitated to the bottom, a distance of fifty-two feet. The accident occurred near the mining claim of J. C. Mason & Co., and as soon as possible a windlass was brought, and Mr. Mason lowered to the rescue. When brought to the surface no signs of life were visible, and for some time those present very reasonably believed that the fall had killed her. Dr. Davis had her conveyed home as soon as possible, where signs of consciousness were soon exhibited, and on examination it was found that the right thigh was broken, about midway between the knee and hip-joint. The broken limb was set. With the exception of some severe bruises about the head and jaw, no further injury was done. It is only wonderful that she was not killed outright.

Wells in the Desert.—The contractor to dig wells on the route from San Bernadino to Fort Yuma, California, is said to have succeeded in getting water at three places on this desert. The Legislature appropriated $5,000 last winter for digging wells on that route, with a view of changing the overland track, if successful.

Fresh Strawberries in November.—An enterprising nurseryman in Cincinnati pushed his vines to a second crop, and succeeded, before frost interfered, in producing several quarts of the fresh strawberries, which were served out to the astonished guests at one of the hotels.

For Utah and the Plains.—The Atchison (K. T.) Champion publishes a statement of the number of trains which have started from that city this season for the gold region, Utah, and the forts on the plains. Ninety trains, composed of 1,773 wagons, employing 2,020 men, 693 mules, and 18,117 oxen, and carrying 8,230,882 pounds merchandise, have gone out.—This is double that of any previous year.

The United States Troops in the South.—There seems to be at Washington among the members of the Government a disposition to believe that no steps will be taken in the Southern States requiring the use of force on the part of the Government during Mr. Buchanan's administration at least. The whole number of federal troops, from Maryland to Florida, is less than one thousand; five hundred are in the artillery school of Fort Monroe—the rest being a few scattered companies, three of them at Fort Moultrie, at Charleston harbor. Nearly the entire military force is employed at present west of the Mississippi river.

The Fugitive Slave Law in Illinois.—An attempt was made to recover an escaped slave, under the Fugitive Slave act, in Chicago, on Monday week last. The slave was arrested by the U. S. Deputy Marshal, but was afterwards released by a mob composed of about equal parts of negroes and their worthy white fraternizers.

Parliament Buchanan on Secession.—A telegram dated Washington,

NOVEMBER 28, 1860.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Children's Column.

A WINTER UNDERGROUND.

The short but glorious summer of Lapland was drawing to a close, and I remembered with regret that the hour of my departure from Kublitz was at hand. Still I lingered, for I had spent several of the happiest weeks of my life in that fairy spot of earth, so far remote from the track of the bustling British tourist. I had grown attached to my simple-hearted hosts; and their constant kindness, their gay good-humor, had the freshness and novelty of the holiday-life, had indescribable charms for me. Kublitz is a place little known. It lies in Swedish Lapland, about a hundred and fifty miles beyond the extreme limits of Norway; and its silvery river and emerald pastures are surrounded by the far-stretching moorlands, of which by far the greater part of the country consists. Far away to the south might be seen, on a clear day, rising dimly above the vast purple moors, a line of blue peaks that faintly dotted the distant horizon. These are the Kohl Mountains, the mighty Scandinavian Alps which divide Norway from Sweden, and whose northernmost summits have often seemed to me, as I thus gazed on them from the Lapland wastes, the very outposts of European civilisation. To the north, a line of low hills broke the distant sky-line—the last range I was told, between fair Kublitz and the grim icy bergs of the lonely Arctic Sea. There, among those hills, the northern bear roamed unmolested in his shaggy strength, the unhunted wolf howled along the deep ravines, the marten clung to the pine-branch, and the elk ranged the brakes, free from any fear of any intrusive man. Nothing would have tempted my kindly Lapland hosts to explore that mountain-range, guarded by a thousand superstitious legends, and named, in their figurative tongue, the Witches' Hills. But let me try to describe Kublitz itself, as I saw it first, basking in the short-lived smile of the arctic summer, when nature seems to compensate by a wondrous lavishness of love and care for the ephemeral character of the enjoyment.

All that rocky glen where the village nestled, all those verdant prairies that encircled it, those shrubby woods that belted the meadows, and were bounded in their turn by the trackless moors, had blossomed like a garden in Fairyland. Fruit and flowers! everywhere fruit and flowers! The gray rocks that rose above the houses blushed literally crimson with the wild strawberries—those wondrous strawberries that spring up everywhere in Lapland, whose profusion is such that they attain the roots of the reindeer and the sledge of the traveler, yet are so delicate, and matchless in flavour, that the Czar himself sends for them, by estafettes, all the long, long way to his summer palace of Tsarzkoy-Chelo. But strawberries are not the only gifts that bounteous summer flings with full hands upon Lapland. The crags, the meadows, the thickets, glow and blossom with a thousand many-hued flowers; the meres and pools are white with lilies; the woods are full of strange fruits, and joyous songs of birds; the grass springs up luxuriantly; the ferns, mosses, lichens, have all their varied tints of deeper or brighter green; the mobra are carpeted with red and purple heaths; and even the dangerous quagmires are ruddy with the temptingly fruit of the cranberry. One never knows what a summer really is, never knows with what exuberant mirth the world can rejoice at bursting from the chains of winter, until one has seen Lapland.

And the people? Well, all I can say is, I liked them, and they me. I never met a young face or an old one among these simple folks that had not a pleasant smile for the stranger; I never went into a Lapland hut without finding a kindly welcome, for my worthy little hosts would bustle to fill the biggest bowl with milk, and the largest basket with berries, and to produce great piles of smoked and dried fish from the sea coast, and, luxury unparalleled, perhaps even a great black loaf, brought all the way from Norway (for Lapland has no bread), to do honor to the foreign guest. How could I help growing fond of these queer, elfin-looking, soft-hearted people? I had heard ugly stories of them among the Swedes and Norwegians: they were called savages, idolaters, enchanters, even cannibals; but I can only say that they not only did not eat me, but even abstained from deceiving me, as nations much more polished and accomplished are in the habit of doing to wayfarers. The village of Kublitz was built of green boughs and wattles, the posts alone which supported each cottage being of pine-timber. In fact, the huts were not cottages—they were leafy booths such as the roving Tartar sometimes constructs; and these summer palaces of living verdure added to the, holiday air of the place, and were suggestive of a perpetual picnic. But the true houses were under the earth, not above its surface. The green tents I have been describing were mere temporary pavilions; and beneath them, with only a low chimney, like a magnified mole-hill, peeping above ground, were the true homes of the Laplanders, the cavernued storehouses for all their worldly wealth, and their own dwellings for more than nine months of the year. To be weather-tight was coming when the green booths were deserted, like a mole to vanish, and the strange underground life, like a mole to snuggle through the long Arctic winter. Peter Wow, chief of the village, in whose wigwam I dwelt, warned me that the daylight would speedily cease, and that he had better prepare the boat to convey me down the river southwards, so that I might reach Norway 'before it got dark.' A new, strange idea seized me—what if I were to stop behind! I knew been here through the daylight, the long three-months' day, that puzzled me so terribly at first, and robbed me of my sleep and made me blink like an owl at the unwearing sun that would shine at midnight, and which upset all the habits of my previous life. I recollected what a strange sensation that had been, how new fresh, and piquant; and it is not often, let me tell you, that a somewhat world-worn and wearied man can discover a sensation that shall be at once new, fresh, and piquant. I had promised to spend Christmas with my sister, in Gloucestershire, to be sure; but, 'Pshaw!' thought I, 'I can go next summer. Maria Jane hasn't seen me these eighteen years, and more, so she can probably wait till Easter; and my nephews and nieces won't fret too much. I daresay, about the non-appearance of an uncle they never set their juvenile eyes on. My mind is made up. I'll stay all night.'

A pretty long night, too, reader—a night that begins in early October, and ends in June. Having tried perpetual daylight, I was going to essay how I liked its antipodes. Peter Wow tried to dissuade me—I did not know what it was like, he said; but I told him that was my exact reason for going through the experience. Peter shrugged his shoulders; Madame Wow, or more correctly speaking, Huswife Wow (for Lapland is a land of titles, and there is but one class, that of the yeomanry, with their dependants and servants), lifted up her astonished eyes and hands; all the daughters tittered, and all the sons stared, at this remarkable decision on my part. But, as I not only paid Peter for my board and lodging at the oppressedeotedly liberal rate of four silver rix-dollars a week, but could speak, and sing on occasion, in Swedish and Norse, knew a little of the Lapponic tongue, and played the fiddle and flute, besides being the owner of a musical-box, I was quite a popular character among my worthy entertainers, and my determination to rough it out through the long winter with them was taken as a compliment by the entire community. Accordingly, we moved into our winter quarters.

A Lapland winter hut has generally two drawbacks, of a nature almost unbearable to Europeans—it is terribly crowded, and it is shockingly smoky. But Peter Wow, chief of the village, was a rich man in his way, and had a roomy and commodious set of caverns for his dwelling, with furs and elder-down quilts in plenty, as became the owner of five hundred reindeer. The family slept in a quartet tier of little box-beds, about the usual length of mignonette troughs, which were sunk into the clay-walls like a row of sleeping-berths on board a packet-ship. But I, as a distinguished foreigner, had a den to myself, such as a hermit of especially austere and self-mortifying tendencies might have constructed, for it was without a window of any kind, and air was admitted by means of the hollow trunk of an alder-tree, which had been thrust through the roof of the cave, and made a sort of wooden shaft over head. The floor was carpeted, however, with soft dried moss, softer and more luxurious than the most costly three-pilled velvet that ever loom wove: the bed was a pile of dressed deer-skins, as supple and pliant as silk: a copper lamp hung by a chain from the roof: I had pillows and bolsters stuffed with the plumage of the eider duck and the wild swan, two bear-skin coverlets, and at least a dozen quilts of yielding elder-down; and, crowning magnificence! there was an old-fashioned chest of oaken drawers, with brass handles and key-plates, to which Peter Wow pointed proudly, as to a proof of intercourse with the civilised world of modern Europe. It was evidently some relic of a wreck off the North Cape, and had been dragged many a weary mile by the patient deer that drew the sledges. I fancied the scent of the sea hung about it still.

Scarcely were we snugly established in our underground quarters, when, one fine evening, I was summoned to join a solemn procession which annually, a-cooding to immemorial custom, ascended a neighboring hill to see the last of the sun for that year, and bid the orb of day "good-bye!" It was a strangely picturesque sight, and not without its touching pathos, that assemblage of village folk of every age, from the wrinkled grandsire who tottered on his staff, and with a palsy-shaken hand rubbed his aged eyes as he watched that last declining sun which was setting, nor for a night, but for a whole winter and which he might scarcely hope to mark again, down to the child whose wondering eyes hailed the sunset for the first time since its reason began to dawn. All were there—the maidens and young men, the veteran elders, the bustling crones, who shivered already in the strange ominous chill that pervaded the air, the hardy hunters, the meek hardy shepherds, or rather deer-herds: old and young were gazing with a common purpose and a common intensity of feeling upon the sinking luminary. All kinds of wild imaginings, all manner of poetic memories rushed in upon my mind as the sun approached the point at which it prepared for the final plunge. The wild and hyperborean scene of Tegnier, perhaps suggested by that very spectacle of the death of the northern sun, recurred to me especially, being clearness. I began to wonder whether I had not been very rash and absurd in wishing to stop a winter in Lapland, like a mole in its burrow. I began to sigh after Gloucestershire, where the sun would come out merrily by day, on the crisp snow and frost-silvered boughs which I should be left in Christmas Holidays. Plunge he red sun had flashed down below the horizon. A heavy twilight settled as if by magic, over the fair land-scape, still gilded by the smiles of summer. Alas! the good fairy, so beneficent, so bright, in her rainbow robe, studded with flowers, was gone, and King Frost was to reign over her devastated realms. Hark! the long wailing cadence of the sweet enchantress, an old, old heathen chant—one of the days when Freya was worshipped, Freya, at once Venus and Summer of this far remote race—in which the Laplanders bewail the parting day! Now the long, long Laplanders bewail the parting day! Now the long, long night! Already, as we turned to quit the hill, after straining our eyes until the last faint glow had died away from the north-west, and I shivered and wrapped my cloak round me at the sudden sensation of cold. 'It is the snow-wind' said an old Laplander, as we paced down to the village; 'no more flowers for the Lasses to braid in their hair this year.'

I must confess, that I felt, very like a frightened child left alone in the dark, and regretted my whim for staying among the Laps. Nay, but for very shame, I believe I should have proposed to hire Peter Wow's boat, before the ice should seal up mere and river, and start like a bird of passage, in pursuit of the sun. The country seemed to change in the unwonted twilight; the familiar rocks at the glen, the far away moorlands, the pine thickets, assumed a weird aspect; even the faces of my entertainers looked strange and grotesque, and their pigmy figures impish, in the deep shadow. Then, too, the singular feeling that all this was not a dream—that it was real waking life—that I had actually seen the sun go down into an obscurity that was to last for the better part of a year—and that I was going to try and while away a winter-night that would have given time to Scheherzade herself to exhaust a quarter of her budget of stories—all this bewildered me. But that night there were high revels held among the dwellers in caves. Peter Wow, as chief of the village, entertained all the beauty and wealth (all the ugliness and poverty as well) of Kublitz in his hospitable halls underground. Torches blazed and sputtered; lamps, fed by seal-oil and deer's fat, were lighted, and hung to every bracket and projection through all the subterranean dwelling; and at a very early hour, the monotonous but inspiriting chanting of the Lapland drum summoned the guests. All Kublitz was there, young and old, in holiday garb. There were gaines and sweetmeats for the children, dancing for the lads and lasses, and abundance of tobacco, gossip, and strong liquors for the seniors of the village. A pet reindeer—a lovely milk-white creature, almost hidden by the flowers with which it was garlanded—was led through the rooms by a rope of roses held by six young maidens. Six young hunters followed, each with a drawn sword, with which they were presently to figure in the ancient sword-dance of Scandinavia. The orchestra, composed of the strangest-looking instruments, still managed—for the Laps are a very musical people—to discourse sweet sounds, now of wild pathos, now almost maddeningly gay and exciting. Such hearty, vigorous, agile dancing I never beheld. Even in the gayest circles of Stockholm, a primitive capital, in which the elegant world has not yet become too languid for enjoyment, those Lapland dance s would have been wonders, and yet there was nothing boisterous or ungainly in their movements, indeed these were as sprightly and almost as small as fairies, and had something of the fawn-like elasticity and grace of childhood in their motions. I felt the thrill of music awake forgotten sympathies, and half wished to dance too, and regretted that I was too mature and too lanky to be a fitting partner for one of those lithe, small-limbed elfins of Lapland, who were sweeping so trippingly past me. Peter Wow did offer to procure me a partner; but I saw, by the twinkle of his eye, that he meant nothing more than a jest, and I should have felt, like Gulliver, afraid of crushing the whole Lilliputian company. Indeed, it was a marvellous sight that assembly of small folks under the level of the earth, and it put me in mind of what I had heard of the Dalone Sleaghe of the Scottish legends, and their revelry within some haunted hill. I could hardly help fancying I was really a captive or a guest of a troop of carousing gnomes, or fhui, like the Rhymer. I had been borne away to Fairyland, and had but a faint prospect of revisiting the real daylight world again.

Peter Wow, the tallest man in the community, had attained the gigantic stature of five feet four, and, with his high-crowned cap set jauntily on his gray locks, his enormous white beard and mustaches flowing down like a frozen river, and his uniform costume of reddish-brown cloth, looked uncommonly like the Brows or Gnomes, as Norse superstitions describe him. The still more dwarfish assemblage presented every variety, from the grotesque and witchlike ugliness of the old women, to the infantine and diminutive beauty of some of the young girls. The children were almost all pretty and rosy of complexion, but age, it seems, comes on with terribly swift strides among these dwellers of the frozen world, as well as with the sun-scorched Asiatic; and I looked in vain for the pleasant matronly faces that never fail to meet the eye in a temperate climate. There seemed to be a quick transition from delicate youth to weird age. Some of the men were fine active little fellows, wonderfully strong, in spite of their pigmy stature, and full of life and fire. It has been essayed, more than once, to raise troops among the Laplanders; but in vain, for the little warriors cannot endure the ridicule of their big comrades of Swedish or Norse stock, and endless quarrels are sure to keep a garrison in hot water if Lap is enlisted. There is the Swedish-Lapland corps of sharpshooters, who serve on snow-shoes, and turn a militia-ist the field; but these are the sensitive heroes are less exposed sixty-inch standard. The Laps proper—as the Swedes, Norwegians, and Southerners generally, as a heavy and stupid race, whose large limbs and lofty forms are given them as a compensation for their scanty stock of brains. And indeed the Norsemen always say: "He who deals with a Lap gets the worst of the bargain;" for the small folks have wonderful acuteness with all their simple bearing. But I believe that in their secret hearts the tiny tribe value size and height above all things. I know Peter Wow was prodigiously vain because his head was within an inch of being level with my shoulder; and I think many a young fellow would have bartered his youth for my six feet of perpendicular elevation, which never gained its owner any remarkable popularity elsewhere.

The next morning, I had a surprise indeed. A shout from the upper earth aroused me, and scrambling to the outer air, I beheld the rocks, the black pine copse, the illimitable moorlands, one dazzling, all-pervading sheet of blinding snow. All gone! the fair flowers, the sing-birds, the uncultured fruits that offered their profusion everywhere, blooming heather, and green grass, all gone! buried, until summer brought back the daylight, beneath a spotless mourning shroud of virgin snow. To my great relief, it was not as dark as I had expected. A sort of hazy shimmering light prevailed, like moonbeams through a mist. The northern wind blew keen; and even as I gazed, the blinding snow-flakes came whirling down again, and seemed to bury the dead summer deeper at every instant.

'They are plucking the wild geese's feathers finely up there, north,' said Peter Wow, unconscious that his proverb was a British as well as a Lapland one.

We all laid by our summer clothes, put on our manifold wraps of fur and woollen, and betook us to winter avocations. And now came a strange season, when it was hard to say whether it was day or night, or both, or neither. The lambs were never suffered to go out; the fiddles and drums, the bone-flute and the musk-ox's horn, were never silent for three consecutive hours; and there seemed no regular times for meals, or sleep, or work, or recreation. On the contrary, music, and such simple labors as could be performed underground, and dancing and cooking, to say nothing of eating, drinking, and gossiping, went on in a promiscuous fashion through the twenty-four hours of what would, down south, have been a legal day. When one felt tired or sleepy, he or she went to sleep; the hungry ate, the thirsty drank; the perpetual fires, constantly stirred the most enthusiastic messes; the fiddles and drums went on as if self-acting; the reindeer were fed, tended, and milked; wooden bowls were carved, horn-trinkets chiseled, and stories related to gaping listeners, all at once, and all for ever. I felt off-looking at my watch at all, except mechanically. I went about, as a sleep-walker might; I dreamed standing. I passed great part of that wonderful winter unpleasantly, but in a sort of amiable nightmare. Of course, I saw no newspapers: the world might wag as it pleased. 'It was in the daylight,' I in the dark. Of course, I received no letters: the post-courier was shut out, along with the strength I was the tenant of a strange lumpless, unconscious world.

We were not always underground. In the fine weather, the reindeer were driven out to browse on the moss and lichen, from which they scratched away the snow with their fore-feet. Then were hunting-parties too, when we chased and slew the white wolves, the white hares, the ptarmigan, the deer, the birds, all and every one in the wild variety of we're. Then was the eire-ne chase, and the chase of the white bear, and a grand battle with an old giant of a bear, who pine-ined on the superstitious respect the Laps have for 'Old Grandfather Wizard,' as they call him and robbed the storehouses, until his theft became intolerable. The wolf-hunts were rather dangerous; but the bear was a terrible fellow; he wounded four of our best hunters, crowed the dogs with his mighty hugs, and nearly beat the whole community, when a lucky shot laid him low. After the re wage the glutton-drives; oh, the wild cries that swooping over the frozen snow in a sheer drawing sledge, with no a brush on the wang, were bell-jangling, and the wild driver singing as he cheered on his startled team, that by like the whirlwind the dazzling white mood lands! The worst of it is, it takes away your life with uncommonly quick and when I waxed confident, and could drive pretty ably. I was run away with, of course, upset in an awful pell-mell into a drift five feet deep, and dug out ignominiously, amid much laughter of the Lapps. I, the whose gallery flowed over reading Gallus e Caligula, was 'chaffed' by a crowd of things between me and the pond pine. Before the short, sharp summer, which was over and gone, but ere the cold set in, I was a fair hand at the reindeer-sledge, and could drive like a Lap, and I feel that I owe my life to my skill in that exercise, my own dexterity in using the whip, and the sagacity of the animals. I shall never forget the scene. The heavens were one vast pavilion of many-colored light: blue, orange, fiery red, deep violet, now paved with fiery gold, now spangled with, instrous gems, all blended in one glowing mass; while beneath, and flinching the snowy plain, which echoed and sparkled it, as in ecstasy to the dance, a hundred columns of prismatic fire, that seemed the creation of some wild dream. These were the Merry Dancers, the wondrous Lights of the North. Ah! it was a pleasant winter; and I protest that I was half sorry when we all went up the hill again, and hailed the rising sun and day and summer came pouring in at once; and the boat was prepared, and I bade my gnome-hosts adieu, and went off to the daylight, open air, Gloucestershire world again.—Chambers' Journal.

A USEFUL MAN.

WILLIAM E. ERWIN was born Sept. 28th, 1803, in Williamsburg District, S. C. He was brought up in Sumter district; was married Oct. 22d, 1833, to Sarah M. Kennedy, daughter of Francis S. and Holly Kennedy, and died, after a short illness, in Octibbeha county, Miss. He was piously trained by parents of the Old School Presbyterian Church. At the age of fifteen years, or earlier he attached himself to the same Church, and afterwards with two of his brothers who joined the Church at the same time, he kept up family prayer in the absence of his father.

He moved to the State of Mississippi in the year 1835, and settled in Lowndes Co., and, says his widowed companion—to whom we are indebted for the use of his personal history: "the very night we took possession of our log-cabin, he erected the family altar." He moved again in 1837, and made his home east of the Tombigbee river, near Columbus. After several unsuccessful efforts to gather the remnants of a scattered flock and resuscitate what had been a flourishing Presbyterian Church in the vicinity, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church at Concord, where his wife was already a member, under the pastoral charge of Rev. George Sheeller.

In the year 1843, he, with several other persons, erect d New Hope church. Here, during the same year, a society was organized and the church dedicated to the worship of God by Rev. William Murrah. The Union Sabbath School, of which he was so long Superintendent, was established the same year by a Presbyterian Elder. In connection with the Church at New Hope he lived, serving faithfully in various capacities, and laboring successfully to the end of his days.

Seldom is a community visited by a providence so afflictive, in the loss of one of its members, as that which the neighbors and friends of William E. Erwin suffer in the death of this estimable man. Energy and benevolence were most prominent among his natural traits of character. He acted in accordance with the Bible injunction—doing with his might what-soever his hand found to do. His heart abounded with kindness toward his fellows: to befriend the orphan and widow, to make peace and arbitrate difficulties between friends or enmity, to visit the sick and minister to the wants of the suffering, were all in accordance with the promptings of his generous nature. Possessed of a hopeful and cheerful spirit, he diffused light and gladness through the social circle, and rendered himself a favorite especially with the young. A touching feature in the burial scene was the assistance given by the children and young people of the Sabbath School in laying the body of their friend and superintendent away in its final resting place.

His house was the home of unfeigned hospitality, a center of neighborly reunion and friendly social intercourse, and a resting-place for the toil-worn itinerant. Such was his position in the community where he lived as justly to entitle him to the appellation of "Our Oracle," under which appellation, if we mistake not, a sketch of his character appeared in the New Orleans Christian Advocate several years ago. Add to his natural goodness the sanctifying and controlling grace of God as exhibited in his heart and life, and we behold in him the model man and the Christian. His characteristic energy was manifest not only in his attention to temporal business but also in the untiring zeal with which he devoted himself to the cause of God. As a steward in the Church he did not hold office merely for the sake of position; he was a liberal devised and a faithful worker in the vineyard, giving time, talents, and money for the interest of the Church.

His activity and zeal in behalf of the Lord, did not leave him to consider himself a steward of the Lord, and gave freely to the support of the ministry, to the cause of missions, and for educational purposes. We doubt if ever an appeal was made to him in vain in behalf of any object of Christian benevolence. He was munificent but not ostentatious in his benevolence. But the friend of the Church, the kind neighbor, the devoted husband and father, is gone. Bereaved affection describes touchingly the closing scenes of his mortal life: "He left home Monday Oct. 1st, to spend a week at his plantation in Octibbeha county; he was taken sick on Tuesday, and died on Saturday night. His disease—congestion of the liver and bowels—was violent from the first. When I reached him Thursday night he was quiet, and relieved of the violent pain which had tortured him for two days and nights previous; and while life lasted, every waking moment after, he expressed gratitude to God for ease and sleep. When I found my dear husband sinking, knowing that his symptoms had for two days deceived us, I asked him if he was going to leave us?' He implied it there were any unfavorable symptoms? I replied, we feared so. Said he, 'I do not think so; I breathe freer, and think reaction will soon take place; but should anything serious occur, and should I become delirious, don't let it trouble you. I am perfectly resigned to the will of God, and I feel that he is supporting me. Oh! blessed Jesus, I trust in him; I have no fear of death.' A little later, I asked him if he had any message for friends, or the dear ones at home? 'Tell them,' said he, 'to be faithful; to live for God, and be ready for the Master's summons.' I asked him if he would like to live longer? 'Oh, yes,' said he, 'if it was the will of our Father, I should like to stay with you. I should like to work longer in my Master's vineyard. But, God be praised, the work will go on.' And with many other expressions of hope, of trust, of exultation, did he soothe and cheer our breaking and bereaved heart.

Thus lived and died a useful man.

W.

He is worthy of honor, who willeth the good of every man; and he is much unworthy, thereof, who seeketh his own profit, and oppresseth others.

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MRS. SARAH C. HILL, consort of Dr. H. W. Hill, Warren county, Miss., aged 30 years, 10 months, 2 days. Sister Hill embraced religion during a protracted meeting held at Oak Ridge in 1846, and joined the M. E. Church, of which she lived an acceptable and useful member to the day of her death. She was stricken down in the prime of life by consumption; and when she became convinced that the time of her departure was nigh, the thought of leaving behind her husband and children was painful indeed to her; but after calm reflection and communion of her faith, she cheerfully committed them to the care of Him whom she loved and served. During her illness she gave a shouted the praises of God, and exhorted the servants in the faithful and meet her in that happy clime where parting shall be known. It was the privilege of the writer, to visit her during her illness, and hear her speak of the comforts and joys of the christian religion; also of meeting her departed relatives and friends in heaven. A short time before she died she called her family together with friends and relatives, bade a kind and affectionate farewell, giving to each some token by which they would remember her. Then she requested quiet and composure in the chamber of sickness and death. She leaves to deeply mourn and sorrow her loss, but not without the consolation that she has gone to rest. Funeral services were performed by the writer, to a large and attentive congregation, from Rev. xiv. 13.

J. H. SHELTON.

RICHARD W. KAY died during the 1st Sept., 1860, in the parish of Assumption, La., at the residence of his son-in-law, Mr. Pearce, aged about 67 years. He is survived by his wife, not one child of his, but for a number of years a citizen of Kentucky. About 12 years ago he moved to Assumption parish, where he resided until his decease. Nearly 35 years prior to his death he professed to have lost in the atoning blood of Christ, and during all his life with the people of God, he distinguished himself by his consistent walk and godly conversation. He was a Methodist, was born to fight and when he fell, it was to die. The attack of the disease was of short duration. He was like Jacob, he died in the good old age of 67 years, and was gathered to his people. Like Jacob, he took leave of his children and grandchildren, and soon after watched by the bed-side of his wife, who was left behind to mourn her loss, but not without hope of meeting her husband in heaven. He was a kind husband, a tender father, and a good citizen, a true friend. In short, in every part of the church, we both regret the separation of such a man, and the good he came to know him.

MRS. CHARLOTTE H. TROTTER, wife of Dr. Dallas Trotter, died at her husband's residence in Caledonia, Miss., on the night of the 24th of August, 1860, after a protracted illness of two weeks and three days, which she bore with Christian resignation and fortitude. The deceased was born in Caledonia the 17th day of Oct., 1845. On early the last Prince joined the Christian church, and was baptized by Rev. Dr. Lattimore, and united with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Caledonia, Lowndes county, Miss. She joined the Church at Antioch, and remained a faithful member of the Methodist Church to the day of her death. She left a husband, two children, and many relatives and friends to mourn their loss. Her husband has lost a true wife, and the neighborhood a self-sacrificing sympathetic Christian, ready to every good work. Not a murmur was heard to escape her lips during her illness, but often said, "Dying is but going home."

J. A. FRIENDS.

EDUCATIONAL.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.—THE ... Session of this Institution will open on Monday, the first of ... next.

FACULTY.

REV. JOHN C. KILLER, M. A., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
REV. MOSES ALLEN, M. A., Professor of Mathematics.
REV. JOHN J. WEBB, M. A., Professor of Greek.
GEORGE H. WILEY, M. A., Professor of Latin.
A. H. HOLLINGSWORTH, M. A., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. J. L. SUNDSTROM, M. A., Professor of Modern Languages.
REV. A. G. MILLER, M. A., Principals of Preparatory Department.
WM. NOTTER, M. A.
R. H. SCOVELL, M. A., Tutor.
LEWIS FITZHUGH, Tutor.

Tuition per session, one-half payable in advance.
In the Preparatory Department.....$20 00
In the Collegiate Department.....30 00
Music extra.....60 00
Board can be obtained at the Steward's Hall, or in private families. Expenses varying from $150 to $200 per month. This will be a thorough ... Faculty, every one being a College Graduate.
Students should be provided with Bedding, Towels, large library, ... Students are expected to be present at the opening of the session, and to remain ... session.
Centenary College is located at Jackson, La., twelve miles East of ... Depot.
For further information apply to Rev. C. C. Gillespie, No. 112 Camp ... Rev. J. L. Sundstrom, New Orleans, or to the subscribed, Jackson, La.

JOHN C. MILLER, President.
Aug. 5, 1860. 1y

COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE.—COLUMBUS, ... Session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, the 1st day of October next, ... under the superintendence of the following ... Corps:

Rev. M. Hudson, President, and Professor of Moral Science and Belles Lettres.
Rev. W. H. Smith, Professor of Mathematics.
Rev. F. H. Foster, D. D., Professor of Natural Sciences.
Rev. W. H. Bays, D. D., Professor of Sacred Literature.
W. Schwartz, Professor of Modern Languages and Painting.
Miss M. F. Caldwell, Assistant in Academical Department.
Miss C. M. Semple, Assistant in Primary Department.
P. G. Gottschalk, Senior Professor of Music.
W. S. B. Mathews, Junior ditto.
Miss L. Bittendieger, and Miss M. A. Mathews, Assistants in Music.
Miss S. Schwartz, Teacher of Ornamental Branches.

A ball will mark the annual Christmas of a Student for board in Tuition, to be exercised by Faculty. The Compensation of furnishing a room varies from $5 to $12.

In addition to the regular College classes, there will be Instruction in Academical and Primary Departments, all under the charge of the same general faculty.

Letters on Financial business should be directed to Professor C. Schwartz the Secretary of the Faculty; on all other matters, either to the President or to

W. C. BASS, Secretary.
Macon, Georgia, Aug. 21, 1860. 1y

BASCOM FEMALE SEMINARY, Greenville, Miss. ... Session will commence its next Session, 8th ... Aug. 25, 1860.

Rev. S. D. OGBURN, President.

Dora Gibson Collegiate Academy for Young Ladies ... Session will commence on the 1st Monday in ... with competent assistants, in the departments of the English ... Classics, Mathematics, Natural Sciences, Languages and Music, ... Drawing and Painting. Pupils received at any time during the session, and charged from the date of entrance to the end of the session. Thorough instruction in the branches of English education. Lessons in Vocal Music, ... Terms per session of Forty weeks, Board and Tuition in English branches, from $150 to $200. Music, languages and extra branches at moderate extra charges.

Circulars, with further information, can be had by addressing ... Gibson, Miss.

sep 12 REV. H. JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

GREENSBORO' (ALA.) HIGH SCHOOL.—A Select School for Boys.—Rev. J. W. N. MAKEE, A. M. M. D., Principal. ... Session of forty weeks, commences on the 1st Monday in ... Pupils of any age, over 10 years of age, are admitted with the Principal's ... The school is conducted on the plan of the best Northern Academies. ... Tuition per session, $50 to $60. Boarding, including lights, and washing, $12 per month. Payments quarterly in advance.

W. L. C. BUNNETT, President.
Nov. 7, 1860. 8t

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, ... Mississippi. Rev. J. F. ... A. M., Principal, assisted by competent ... The next session will commence on the 1st Monday in September, ... and close the last Friday in June, 1861. Annual ... Session of Twenty Weeks.—Commencement—13th and 14th ... Session of Twenty Weeks.—Commencement—13th and 14th ... Session of Twenty Weeks.—Commencement—13th and 14th

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOL. [illegible] WHOLE NUMBER 519.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE
OFFICE—115 CAMP ST.

PER-ECUTED LITERATURE.

A propensity for persecution seems inherent in human nature. Jacob Perdelius, who had suffered so much at the hands of Egyptian taskmasters, in their day of power caused numerous Gentiles to embrace Mohammed by the edge of the sword or by fire; and spite of the doctrine of mercy, long-suffering, and love inculcated by the great Founder of Christianity, his followers have imitated the devotees of more bloodthirsty creeds. And

[illegible] each other, quite persuaded

That all the apostles would have done as they did.

The persecution of an opponent was so much more simple an operation than his intellectual overthrow; arguments might not always be ready, but the torch and the tagged wand were ever at hand; while to suppress the opinions of an adversary was more decisively conclusive than any attempt to confute them could possibly be.

The [illegible] Pagan literature: all Jewish books, Bibles excepted, were ordered to be burned, because they were filled with blasphemies against Christ. The Talmud [illegible] with [illegible] and [illegible] each other in their fulminations against [illegible] and [illegible] copies were burned at one time in [illegible] Spain, thereby destroying the destruction of [illegible] the Koran by Cardinal Ximenes into the [illegible].

The Reformation gave occasion for a vast deal of book burning. Luther would gladly have burned Luther himself, had he not been gratified his feelings by publicly commencing the great reformer's discourses and theses to the flames; a compliment the students of Wittenberg acknowledged by burning eight hundred copies of Tetzel's contemptible in the market-place of that town.—Wicklif's tracts, after once escaping from his enemies at Vienna, was retaken, and, by Calvin's instigation, burned at Geneva, his books and manuscripts shared the same fate.

In 1553 the Emile of Jean Jacques Rousseau was burned by the common hangman at Geneva; and his Contrat Social afterwards experienced the same fate.

In England, the war upon books was commenced by the haughty, high-reaching son of the Ipswich butcher. The persecution of literary works had, until his time, been [illegible] rather than discouraged, and the importation of [illegible] was [illegible] facilitated. Wolsey, writhing under the [illegible] personalities launched at him by Skelton and Roy, and [illegible] that the spirit of religious liberty was [illegible] itself, on the wings lent to it by Faust, and [illegible] people awakening to a sense of their wrongs, warned the clergy that unless they exerted themselves to suppress printing, printing would most certainly suppress them." The astute cardinal left no means untried to prevent the circulation of anything he considered inimical to either church or state. The king could not enjoy the slinging satires leveled at his ambition, [illegible] sufficiently to protect the satirists from his vengeance, but the author of the Defence of the Seven Sacraments was not loath to make his adversaries know that he had at his command more powerful weapons than his pen. He accordingly issued an Index Expurgatorius, a document [illegible] the new learning of Protestantism as heretical; and Wolsey went in solemn procession to St. Paul's, and presided at the burning of the works of the Wittenberg monk, dreaming as little as his proud master, that in less than ten years from that time, the Defender of the Faith would quarrel with its high-priest, and prohibit the [illegible] of the advocate of papal supremacy as pestilent, infectious, and seditious! Among those who were busiest in this literary crusade, the Bishop of Durham was particularly prominent. His mortal fear of one "little book brought by some folks from Newcastle," led him to make a vain attempt to get all the ports of the kingdom closed against the offending [illegible]. By another exploit, this prelate unwittingly [illegible] the gratitude of the reformers. Upon the publication of the second edition of Tindal's "Obedience of a Christian Man," a second [illegible] of the person by whose assistance the obnoxious version of the Scriptures had been reprinted. He accepted the condition, and to the astonishment of the chancellor, and the confusion of the Bishop of Durham, declared the bishop was the man, he having, by carefully buying up every copy of the first edition, supplied the funds for bringing out the second.

In the reign of Edward VI., the works of Peter Lombard, Duns Scotus, and Thomas Aquinas were carried upon hires, tumbled into bonfires, and burned in the market-place of Oxford. In the next reign, English Bibles and English commentaries on the Scriptures, of which the number was almost infinite, were treated in the same manner. Philip and Mary did not halt in the good work of suppressing any books tending to undermine their own temporal authority or the spiritual predominance of the pope, and in the latter category were reckoned writings calculated to bring religious houses or the Society of Jesus into contempt. In 1555, the Stationers' Company received their charter, by which they were expressly authorized to search as often as it pleased them all houses occupied by printers, binders, stampers, or booksellers, for any works obnoxious to the state or their own interests, and to seize, burn, or convert such works to their own use. Three years afterwards, the following terse, and, as Strype calls it, "terrible" proclamation was issued, and promptly acted upon:

"By the King and Queen.—Wherras divers books, filled with heresy, sedition, and treason, have of late and be daily brought into the realm out of foreign countries and places beyond the seas, and same also covertly printed within this realm, and cast abroad in sundry parts thereof; whereby not only is God dishonored, but also encouragement is given to disobey lawful princes and governors; the king and queen's majesty, for redress hereof, do by their present proclamation declare and publish to all their subjects, that whosoever shall, after the proclamation hereof, be found to have any of the said wicked and seditious books, or finding them, doth not forthwith burn the same, without shewing or reading the same to any other person, shall in that case be reputed and taken for a rebel, and shall without delay be executed for that offence, according to the order of martial law. Given at our manor of St. James, the 6th day of June, 1558." This cruel and cruel edict is supposed to have been especially provoked by the appearance of a little work, by one Christopher Goodwin, on the lawfulness of disobeying superior powers, in which rebellion against the tyranny of the crowned bigots was openly advised and defended.

In Elizabeth's time, several political pamphlets, and many dramas, some libels on the powers that were, perished at the stake. Dr. John Cowell published a law dictionary, called The Interpreter, and dedicated it to the Archbishop of Canterbury. In it he argued in favor of assimilating the laws of England to those of imperial Rome; these "outlandish positions" attracted some notice, and drew down the censure of both Houses of Parliament; the author was taken into custody, and The Interpreter committed to the flames "for asserting several points to the destruction of parliament." In 1622, David Pare's Commentary on the Epistle to the Romans was burned at London, Oxford, and Cambridge, by order of the privy council; and in 1640, the House of Lords commanded two works, Pocklington's Altare Christianum and Sunday no Sabbath, to be burned by the common executioner in the city of London and at the two universities.

When parliament at went up and the king went down, and Presbyterianism was for a while in the ascendant, the old victims of Episcopal persecution, eager to do as they had been done by, became the bitter denouncers of what they called "cursed intolerable toleration." They who had cried out loudest against the decrees of the old licencers of the press, appointed new ones, by whom all antagonistic works were ruthlessly consigned to destruction. If the Godfearing Puritans proved so merciless, it is not to be wondered at that one of the first proceedings under the Restoration was the burning of the long-man of the Covenant and three acts of parliament: that for erecting the High Court of Justice by which Charles I. was tried and condemned, and that by which England was declared a Commonwealth. On the 13th of August, the king issued a proclamation, ordering all copies of The Obstructors of Justice, by J. Goodwin, late of Coleman street, London, to be burned, coupling with it a much more famous work, the splendid Defence of the People of England, by one John Milton; but Charles would scarcely, like his successor, James, have commanded Locke's account of the Massacre of St Bartholomew to be burned at the Exchange, to please the French ambassador. Baxter's Holy Commonwealth received the same honor at Oxford in the very year of the Revolution.

After that important event, parliament looked with jealous eyes upon those who grounded the right of William and Mary to occupy the throne upon anything else but the will of the two Houses. In 1692, a pamphlet, by C. Blount, describing the king as a conqueror, was burned in Palace Yard. Three years previously, Bishop Burnet published a Pastoral Letter to his Clergy upon taking the oaths of allegiance to William and Mary. Carried away by his zeal, he wrote: "Here was a war begun upon just and lawful grounds, and a war being so begun, it is the unquestioned opinion of all lawyers, that the success of a just war gives a lawful title to that which is acquired in the progress of it.—Therefore King James having so far sunk in the war, that he both abandoned his people and deserted the government, all his right and title did accrue to the king, in the right of a conqueror over him." This assertion of William's title to the right of conquest was especially repugnant to the parliamentary leaders; and although they did not attempt to prevent the circulation of the Pastoral Letter for three years, it was condemned at the same time as Blount's pamphlet above mentioned.

In 1703, Defoe's Scottest Way with Dissenters, which raised the ire alike of those it assailed and those it defended, was burned by order of the House of Commons—a decree that no Englishman could treat with contempt. In the same year, the Scots parliament indulged themselves in a similar way. The Historia Anglo-Scotica, or an Impartial History of all that happened between the Kings and Kingdoms of England and Scotland from William the Conqueror to Queen Elizabeth, by Dr James Ussher, was found to contain many false and injurious reflections upon the sovereignty and independence of the Scotch crown and nation, and was therefore burned by the common hangman at the Mercat Cross of Edinburg. Another work, Memorials of the Church of England, by the same author, was censured from the throne, and, by the orders of the House of Commons, burned at the Royal Exchange. Dr. Drake's literary life was one of hairbreadth escapes and strange vicissitudes; he was a Tory partisan writer, as during in breaking the law as he was clever in eluding the clutches of its emissaries. He used to forward his manuscript to the printer through the agency of a masked lady, who took care that her whereabouts should not be traced. He was once saved by the word "nor" having been substituted for "not" in an indictment; but at length government managed to lay hold of him, and abandoned to his fate by those his pen had served, he died raving mad.—In 1705, a book entitled The Superiority and Direct Domination of the Imperial Crown of England over the Crown and Kingdom of Scotland, was so offensive to Scottish notions, that the parliament of that country handed it over to the executioner. Ten years later, the Irish House of Commons ordered the burning at Dublin of "a false, malicious, and scandalous libel," published by the Irish Jacobins, and called A Long History of a Short Session of a Certain Parliament in a Certain Kingdom, the contents of which were less ambiguous than its title.

The last noticeable instance of book-burning by authority occurred in 1723. The celebrated physician, Dr. Mead, purchased from the library of the Landgrave of Hesse a copy of the Christianisme Restitué of Servetus, the publication of which cost the author his life.—This particular copy was reputed to have belonged to Calvin, one of his accusers. The doctor determined to reprint the ill-fated work in quarto, but before the edition was completed, the sheets were seized at the instance of Dr. Gibson, Bishop of London, and the impression burned, May 27, 1723. A few copies escaped destruction, one of which may be seen in the Library of the Medical Society of London. In 1770, a perfect reprint was issued, but only four copies are now known to be in existence. The original copy passed from Dr Mead into the hands of the Duc de la Valliere, on the sale of whose collection it was purchased for the Imperial Library of France at the price of 3810 livres.

In these days of cheap printing and toleration, book-burning is looked upon as a puerile folly, upon a par with the Irish method of spiteing a banker by burning his notes. Still literature has suffered losses. As Wat Tyler's victorious rabble made firebrands of the ancient records of the city of London, so mad mobs destroyed valuable treasures when they set fire to Lord Mansfield's and Dr. Priestley's houses. The Vandal Massena, in retreating from the lines of Torres Vedras, wantonly destroyed the church and convent of Alcobaca, rich with the national literature of Portugal.

[illegible] of the "republic of letters," refused to allow the letters addressed to him by the most eminent scholars of the age to be published, because she found them useful for fuel. Mr. Warburton's servant used up a collection of old plays, many of which were unique specimens of our Elizabethan dramatists, for the bottoms of tarts and lighting the fire, for which ignoble purpose the records of the hospital of St. Cross were supplied by its ignorant housekeeper; and Bishop Cowper's wife, disgusted with his studious habits, destroyed in a few moments the results of eight years' labor. Sometimes authors have been stolen enough to commit literary suicide. Calderon, when dying, dragged himself to the fire, and sacrificed his translation of Tasso; Raleigh is said to have destroyed the concluding volumes of his History of the World; James Montgomery burned a novel, the composition of which had lightened the hours of his imprisonment; Moore put Byron's diary in the fire; D'Orsay did the same office for his own, which must have been worth reading; and Colonel Stewart, son of Dugald Stewart, not only destroyed his own manuscripts, which he calculated had cost him thirteen years of his life, but what was of considerable more consequence, burned his father's incomplete Philosophy of a man as a Member of a Political Association, his Edinburgh lectures on Political Economy, and a continuation of his Encyclopædia Britannica Dissertations; unmindful of Milton's aphorism, that "he who destroys a good book kills Reason itself."

THE BROWNINGS.

Few of the thousands who now place the poems of Elizabeth Barett Browning in the niche devoted to their favorite authors, are aware that she first became known to American readers as a contributor to Graham's Magazine. In the volumes of that periodical for 1841, '42, and '43 they will find her "Child and Watcher," "Sleep," "Catarina to Camoens," and many other of her minor poems. I think it was Poe who was first to recognize a genius hitherto unknown, but destined to a speedy and permanent popularity. Her power, (so rare an element in female poets,) fullness, tenderness, and the haunting music of her verses, which an occasional ruggedness only made more prominent, were at once acknowledged. In fact her American reputation was coeval with, if it did not precede, that which she won at home.

Nearly thirteen years ago, I heard a young lady whose pure Greek profile and exquisite voice can never be forgotten by those who saw and heard her, recite "Count Gismond." The wonderful dramatic truth of this poem—a truth which dislikes all explanations and accessories—struck me like a new revelation, and I eagerly inquired the name of the author. "It is a new English poet named Browning," was the answer. I then remembered having seen reviews of his "Bells and Pomegranates," and "The Blot in the 'Scutcheon," and lost no time in making myself acquainted with everything he had published at that time. In the words of Keats,

"Then felt I, as some watcher of the skies,
When a new planet swims into his ken."

Here was no half-poet, piping melodious repetitions on his limited reed, but a royal harper, striking, double-handed, the fullest chords and the extremest notes of the scale of human passion. His very faults were the willful faults of conscious power; his mannerism was no subterfuge to conceal poverty of thought, but lay in the texture of his mind; while in his boldness, his blunt Saxon plainness, and his faculty of hitting the target of expression full in the white, by a single, arrowy word, I looked in vain through the array of English authors since the Elizabethan age to find his equal. Many of his poems reminded me of the Day and Night of Michael Angelo—figures of immortal beauty struggling into shape through the half-chiseled marble, yet grander in their incompleteness than the completed works of other sculptors. He tries the sinews of language, it is true; he writes occasionally, for the evident purpose of exhibiting his verbal gymnastics, ("Old Pictures in Florence," for instance,) but he will stand the test which proves a true poet—he is best when simplest in his forms.

It is a curious fact that while the first volume of Alexander Smith (a man not to be named on the same day with Browning) was greeted with a sale of 20,000 copies the first year, the first American edition of Browning's poems, in two volumes, was not exhausted until seven years after its publication. One thousand copies in seven years! The sale of the English edition, in the same time, was probably not much greater. Of Browning's last volume, "Men and Women," nearly three thousand copies, I believe, have been sold. The same comparison might be made between the experiences of Tupper and Tennyson; but we all know whose works will be printed and read in the year 1960, and whose won't.

When I was about starting for Europe, on my way to the East, in the summer of 1851, a mutual friend offered me a letter to Browning, who was then, with his wife, temporarily in London. (After their marriage, which took place three or four years previous, they had made their home in Italy.) Calling, one afternoon in September, at their residence in Devonshire street, I was fortunate enough to find both at home, though on the very eve of their return to Florence. In a small drawing-room on the first floor I met Browning, who received me with great cordiality. In his lively, cheerful manner, quick voice, and perfect self possession, he made upon me the impression of an American rather than an Englishman. He was then, I should judge, about thirty-seven years of age, but his dark hair was already streaked with gray about the temples. His complexion was fair, with perhaps the faintest olive tinge, eyes large, clear, and gray, nose strong and well cut, mouth full and rather broad, and chin pointed, though not prominent. His forehead broadened rapidly upwards from the outer angle of the eyes, slightly retreating. The strong individuality which marks his poetry was expressed, not only in his face and head, but in his whole demeanor. He was about the medium hight, strong in the shoulders, but slender at the waist, and his movements expressed a combination of vigor and elasticity.

In the room sat a very large gentleman of between fifty and sixty years of age. He must have weighed two hundred and fifty pounds, at least; his large, rosy face, bald head, and rotund body would have suggested a prosperous brewer, if a livelier intelligence had not twinkled in the bright, genial eyes. This unwieldy exterior covered one of the warmest and most generous of hearts, and that heavy right hand had written one of the finest English noncenonties. The man was also no Kenyon, who, giving up his early ambition to be known as an author, devoted his life to making other authors happy. Possessed of ample means, his house near London was opened to all who handled pen, brush, or chisel, and the noble hospitality which he gave to Art was repaid to him by the society and the esteem of the artists. He was a relative of Mrs. Browning, and at his death, four years ago, bequeathed to her a legacy of £10,000.

Mr. Kenyon had called to say good-bye to his friends, and presently took his leave. "There," said Browning, when the door had closed after him, "there goes one of the most splendid men living—a munificent noble in his friendships, so lavish in his hospitalities, so large-hearted and benevolent, that he deserves to be known all over the world as 'Kenyon the Magnificent!'" His eulogy was interrupted by the entrance of Mrs. Browning, whom he ran to meet with a boyish liveliness. She was slight and fragile in appearance, with a pale, wan-feel face, shaded by masses of soft, chestnut curls which fell on her cheeks, and serious eyes of bluish-gray. Her frame seemed altogether disproportionate to her soul. This, at least, was the first impression her personality, frail as it appeared, soon exercised its power, and it seemed a natural thing that she should have written the "Cry of the Children" or the "Lady Geraldine's Courtship." I also understood how these two poets, so different both intellectually and physically, should have found their complements in each other. The fortunate balance of their reciprocal qualities makes them an exception to the rule that the intermarriage of authors is unadvisable, and they appear to be—and are—perfectly happy in their wedded life.

They both expressed great satisfaction with their American reputation, adding that they had many American acquaintances in Florence and Rome. "In fact," said Browning, "I verily believe that if we were to make out a list of our dearest friends, we should find more American than English names." Mrs. Browning was anxious to learn something with regard to Art in this country, and the patronage extended to it, and, in the course of the conversation, freely expressed her belief that a Republican form of government is unfavorable to the development of the Fine Arts. To this opinion I dissented as moderately as possible, but I soon had a powerful ally in Browning, who declared that no artist had ever before been honored with a more splendid commission than the State of Virginia had given to Crawford. A general historical discussion ensued, which was carried on for some time with the greatest spirit, the two poets taking exactly opposite views. It was good humoredly closed at last, and I thought both of them seemed to enjoy it. There is no [illegible] through the [illegible] of the encounter.

Their child, a blue-eyed, golden-haired boy of two years old, was brought into the room. He stammered Italian sentences only: he knows nothing, as yet, of his native tongue. He has since exhibited a remarkable genius for music and drawing—a fortunate circumstance, for inherited genius is always fresher and more vigorous when it seeks a new form of expression.

I feel that I have no right to touch further the personality of these poets. The public always demands to know, and there is no impropriety in its knowing, how its favorite author looks and talks, but, while he lives, it has no right to pry into the sanctities of his private life. Robert and Elizabeth Barrett Browning, however, have thousands of unknown friends in this country who will be glad to know that their lives are fortunate—that their share of the necessary troubles and trials is not more than the average lot of man—or, if greater, is borne with a cheerfulness and courage, which hides it from other eyes. Owing to Mrs. Browning's feeble health, they have made Italy their permanent home, but they visit England from time to time.

I met them again in London, in 1856, where I had the pleasure of breakfasting at Barry Cornwall's, in company with Browning. He was very gay and witty, and as young and buoyant in appearance as when I first saw him. Mrs. Browning was then reading the proofs of "Aurora Leigh," which appeared a short time afterwards.—Bayard Taylor.

JAMES MONTHOMERY.

James Montgomery was born at Irvine, Scotland, November 4, 1771. His parents were pious Moravians, whose love to God and their fellow-men led them on a missionary tour to preach the Gospel to the slaves in the West Indies. But they both died soon after their arrival at their destination. When about six years of age our poet was placed at a Moravian school at Fulneck, England, where he was far from being distinguished for diligence in his studies. The grave fathers were sorely puzzled what to do with him, and little dreamed that he would ever become one of the most distinguished poets of his day. But he was not altogether idle. He was an inveterate rhymer, and his mind was filled with plans of poems that he hoped were to give his a place among "The few, the immortal names

That were not born to die."

Little did they imagine the bright day-dreams that visited the apparently-indolent boy.

At length they concluded that there was no use in keeping him at school any longer, and he was accordingly apprenticed to the keeper of a retail shop in Mirfield. But he had too much ambition to be satisfied with such a situation. So on the morning of the 19th of June, 1789, he turned his back upon Mirfield without taking the trouble to let his master know where he was going. He was now, at the age of eighteen, about to the world, with his pack upon his back—a poet in search of a patron. In a day or two after leaving Mirfield he presented a copy of verses to a noble lord, who generously handed the bard a guinea. Surely he might have thought the golden days were about to return when poets were received into the houses of the nobility, and their wants supplied. But as he ran some risk of suffering for the comforts of life, he engaged in the prosaic work of selling goods to the inhabitants of Wath. But in about a year he became tired of this village, and went to London as a literary adventurer. Here he was received into the house of a bookseller by the name of Harrison, who treated him very kindly, but refused to publish his poetry. He now made up his mind to try prose, but, like many aspiring youths before and since his time, he was doomed to disappointment. He and those to whom he offered his prose productions differed slightly in regard to their merits.

In 1792 we find him at Sheffield. But his troubles were not yet ended. He soon became the proprietor of the world-renowned Sheffield Iris. Those were troublous times, when it was dangerous for an editor to express his opinions, unless they were such as the government wished him to entertain. Montgomery was twice confined in York Castle, the first time for three months on a charge of libel, the second time for six months on a charge of sedition. It required but little evidence to satisfy the juries before whom he was tried of his guilt, but the world has long since come to the conclusion that his imprisonments reflect more disgrace upon the British Government than upon him. After his release from his last confinement he continued to edit his paper till 1825, when it passed into other hands. In 1806 appeared The Wanderer of Switzerland, the first of his long poems.—So greatly had he become discouraged that his work was three years passing through the press. It was favorably received by the public, and its author's claims as a poet generally acknowledged. But there was one critic who growled at the new candidate for fame. Jeffrey tried to convince the public that the book was unworthy the praises bestowed upon it. He turned prophet, and sagely predicted that in three years from the time his review was written nobody would know that The Wanderer of Switzerland had ever been published. The critic must have wielded a mighty sword indeed to have thus killed a poet at one blow. It is to this circumstance that the following lines in English Bards and Scotch Reviewers refers:

"With broken lyre and cheek serenely pale,
Lo! sad Alcæus wanders down the vale!
The fair they rose and might have bloomed at last,
His hopes have perished by the northern blast.
Nipped in the bud by Caledonian gales,
His blossoms wither as the blast prevails;
Or his last works let classic Sheffield weep;
May no rude hand disturb their early sleep!"

If the poet was killed, or, rather, his works, they came to life again. Every school-boy knows how completely the critic's prediction has been fulfilled. The remainder of our subject's life was characterized by successful authorship. The West Indies was published in 1810, The World Before the Flood in 1813, Greenland in 1819, and Pelican Islands, the last of his long poems, in 1827. From that time he contented himself with writing short pieces. He died, full of years and full of honors, in the year 1854, at the age of eighty-three.

While a boy at Polmeek, Montgomery became the subject of converting grace. But after leaving school he turned back again to the world, but never so far shook off the influence of his pious parents and teachers as to become vicious in his life. He was again aroused to a consideration of his spiritual condition when a tendency to despondency, similar to that which cast so dark a pall over the life of Cowper, kept him for a time from that enjoyment in the service of God which he might otherwise have possessed. At last peace dawned upon his mind, and his best years were cheered by the consolations of religion. Even during much of the period of his despondency religion exerted a controlling influence over his conduct. For the greater part of his life he was earnestly engaged in the promotion of the glory of God and the welfare of his race. He is emphatically a Christian poet. While Byron seems to have written for the purpose of corrupting his readers, while Moore dresses vice in the garb of an angel, while Wordsworth ignores the distinguishing doctrines of Christianity, while Scott and Southey seem to have no higher aim than the entertainment of their readers, Montgomery aimed to charm his into a love of piety. There is not a single line in his works that tends to leave a stain upon the minds of his readers. The encomium that Lord Lyttleton passes upon Thomson, that he wrote is fully applicable to Montgomery. But he is not satisfied with mere morality. He sings with an inspiration gained at the foot of the cross, and as if he felt that his business on earth was to lure men to heaven.

"No line which, dying, he would wish to blot,"

The powers thus devoted to the service of God and humanity are not small. The world has long since acknowledged that the bard of Sheffield is justly entitled to a place among the first poets of his age. His long poems are none of them destitute of many passages of great beauty, but they are all wanting in unity and dramatic force. It is in his short pieces that he is most successful, and upon these his future fame will principally depend. Many of them are among the most beautiful productions of the British muse. No person of taste can read "The Common Lot," "Titanuph," "The Harp of Sorrow," or "Odin, to the British Volunteers" without acknowledging that their author was a true poet. His hymns are an invaluable treasure to the Christian world, and bid fair to be sung in the assemblies of God's people as long as the language in which they are written is used. Our author as a writer of sacred songs is inferior only to Wesley and Watts, yet it is in that species of verse that he most excels.—Rev. S. Leonard.

THE MARCH OF THE GLACIER.

There are few spectacles in nature so calculated to inspire awe and provoke curiosity as those [illegible] torrents, silent catapults [illegible] sympathise with [illegible] English tourist, who, after gazing on one of them for some time in silence, declared that it was obtrusive and unmeaning. There is something unspeakably strange and perplexing in the presence of a vast mass of ice, to all appearance fixed, immutable, under a burning sun, and in close contact with verdure and fertility. The dazzling pallor, the desolation, the silence of the 'dead sea' of ice, contrast forcibly with the green and golden vegetation of the valley, with the ripe corn-fields, the spreading foliage, and the Flowers of loveliest blue,

That skirt the eternal frost.

It is death in the midst of life, the skeleton at the banquet of nature.

Standing by the brink or on the surface of the hard rigid mass, the assertion that it moves is startling, and almost incredible; indeed, a certain professor of Tübingen went home after a visit to Switzerland, and wrote a book flatly denying the possibility of glacier-motion. Observation and reflection, however, quickly remove our doubts. We have only to keep our eye on one of the blocks of stone upon the ice, in a line with two fixed points—a tree or ledge of rock—at opposite sides of the glacier, to be assured that the stone changes its position, and is borne downwards with the ice. The glacier, too, tells its story in monistakeable language. It inscribes the record of its journey on the hardest rocks, and carries on its breast, or at its base, fragments of distant mountains, which, like the scallop in the palmer's hat, tell of its wanderings. In fact, the very existence of the glacier depends on its motion. Unless the ice below the snow-line, which, during every summer, is melted by the sun, were replaced, the lower part of the glacier would in a few years disappear. While, however, the ice at the base is gradually being reduced to water, fresh snow is falling on the summit of the mountain, and displacing previous deposits, which descending, are converted into ice, and added to the glacier. According to Rendu, the accumulation of the mountain snows adds each year 58 inches of ice to a glacier. This would make Mont Blanc 400 feet higher in a century, and 4000 feet higher in a thousand years. Dissolution and compensation are thus constantly going forward, and the downward motion of the mass prevents any diminution from being observed. Rigid and inflexible, therefore, as the glacier seems, it is in reality a restless body, subject to constant motion and perpetual change, ever hastening from its birthplace in the mountain-bosom above to its grave in the pasture-ground below. It is something more than mere metaphor to call a glacier a mer de glace. The resemblance extends beyond the mere wave-like appearance of the surface. The deeps and shallows, whirlings and narrowings, rapids and sluggish parts, the quicker flow of the centre than of the sides, the depression which occurs when the current sweeps round a buttress, the junction of branches and tributaries—all are to be found in the glacier as in the river.

The general fact that the glaciers move, has been known for a long period to the inhabitants of the mountains; but it is only of late years that attempts have been made to estimate the rate at which they travel. Hugi found that, from 1827 to 1830, his cabin upon the glacier of the Aar had moved about 110 yards downwards; while in 1841, it had attained a distance of some 1580 yards from its original position. Observations on the same point have subsequently been made by M. Agassiz, Professor J. D. Forbes, Professor Tyndall, and others, and some confusion has arisen from the different results obtained. The truth is, that the movement of a glacier is influenced by the slope on which it rests, and by the obstructions which occupy its path; and hence a separate measurement is required for each case. It has, however, been proved, not only that the centre of the glacier moves more swiftly than its sides, but that the point of swiftest motion follows the same law as that observed in the flow of rivers, shifting from one side of the centre to the other, as the direction of the valley changes. The positions of towns along the banks of a navigable river, writes Professor Tyndall, 'are mainly determined by this circumstance. They are, in most cases, situated on the convex sides of the bends, where the rush of water prevents silting up. Can it be, then, that the ice exhibits a similar deportment? that the same principle which regulates the distribution of people along the banks of the Thames, is also acting with silent energy amid the glaciers of the Alps?'

The fact of the motion having been ascertained, a stirring controversy, not yet at rest, arose as to the physical quality of the ice in virtue of which a glacier moves like a river. First, there was the theory of De Saussure, the great Alpine traveller, that glaciers moved as rigid bodies, sliding over the inclined beds on which they rested, and to which they were frozen by the cold of winter, and relieved by the thaws of spring and summer. Another theory, started by Charpentier, and supported by Agassiz, was, that the more exposed parts of the glacier melting gradually, filled the capillary fissures of the ice with water, the expansion of which, as it became frozen, furnished the force which pushed the glacier downward. The first of these theories was insufficient, and the second was contradicted by actual observations on the ice.

To the laborious researches and philosophic mind of Professor J. D. Forbes of Edinburgh, do we owe the most satisfactory theory of glacier motion. Professor Forbes having had his attention drawn to the subject by Agassiz in 1841, devoted himself to it with an enthusiasm and perseverance which at least deserved success. Year after year, he repaired to Switzerland, took up his quarters on the ice, explored the glaciers in all directions, and, as the result of his observations, propounded what is known as the Viscous Theory (from viscus, glue). 'A glacier,' he says, 'is an imperfect fluid or viscous body, which is urged down slopes of a certain inclination by the mutual pressure of its parts.

* * * Imagine a long narrow trough or canal, stopped at both ends, and filled to a considerable depth with treacle, honey, tar, or any such viscid fluid. Imagine one end of the trough to give way, the bottom still remaining horizontal; if the friction of the fluid against the bottom be greater than the friction against its own particles, the upper strata will roll over the lower ones, and protrude in a convex slope, which will be propagated backwards towards the other or closed end of the trough. Had the matter been quite fluid, the whole would have run out, and spread itself on a level: as it is, it assumes precisely the conditions which we suppose to exist in a glacier.'

The use of the term 'viscous' has caused much discussion. The assertion that glacier-ice possesses viscosity, or the power of being drawn out when subjected to a force of tension, has been stoutly combated by Professor Tyndall and others, who insist that the ice is not viscous, but plastic. 'Broadly observed,' writes Professor Tyndall, 'two classes of facts are presented to the glacier-observer—the one suggestive of viscosity, and the other of the reverse. The former are seen where pressure comes into play, the latter where tension is operative. By pressure, ice can be moulded to any shape, while the same ice snaps sharply asunder if subjected to tension. Were the Jesuit worth the labour, ice might be moulded into vases, statuettes, bent into spiral bars, and, I doubt not, by the proper application of pressure, a rope of ice might be formed and coiled into a knot. But not one of these experiments would in the least demonstrate that ice is really a viscous body.' Professor Tyndall points out, that when subjected to a strain, the glacier does not yield by stretching, but by breaking. When the particles of the ice are kept in close contact, they become reunited by the freezing of the film of moisture between them; but when they are too far asunder, crevasses are formed. The continuity of the mass, therefore, he maintains, is due, not to the viscosity of the ice, but to 'the regelation of the new contiguous surfaces.'

After all, the dispute is very much a war of words. It is well known that a substance eminently viscous may be broken by a sudden shock or strain. A piece of sealing-wax, as Professor Forbes observes, will, in the course of time, at moderate temperatures, mould itself to the most delicate inequalities of the surface on which it rests, but may at the same time be shivered to atoms by the blow of a hammer. In the same way, even tar may be crevassed when of a certain consistency. The regelation which Professor Tyndall makes such a noise about, is very much a matter of imagination. That ice possesses that power, is beyond dispute; but we have no positive proof that it is called into play in the movement of a glacier, any more than that a similar operation is not performed in the case of tar, honey, treacle, and other viscous substances.

CHARACTER OF SIR ROBERT PEEL.

At the close of a very readable sketch of the life of Sir Robert Peel, in Blackwood's Magazine, for September, the writer gives the following very just and impartial estimate of that great man's character:

It would be too much to speak of him as one of Wellington's greatest [illegible] but he was palestaking, able, industrious, unprejudiced, honest in the best sense of that term, and incapable of meanness. In spite of the pains which were taken to settle his opinions in early life, he seems ever to have wholly surrendered his own judgment to that of others. Indeed, his nature was one of those which mature themselves very slowly, and are therefore open to the charge, often very ill-founded, of having no fixed principles to guide them. How gradual, yet how steady, were the advances which he made towards the adoption of those views of commercial policy which are now everywhere in the ascendant! How, by little and little, the conviction seems to have dawned upon him that men's religious opinions ought not of themselves to present any impediment to their possession of political power. Yet no man of his age cared more for the wellbeing of the working classes; and it would be to do him great wrong were we to question his firm attachment to the doctrines and discipline of the Church of England. Peel's defects were those of temperament merely. He was constitutionally shy and proud. He could neither give nor receive unshackled familiarity. His manner was not a pleasant one, either in the House of Commons or anywhere else. His anxiety always to represent himself as actuated by the loftiest motives, and as sacrificing inclination and the ties of friendship to duty, amounted to positive Pecksniffianism. It was this weakness of temper, doubtless, which made him resent as a wrong done personally to himself anything like remonstrance against his plans, whether of public policy or private patronage. The same may be said of his ostentatious rejection of titles of honor for his children as well as for himself. There is as much of snobbishness in the pride which affects to despise rank to which it has not been born, as in the folly which worships rank for its own sake. Peel exhibited this weakness to his will, and seemed at least to be often under its influence in society. He had many admirers, therefore, but few friends. Still he was a man of whom, with all his shortcomings, England has cause to be proud; and whose name will go down to posterity among the ablest and most disinterested of those who have taken the lead in the management of her affairs.

THE SPLENDOR OF DAMASCUS.

Damascus is the oldest city in this world. Tyre and Sidon have crumbled on the shore; Baalbec is a ruin; Palmyr is buried in the sand of the desert; Nineveh and Babylon have disappeared from the Tigris and Euphrates; Damascus remains what it was before the days of Abraham—a centre of trade and travel, and island of verdure in a desert, "a predestined capital"—with martial and sacred associations extending through more than thirty centuries. It was "near Damascus" that Saul of Tarsus saw the "light from heaven above the brightness of the sun;" the street which is called Strait, in which it is said, "he prayeth," still runs through the city. The caravan comes and goes as it did a thousand years ago; there are still the sheik, the ass, and the water-wheel; the merchants of the Euphrates and of the Mediterranean still "occupy" there "with the multitude of their wares." The city which Mahommed surveyed from a neighboring height, and was afraid to enter because it is given to have but one Paradise, and for his part he was resolved not to have it in this world, is to this day, what Julian called the eye of the East, as it was in the time of Isaiah, "the head of Syria." From Damascus came the Damson or blue plum, and the delicious apricot of Portugal called Damasco, damask, our beautiful fabric of cotton and silk, with vines and flowers raised upon a smooth bright ground; the damask rose, introduced into England in the time of Henry VIII.; the Damascus blade, so famous the world over for its keen edge and wonderful elasticity, the secret of whose manufacture was lost when Tamerlane carried off the arts into Persia; and the beautiful art of inlaying wood and steel with silver and gold, a kind of mosaic—engraving and sculpture united—called Damaskeeing, with which boxes and bureaus, and swords are ornamented. It is still a city of flowers and bright waters; the streams of Lebanon, the "rivers of Damascus," the "rivers of gold," still murmur and sparkle in the wilderness of "Syrian gardens."

The observations on the last solar eclipse are leading to new discussions and theories respecting the physical constitution of the sun. It has been supposed that the sun was composed of a central dark globe, surrounded by a self-luminous, gaseous envelop, the source of its light and heat. Le Verrier now takes the ground that the sun is itself a luminous body, of a very high temperature, and covered by an unbroken layer of roseate matter, and an atmosphere. Mr. Faye, on the other hand, thinks there is decided evidence that the sun has no atmosphere, and that the appearance of a corona and of luminous clouds are purely optical.

Better the world should know you as a sinner, than God know you as a hypocrite.

GARIBALDI.

We find in a [illegible] correspondence of a continental journal the following sketch of Garibaldi: "I have heard him speak; I have been near him; he is wonderful. He has a lion's nature. His voice, resolute and decided, his hand large and body thick-set. In his moments of anger he must be formidable. In repose, his eye is placid and his smile pleasant. He is not a man of genius, but an apostle. He walks in his faith, without weakness and without fear; he performs miracles. In the tempest, he is the man to step from his boat and walk upon the waters. He believes in his mission, as others believe in their star; and he goes straight forward, sure of his destiny, like all conquerors. The other evening, during the fight at Carmina, when the soldiers fired upon the people with guns and cannon, he was unmoved. He offered cigars to the national guards that surrounded him, and said: 'Let us smoke while we are waiting for them.' But he feels danger, and whenever he sees it, he cries: 'Civado io!'—thither I go. A singular trait of his character is its perfect simplicity. He is the only great man of my acquaintance who does not attitudinize. A little grandiloquent in his speeches—like all true believers—he is so in good faith, and not for the sake of grandiloquence. But in his private intercourse he is the most cordially familiar man in the world. He receives all importunities with a martyr's patience; he does not keep them at a distance nor speak to them like an oracle. He is simple and good—one trait among a thousand. I take the most common because it is the most striking: At Messina, I believe, one of the former companions of Gar

DECEMBER 5, 1860.

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

$2 50 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 5, 1860.

TEACHERS' POSTOFFICES AND THE ADVOCATE.

We hope all our preachers who may desire to have the Advocate changed to other post-offices, will write us immediately. Give us the names of both the old and the new post-offices. And as soon as you can learn them, send us a list of all the post-offices in your respective charges. All preachers who receive an appointment from the Bishop, and those who are employed by presiding elders, are requested to act as agents, and will receive the paper gratis. No paper will be sent, or changed, unless it is ordered.

We ask the brethren to remember the resolution passed by the Mississippi Conference, calling upon the other patronizing Conferences to unite with her in raising the subscription list to 10,000 subscribers this year, in order that the paper may be enlarged and improved. We wish to enlarge just as soon as possible—at the beginning of the year, if we are sufficiently encouraged.

MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

This body assembled at Natchez, Nov. 21, and closed its session on the 28th, having been together nine days. Bishop Early presided. This was the first time he had met this Conference since 1857. We are glad to say that he was in good health—we never saw him in better preservation. He is one of the most striking instances of persistent human vitality we have ever seen. And his vigorous mind and character are equal to that of his body. As a presiding officer he has but few superiors. Firm and dignified in manner, prompt in the application of parliamentary law, he avoids confusion and dispatches business rapidly. His Conferences are nearly all revival seasons. His morning prayer-meetings at this Conference were gracious services, and the spirit of God was pervadingly present during the whole session. His administration gave general satisfaction. The preachers received him with great cordiality, and he was happy among them. At the close of the session, Dr. Marshall offered a resolution, accompanied by an address in his best style, tendering the regards and love of the Conference, to which the Bishop responded in warm and affectionate terms. It was a time of weeping.

Rev. Dr. McFerrin, our Book Agent at Nashville, with his amiable lady, was present, and added much to the interest of the Conference. We heard him preach an edifying and effective gospel sermon on Sabbath night. His speeches and addresses, on the Conference floor, and at the Missionary and Sunday School anniversaries, were telling in their effect, and well received. His visit to the Conference, we trust, will do great good in behalf of the interests of the Publishing House. He is also to visit the Louisiana and Alabama Conferences.

Rev. Dr. Chas. Taylor, our zealous and indefatigable Sunday School Secretary, was also present. Dr. Taylor is a welcome visitor at all the Conferences. He delivered an able and earnest address in behalf of the Sunday School cause at the anniversary, and, assisted by Dr. McFerrin, realized a handsome collection of near three hundred dollars. He is one of the most industrious and laborious servants of the Church we know. His cause [illegible] tation" and support. May God speed

Four of the oldest and [illegible] of the Conference had died during the year—Rev. B. M. Drake, D. D., Rev. George C. Light, Rev. T. C. Thornton, D.D., and Rev. Lewell Campbell. Instead of a funeral sermon, according to the old custom, the Conference devoted several hours to a sort of obituary session. The Committee on Memoirs reported, and after each memoir was read, suitable addresses were delivered by members of the Conference and others. It was a mournful and yet blessed occasion. The old and strong men were passing away. They had labored long and faithfully, and had suffered much, in the cause of their Master and the Church. They had long gone in and out before their brethren. Some of them had been among the pioneers of Methodism in the Southwest, and had contended in the wilderness, alone and lonely, for the faith delivered to the saints. At the last session, they were all present. Now their forms were no more seen; their places were vacant; the sound of their voices were not heard in pulpit or prayer, or council. Their brethren remembered them, wept for them, rejoiced for the grace of God that was in them, and did justice to their memories. God let it be in all our Conferences always.

But, though these old and honored brethren are gone, strong and faithful men are left to fill their places. The Mississippi Conference has some of the best business men, and most faithful and reliable itinerants we know. Levi Pearce, H. H. Montgomery, David M. Wiggins, John G. Jones, James Walton, Barnabas Pipkin, John Lusk, W. B. Hines, and others like them, are men in whose hands the itinerant work will never suffer, and who know how to maintain the staple and vital interests of Methodism. And there is a large class of younger men who are already doing good service in their respective pastorates, and are gradually helping in the tone and character of the Conference proceedings. Quite a large class of young men were admitted on trial, several of them graduates of Centenary College. This institution is doing great good in this way—a good that will be duly appreciated by and by. A higher and yet higher standard of talent and education is perceptible in the class admitted each succeeding year. The sentiment of ministerial education pervades the Mississippi Conference. A ministerial education society was formed for the purpose of assisting young men whom God has certainly called to the ministry, and who intend to devote themselves to that great work for life, to educate themselves for its duties. Success to the Society. We trust the time is at hand when such societies shall be formed in every Conference, and when none shall be admitted on trial who have not, at least, a thorough English education, and who have not passed satisfactory examinations on the whole course which now limps through four years.

The Conference was most hospitably entertained by the good people of Natchez. Rev. Dr. Watkins, who has resided there for many years, and Rev. W. G. Millsaps, pastor of the Methodist Church, had made ample and satisfactory arrangements for all—preachers, their wives, and visiting preachers and laymen. We shall not soon forget the hearty and elegant hospitality of Mrs. Shipp, a noble Presbyterian lady, and her accomplished daughters, Mrs. Cannon and Mrs. Holt. It seems to be our providential destiny to stay at Presbyterian homes at our Conferences, and to preach in Presbyterian pulpits. Nor shall we soon forget the delightful and solemn service in the Presbyterian Church on Sabbath, in which we were permitted to officiate. It was good to be there. The Church is an elegant and beautiful one, and the congregation appeared to be composed of pious, intelligent, tasteful people. We were glad to make the acquaintance of Rev. Dr. Stratton, the Presbyterian minister, who impressed us as an accomplished christian gentleman, and as an able and devoted minister. His courtesy and brotherly love are worthy of remembrance and imitation. The Presbyterian and Baptist Churches were all opened to our preachers. The Conference went away with the most hearty good will and affectionate remembrance of the kind people of Natchez. It is an old, well-improved, and beautiful place. Elegant, even palatial, mansions and villas dot all the surrounding hills. Wealth and taste abound. May grace much more abound. The next session is to meet at Canton.

Rev. R. Abbey, the hard-working Financial Secretary of the Publishing House, was present most of the session. He has a body and a will that nothing can break down, it seems. From Nashville to Missouri, from Missouri to Texas, from Texas to Mississippi, from Mississippi to the Carolinas, he flies; and alights only long enough to gather the "bee-bread" necessary for the hive.

As Dr. Marshall is a General Conference officer, it is proper to mention his presence also. He was read out as "Agent of the Church Evangelist," as usual, and will be next year, we suppose. We take this occasion to repeat our assurances of good-will toward the grand enterprise. It has General Conference sanction. Its object, we believe, is, to concentrate all our journalistic connectionalism into one paper, and to consign all our present weeklies to the ranks of the "locality." The Doctor sometimes intimates that we, as well as other editorial brethren, have been jealous of the proposed journal, and have opposed it. For ourselves, we disavow all jealousy of the Church Evangelist. It is not in our way. And we have never opposed it. We have published everything sent us by the Doctor in favor of it, and nothing against it. We even published his proclamation that it would soon appear in Memphis. Before it came out, however, The Methodist appeared in New York, and the Doctor says they appropriated his plan. To allay all doubt of our good-will toward the Church Evangelist, if the Doctor will send us a report of his progress since he entered upon his agency, we shall take great pleasure in publishing it.

Talking of literary matters, there appears to be great disappointment because of the non-appearance of the life of the lamented Dr. Winans. The edge of expectation is worn off, and there is no need to harry it now. Men engaged in the duties of the itinerancy have but little time for literary labor, but it was supposed that Dr. Watkins, who enjoys more elegant leisure than any other man in the Mississippi Conference, having a permanent and beautiful home at Natchez, and to whom Dr. Winans' papers were left, could accomplish the work. Dr. Watkins says, however, that he has made but little progress. As he is stationed at Natchez this year, he may have time to attend to this great work. His sermon on the life and character of Dr. Drake, was well received by the Conference.

The venerable and Rev. John C. Barres attended the Conference. He has been a preacher of great power in his day, and his power is not gone yet. His preaches with the zeal and energy of younger years. His spirit seems to have lost but little of its vivacity, and his imagination but little of its sprightliness and intensity. No man's preaching and exhortations were mentioned oftener, or with more approbation by the people of Natchez. His genial manners scatter sunshine in every social circle he visits. May he long continue to go in and out before us.

During the past year, the Mississippi Conference has been greatly blessed with the spirit of revival. In almost every portion of its territory, the Spirit of God has been poured out, the people of God have been blessed, refreshed, strengthened; sinners have been awakened and converted; a vigorous and seemingly permanent zeal in the cause of God has been imparted to the Church and ministry. One most encouraging sign is the hungering and thirsting after entire consecration to God, and the perfect love that casteth out fear, which pervades a considerable portion of the Conference, both among the clergy and laity. Among the young preachers, and especially among those more advanced in culture, and more noted for pulpit ability [illegible] revival success, the doctrine of holiness is [illegible]vated. It is matter of common remark that wherever this is the case, the blessing of God accompanies pastoral labor, and that where it is not the case, spiritual barrenness is manifest. Ought not the Church to see to it, that all our preachers, before ordination to the highest grade of the ministry, and especially before being entrusted with responsible pastoral position, are sound in doctrine, and earnest in spirit, on this point? It is easy for a Conference to become gradually "demoralized," to use a modern military phrase, by the gradual introduction of men who, however talented, and excellent in other respects, make but little account of this cardinal and crowning doctrine of the Methodist Church. We say to the ministers of the Mississippi Conference who are laboring for the promotion of holiness, go on; be firm; be discreet; preach and practice holiness, and God will bless your souls and your labors. A young minister who commences his pastoral life without being duly impressed with this gracious and solemn truth, will make a capital mistake, and regret it when perhaps it is too late to avoid the sad results.

The Conference is becoming wide awake to the interests of the Sunday School cause. A Convention was held last summer, at which strong resolutions were passed, and earnest speeches were made, all evincing a growing sense of the importance of Sunday Schools to the salvation of the children of the Church and country, and showing a determination to have our own schools, under our own control, supplied with our own publications, in all our charges. The Sunday School Society of the Conference is fully organized, and in active operation.—We trust the preachers will generally and vigorously push this great interest, in all its departments, from the very beginning of the year. Brother pastors, give your selves to this good work, which is so valuable and so full of promise, at once, and with all your might. Think of the small amount raised for the cause last year.

The Educational Institutions of the Conference were reported to be in good condition. Centenary College is owned and patronized by both the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences. Located in the heart of the richest country in the South, with magnificent buildings and all necessary appliances, and with such a large patronizing territory, there is not a more promising opportunity for a grand college success in all the Southern Church.—Port Gibson Female Institute is reported to be doing well. Rev. B. Jones seems to give general satisfaction as Principal.

The Missionary collection for the year, we were informed, was somewhat larger than that for last year, though, being absent from the anniversary on account of indisposition, we did not learn the amount raised, nor could any one give us definite information. The Mississippi Conference is wealthy, and ought to stand next to Alabama in this matter. The preachers are zealous, and the people liberal. But the officers of the Conference Missionary Society have never inaugurated any system like those which have educated other Conferences up to such a high standard, and to the attainment of such grand results. We have attended three sessions of the Mississippi Conference, and we have come decidedly to the conclusion that it is at this point that the "screw is loose." Other Conferences have done great things for the cause, and done themselves great honor; and the principal agency has been the appointment of officers to control their Missionary Society, whose souls are fired by the missionary spirit, and who have the industry and business capacity to lead the Conference to missionary success. In the Alabama and Louisiana, and other Conferences, the reports of the Secretaries have been, for many years, important, valuable, and inspiring public papers, looked for and listened to with interest, and eagerly read when published. We have no such thing in the Mississippi Conference. In the Alabama Conference, the Treasurer's report shows exactly what has been done, in the whole Conference, and in each charge, as compared with the previous year. It has come to be looked for with eager interest by the entire ministry and laity of the Conference. The Conference, at each session, resolves to raise so much missionary money—say $10,000—always an advance on the collection of the year previous. This is apportioned, at the Conference, between the different Presiding Elders' districts, and, afterward, apportioned, by the Presiding Elder and the preachers, we believe, to the different charges in their District. At the next Conference Anniversary, which is made a great occasion, the Treasurer's report is read, giving the amount assessed to each charge, the amount raised by that charge, and the surplus or deficit. Often, when there is a deficit in a District, the preachers of that District, by means of reserve and contingent subscriptions, or otherwise, make up the amount on the spot.—We have no such thing in the Mississippi Conference. And it is not the fault of the people or the preachers, but of the officers of the Missionary Society. The Mississippi Conference owes it to itself and to the Church to see that men of the proper spirit, energy and capacity fill these offices. She has the men, and ought to avail herself of them. She is growing, wonderfully to these most intimate with her for the last few years. A great future is before her. But just here is a matter that should be mended, if her growth is to be harmonious and powerful. Otherwise, people and preachers will become discouraged.

The Book and Tract Society at Vicksburg was reported to be in good condition, and prosperous. The division of sentiment on this matter seems to have subsided, and the preachers seem to be harmonious in regard to it. This is matter of rejoicing. All occasion of partyism in a Conference should be avoided. Rev. Mr. Cook, a local preacher, an able and worthy man, is the agent, and is devoting all his energies to it. We trust it may be the means of doing great good. We learn that all the matters in dispute between the Depository and the Publishing House have been satisfactorily adjusted.

We sincerely believe, upon the whole, that the Mississippi Conference is now entering upon an era of prosperity and power such as she has never known before. Excellent parsonages and churches are being built all over the country. Young men of the first promise are entering the ministry in increasing numbers. Unity and harmony are more prevalent. As the sagacious and devoted Levi Pearce said to us at parting, "we are not yet equal to Alabama; but her noble example is being felt. We are already awake and moving. We shall do great things in a few years." We verily believe it. God grant it.

The following are the Appointments:—

NATCHEZ DISTRICT—W. B. Hines, P. E.; Natchez, W. H Watkins; Kingston, N S Cornell; Buffalo, W. Finn; Woodville, W G Millsaps; Woodville colored mission, A. Bay; Wilkinson, J L Forsythe; Wilkinson colored mission, P S Petty; Fort Adams and Percy's Creek, A J Wheat, J A McPherson; Pinkneyville and Tunica, J J Clark; Laurel Hill, J J Wheat; Bayou Sara, S T Swinney. R Abbey, Financial Secretary.

FAYETTE DISTRICT—J Lusk, P. E; Fayette, J M Jones, J T Curtis; South Jefferson colored mission, J D Wills; North Jefferson colored mission, N S Coffee; Adams County, colored mission, J G Jones; Washington, J B Bowen; Meadville, C A McNeil; Scotland, R A Sibley; Brandywine colored mission, M F Gourley; Bayou Pierre, C T French, J B Hall; Cayuga, V H Johnson; Cynuga colored mission, H P Lewis; Rocky Springs, W B Johnson; Grand Gulf, B Jones; Port Gibson and Wesley Chapel, J A B Jones.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT—L Pearce, P E; Vicksburg, G H Clinton; Vicksburg colored mission, R B Dowaer; Warren, G F Thompson, G F Hoyles; Warren colored mission, H A J Parker; North Warren, J H Shelton; North Warren colored mission, J W Jones; Milldale and colored mission, J D Newsom; Clinton, G D Wade; Clinton colored mission, J S Harris; Raymond and Spring Ridge, H F Johnson, and one to be supplied; Jackson and colored mission, W. Harrington, one to be supplied; Brandon, J W Ard; Rankin, W Price; Concord, B B Whittington. C B Marshall, Agent Church Evangelist.

[illegible] District.—W P Batton, P E; Greenville, M S Westfall; Hollivar colored mission, [illegible]; Deer Creek, J T Robertson; Black Bayou, J N Bedford; Little Deer Creek, J M Clenaan; Lower Deer Creek, P Howard, J C Taylor; Tallum and Duncan's Plantation, G C Fore; Point Worthington and American Head, J Carr, one to be supplied; Sunflower, J Y Griffing.

YAZOO DIST.—D M Wiggins, P E; Yazoo City, J W McCrary; Yazoo colored mission, J P Briggs; Silver Creek, A Becton; Yazoo, F M Featherston; Mount Olivet, R W Lambuth; Big Black colored mission, T W Hines; Ebenezer, T C Parrish; Honey Island colored mission, H Williamson; Richland and Lexington, J P Richardson; Holmes, T C Rayner; Black Hawk, A J Smith; Carroll, to be supplied by R Stewart; Greenwood and Tallahatchie, L Kendall; Roebuck and Sidon, G Townsend.

STARKVILLE DIST.—W Wadsworth, P E; Starkville and Pearce chapel, R J Jones, jr.; Octibbeha, T W Castles; Greensboro, to be supplied; Middleton, A R Hines; Bankston, J G Carlisle; Attalla, W H Dickinson; Double Springs, to be supplied; Louisville, G Jackson; Webster, W R Ralney.

SHARON DIST.—J Walton, P E; Sharon and Thornton chapel, S W Speer; Madison and Unbia, J W Adams; Canton, W F Camp; Vernon and colored mission, W M Curtis; Livingston, Pearl River and colored mission, R H Montgomery; Camden, L Ercanbrack; Carthage, H D Berry; Philadelphia, E H Munger; Decatur, C W Campbell; Hillsborough, H Copeland. J W Lambuth, Missionary to China.

BILOXI DIST.—R J Jones, P E; Biloxi and Handsboro, J J Millsaps; Gainesville Miss., J W McNelli; Columbia, J A Vance; Westville, K A Jones; Raleigh, A H Nicholson; Paulding, G J Mortimer; Garlandsville, N D Young; Augusta, to be supplied; Flint Creek mission, M Cox.

BROOKHAVEN DIST.—T Price, P E; Brookhaven, to be supplied; Monticello, E. Mortimer; Holmesville and colored mission, H J Harris, F Ely; Glendale Miss., A Gottschari; Amite, E F Mullins; St Helena, W H Lewis; St Helena colored mission, to be supplied; Covington, J English; West Pearl, J D Shaw; Pearl River, D W Dillehay; Georgetown, R T Hennington, one to be supplied; Franklinton, L A Simms.

CLINTON DIST.—B Pipkin, P E; Clinton, Ia., J A Godfrey; East Feliciana, J Nicholson, T W Brown; East Feliciana colored mission, J B Higginbotham; Port Hudson, C R Godfrey; Jackson, La., J M Pugh; Thompson's Creek colored mission, to be supplied; Livingston mission, A Castle; Pontchatoula, J Hoyce; Greensburg, E A Flowers; East Baton Rouge, E R Strickland. J C Miller, President Centenary College.

MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

The Book Agent, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, returned from Aberdeen, Miss.—the seat of the Memphis Conference—on Wednesday of last week. He reports that Bishop Pierce was present in good health, and presided to the entire satisfaction of the members, while his pulpit ministrations gave great pleasure. The missionary collections were not so large as was anticipated, owing to the prevailing drought in portions of the Conference territory. The Conference collections were unusually good; the brethren are resolved to take care of the widows and orphans. Laymen are working well with the finances of the Conference. Educational enterprises doing well. Andrew College is prosperous, with the prospect of a handsome endowment. The book and tract interests very promising. Some $76,000 are ready pledged, and more expected. He learned that Rev. S. W. Moore, a scholar and Christian gentleman, is in future to be connected with the genial and indomitable Watson in conducting the Advocate and Depository.

The anniversary of the Missionary Society was an occasion of interest; more than $2,600 pledged. The citizens of Aberdeen displayed great hospitality in the entertainment of the Conference. Aberdeen is a refined and elegant city, had off for a railroad, but will soon have one in operation. The new Methodist church is a spacious and elegant building. The prospect for a revival of religion very encouraging when he left. Bishop Paine was at home a portion of the time, but left for the Virginia Conference on Monday evening. Bishop Paine enjoys a good reputation at home, and wields an influence for good. May his days be many.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.—This body meets at Baton Rouge, La., to-day. The venerable Bishop Early will preside.

DR. PARSONS.

We copy the following from the Nashville Advocate. We publish it in full, because it is instructive. We sincerely trust that all others who are merely hanging on to our Church, like dead leaves upon the trees in Autumn, will immediately follow Dr. Parsons' example. Whenever it becomes whispered of a Methodist preacher, especially after he has become a man of age in the ministry, that he has been or is, in a leaning relation to another denomination, he is never trusted afterwards, it matters not how prominent he may become. And the sooner that class of men among us find it out, the better for them and the Church. Whenever a preacher refuses to take soldier's fare with the rest of his itinerant brethren, and begins to manage and bargain for places to suit his tastes and circumstances, he is in a bad way.

Schon Chapel, Louisville, Ky., has been for four or five years independent, with Rev. M. Smiley as pastor. Mr. S. has been called to Philadelphia, or somewhere else. The debt that hung over the building, and the disaffection that was among the few remaining members, made it difficult to stay or go. It seems at last that the remains of the church is gone. We take the following from the Banner of the Cross:

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 31, 1860.

Rev. and Dear Sir:—On Monday, the 29th inst., a very gratifying event in the history of the Church in Louisville was consummated. The congregation of "Schon Chapel," an independent Methodist house of worship, came in a body into the Episcopal Church, transferring to that Church all the property previously held by the congregation. The property consists of a very handsome church-building, capable of holding four or five hundred persons, with commodious basement school-rooms, a very fine lecture-room, and two large rooms in the rear of the main building, but fronting on another street; a very good organ, and valuable communion plate. The property is situated in the heart of the city, and is worth not less than $24,000.

On Monday the members of this congregation associated themselves as a parish of the Protestant Episcopal Church, under the name of "Calvary Church." To enable the new parish to start free of all embarrassment, the Episcopalians of Louisville nobly stepped forward, and, in two days, raised $8,500, the balance of debt remaining on the property.

At the same meeting on Monday, an admirable Vestry was chosen, all members of the former congregation, viz., Messrs. Hyatt, Armstrong, Burkhardt, Bridgford, Colston, Tripp, Lyons, Gurley, and Webster. If this congregation is as happy in the selection of a minister as in their previous proceeding, it will be one of the most flourishing and successful in the city. J. C.

REVS. TALBOTT AND PARSONS, ALSO.

The last sentence had less meaning to us when we first read it than it has now, since reading the following, which was received on Monday:

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Nov. 17, 1860.

MR. EDITOR: Some four years ago, as you are apprised, Schon Chapel assumed an Independent Congregational attitude—inviting Rev. George W. Smiley to become their pastor. He accepted, resigning his pastorate at Brook-street Station.

The enterprise proved a failure. Smiley seeing the ship in a sinking condition, accepted a call to a German Reformed Church in Philadelphia.

Schon Chapel was then unpastored; it was also unpaid for—a debt of $12,000 upon them. In this condition, the principal and responsible men of this church proposed to sell their Church to the Episcopalians, for $9,000, assuming the remainder of the debt themselves.

The proposition was accepted promptly by the Episcopalians in this city, and the property became theirs. In a few days, "Schon Chapel," an inscription which sat and "Calvary Church, 1800," [illegible] ed to say, as I passed, "Sic transit gloria mundi."

The church having been secured, with an understanding that with the church (I do not know whether it was in the deed of conveyance) about thirty members would be transferred also, it remained to procure a rector for Calvary. About this time, Rev. Jeremiah Talbott, a young and promising minister of the Louisville Conference, from some cause became dissatisfied with itinerancy, and attached himself to Calvary.

You know that a minister, changing his ecclesiastical relations so abruptly, will be subjected to perhaps uncharitable remarks. Some have said that Bro. Talbott expected the rectorship at Calvary; but he was, like Zacchens in one regard, small in stature, and they overlooked Jeremiah. I do not endorse this motive as attributed to him.

The Vestry of Calvary Church (once the Official Board of Schon Chapel,) by a committee, waited on my friend, Rev. C. B. Parsons, on the Thursday preceding his visit to the military encampment at Bowling Green, and proposed to him to take the rectorship of Calvary Church. He deferred to answer, but assured them he would take the matter under prayerful consideration; in the meantime they could make out the call in due form.

I ought to have said that, previous to this, a prominent member of Christ's Church (Episcopal) had waited on Dr. Parsons to know if he could be induced to take the rectorship of Calvary Church.

The Doctor, like all good pastors, keeps a small handbook, a register of the names of his charge—took this book from his pocket, laid it gravely before his friend, and said, "How can I leave three hundred sheep committed to my hands, in the wilderness without a shepherd?" The Churchman said that was a new aspect of the subject, and retired.

On the Monday after his return from Bowling Green, the committee of the vestry waited on Dr. Parsons with a call made out in due form, and he accepted, prospectively; that is to say, he accepted on the condition that he should be allowed to meet his engagement with the Brook-street Church, his committal to Calvary being for the time a matter of confidence. By some means the confidence was betrayed. On Monday it was whispered; the Calvary folks could not keep it. On Tuesday morning it had reached the ears of our Book Agent, and some of the official members at Brook-street. Among all hands it was determined that this rumor should be arrested, or, if confirmed, the Brook-street officials had, as far as consulted, determined that they did not need Dr. Parsons any longer.

One of them put the question direct, if he had committed himself to the Vestry of Calvary Church. Dr. Parsons declined to answer.

He was invited to attend an official meeting that night, which at first he declined, but, upon second thought, he concluded to attend. He did attend, and then and there resigned his charge. On the next morning he addressed a very respectful letter to the Presiding Elder, Rev. N. H. Lee, and ceased to be a Methodist preacher.

He complains that he was "precipitated" into this action—that he intended to serve his pastorate at Brook-street. His committal to Calvary was to be a confidence matter; that about next May he would enter quietly and secretly on his novitiate in the Episcopal Church; and that by the time he was ready for orders, his Conference year would close. He could then appear at Conference, be dismissed, and enter regularly into his new relations.

As a Methodist preacher perhaps he might have availed himself of his pastorate to lead off some of those three hundred sheep! Those who told his secret said he would do so; and these Brook-street officials were very decided and faithful men. Some think this manœuvre to serve the Methodist Church and be an Episcopalian, is Jesuitism, but Dr. Parsons hates the Papacy—yes, he hates it cordially.

He addressed the Official Board at Brook-street, and took an affectionate leave of them, praying with them and taking them severally by the hand. He declared in their presence, and has since reaffirmed, that the Methodist Church was the Church of his love; that he was not dissatisfied with its doctrines, its government, or economy; that he believed it the great aggressive Church to evangelize the world. For this declaration he was willing to be held responsible for all time to come.

If that be so, then he has his hands and his head in the Episcopal Church; and his heart in the Methodist Church; and, like Dr. Ralston, and any other honest man, will seek to retrace his steps by and by. Then, why, you say—why has he left? This is a question I am not at liberty to answer. I do not know that I could tell you what I think, but it might do him injustice.

* * *

It seems that the Doctor was caught napping—"precipitated," as he would say. We hope he may be useful where he goes. May his bow abide in strength. But we advise him not to try any more to have twin strings to it. That poor unfortunate chapel has well been dubbed Calvary Church—for it seems that two or three aspiring preachers have been used up on it already.

OUR PASTORAL INEFFICIENCY.

What we have written, we have written.

MR. EDITOR: The last issue of the Advocate revealed to us the man with whom we had dared to break a lance—that distinguished and excellent man, J. B. Walker, D. D. Now, "it wot not that it was" him when we entered the arena for a quill combat. Hence, whatever may be the disastrous consequence to us as a writer, from this, Dr. Walker is responsible. For I did not have the acuteness to see the overpowering argument these articles contained, until the proper author of them was made known to me in the last Advocate. We, therefore, owing to this fact, beg the clemency of Bro. Walker; we are confident from what we know of him, the magnanimity of his nature will compel him to be lenient towards us.

It seems to us (but in this record we are mistaken) that the Doctor all at once was aroused to the fact that he had not honored the memory of her who gave him being—"the name my mother called me by."

We admit that our Church policy is not in every respect perfect; nor do we believe it possible for her in policy so to be made. We believe the extension system suggested by Bro. Walker, if adopted, would inevitably drive us as a Church into Congregationalism. As to the Church in England, her term of continuance is but one year longer than ours. Has she, in this her slight pastoral advantage over us, outstripped us in doing good, will the Doctor affirm? In regard to France, the Church is too young there to know how the system of five years continuance in the same pastorate will work. Presiding Elders, Editors, Agents, &c., are not pastors; they have no such work to do, hence their continuance in the same work has no relevancy whatever to the question now involved; because the change of extension is pleaded for on the ground that our preachers are inefficient as pastors. Of course we supposed Bro. Walker to be not "somewhat" but altogether "posted up in relation to Clark, Benson, and Watson." Come, Doctor, to the point: In your first, you asserted that the transitory system of our pastorate work prevented men from becoming "mighty in the Scriptures." You say these men were in the same localities for long years." This we admit. But were they not all the time under the system you said the preachers thereof "aim to become revivalists"? And is it not a fact that the same may be said in this day of many of our preachers who are "mighty in the Scriptures," (for, thank God, the Methodist Church can favorably compare in this with any other Church), that they have for many long years been in same localities, and yet all the while subject to that system. The false assumptions that we charged Dr. Walker's logic with having built, were not based on the excellent remarks of Bishop Early, nor the addresses of Bishops for the last twenty years. The charge was founded on this language in the first article:—"There must be a reason why our ministers are not more efficient in pastoral labors, and why they are less so than the ministers of other communions." It was upon this assumption that Dr. Walker based his arguments in favor of the extension term, and this we charged as being "false," not true, "in regarding facts."

F. G. Ferguson, of the Alabama Conference, writes: "For, can or ought we to reason about a thing that is simply ridiculous. It is NOT TRUE that Methodist preachers are deficient as pastors, all hindrances considered—it is true they are poor proselyters, and therefore the injustice of some of the comparisons made in the range of this discussion."

So, Doctor, "some one else has taken you in hand."

J. WILL.

Louisiana Conference.

MOREAU STREET SUNDAY SCHOOL CELEBRATION.

MR. EDITOR: We would have been delighted to have had the "light of your countenance" shine upon us at our recent Celebration; but as you were away attending the Mississippi Conference, we concluded to write you a brief description of it. We are aware of the interest you take in the Sunday School cause, and hope this sketch will not prove uninteresting to the readers of the Advocate.

Our school contains about 300 pupils, 30 teachers, 2 librarians, and a secretary and treasurer, all under the control of one of the best of superintendents—Capt. R. L. Raberson. The library is a very superior one, for selection, arrangement, &c., and contains between three and four thousand volumes. All credit, however, in that respect, is due to our worthy pastor, Rev. R. J. Harp, who selected a catalogue to meet the wants of all classes, and adapted to the capacity of all ages, from the lisping prattler in the "infant class," to works that might be entitled to a place in the library of any D. D. in the land. The system which is now adopted was suggested and recommended by him, and which for the preservation of the books could not be surpassed. The Celebration, about which we commenced to write, took place on Thursday evening, the 29th ult., being the day that was set apart by our Governor for general thanksgiving for mercies past, and earnest supplication to Almighty God for future blessings; it was presumed that it would not be inappropriate to let the children close the services of the day. The exercises were opened with prayer by Br. J. J. Lyons. The chorus of the opening hymn, we feel assured, will be reiterated in the heart of every friend of the heaven-born cause:

"O! long may the Sabbath-School banner still wave O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave."

It would be unnecessary to give anything like a minute account of all the addresses delivered; it is sufficient to say that all the speakers acquitted themselves with honor, and reflected credit on their instructors. A few, however, are worthy of special notice. "Why don't you learn to dance?" was delivered in a style so original, and the arguments against dancing so conclusive, that the applause of the entire audience was called forth. "The Orphan's Lament" enlisted the sympathies of all present.—"The voice of Nature," sung by a little boy and girl, one five and the other seven years old, could not have been improved in time or melody by more experienced singers. "What I love," by a little prattler, interested and amused the whole assembly. The Valedictorian closed by urging all to love the precious Bible. The hymns were all appropriate, and sung with much interest. To several of the pupils were awarded a beautiful picture for having acquired a certain number of verses from the Scriptures, and five who have gone through a regular catechetical course received diplomas. But to some interested the most pleasant part remains to be told: the presentation in behalf of the teachers of testimonials to the superintendent and pastor. Rev. R. J. Harp was selected to present to Capt. Raberson for his faithfulness to the interests of the school during a term of twenty years, an offering of affection in the form of the General Conference Engraving, neatly framed. Bro. Harp's remarks were exceedingly appropriate, and to the point. Capt. R. replied in sentences broken by emotion, acknowledged his ignorance of any such intention on the part of the teachers, but fully appreciated the motive which prompted them; and concluded by invoking a blessing upon the school, breathing a fervent prayer for the salvation of teachers and scholars. Rev. R. H. Read then arose, and with the grace and dignity which so few possess in so great a degree, advanced to Bro. Harp and in a brief, yet eloquent address, presented to him, in the name of the teachers, for his assiduous attention and untiring devotion to the improvement of the school, a handsome "paper mache" writing desk. The surprise was not less pleasant than unlooked for. Bro. Harp responded in a manner that will long be remembered by all. The closing hymn was then sung. The benediction was pronounced by Rev. J. D. Parker. Altogether we had a glorious time, and we earnestly pray that all engaged in the Sunday School cause may not worry in well doing. The school is not only the hope of the Church, but the hope of the world. During the past year some of our scholars have died, and one of our most faithful teachers—the absence of whose familiar form and encouraging smiles were sensibly realized on this occasion. The recollection that she had forever gone from our midst, cast a shadow upon our otherwise joyous spirits. But we grieve not as those without hope, for the remembrance of her pure life assures us that our loss is her eternal gain.

New Orleans, Dec. 1, 1860.

MOBILE SEAMEN'S MISSION.

MR. EDITOR: Permit me through the columns of your paper, to communicate to the members of the Alabama Conference, and all others concerned, that the Bethel Ship in Mobile bay, together with my library, surgical instruments, and everything else on board, was entirely lost during one of the storms in September last. It is to be hoped, however, that the sinking of the ship will not put a stop to that important mission; and that the Alabama Conference will continue to carry it on.

At the fourth Quarterly Conference of the St. Francis street Church of this city, held on the 14th inst., the following resolution was offered, and unanimously adopted:—

Resolved, That in the judgment of this Quarterly Conference, the seamen's mission in Mobile bay is an important enterprise, and that the Alabama Annual Conference be requested to continue the appointment of a missionary to that work.

One object in making this communication at the present time is, that the friends of the mission who have promised to contribute to its support may still send up their free will offerings to the approaching Conference, as every dollar promised will be needed to meet the expenses of the mission for the past year.

With the hope that the Conference will continue the mission, efforts are now being made for that purpose. It is too important a mission to be suffered to fall through. The thousands of sailors who annually enter the port of Mobile, and who, from the situation of the bay, are compelled to remain there for months, should have the gospel preached to them. It is the sailor that gives commercial wealth to our country, and renders certain bays valuable. Let us, then, in return furnish the sailor the gospel of Jesus Christ, and point out to him hope, so that he may steer his sin-shattered [illegible] the haven of peace and safety.

Mobile, June 25, 1860.

OMAR EFFENDI.

Some time ago we gave an account of an extraordinary movement in Turkey under the lead of a certain Omar Effendi, a man held in high esteem by the Mohamedans. He was represented as having embraced the essential principles of the Christian religion, and as having so much influence with those around him that in the course of five months he had gathered together thirty thousand disciples, principally in Stamboul, Galata and Scutari. The most wonderful and beneficent results were naturally hoped for from such a movement. It is therefore with real regret we learn that the report is greatly exaggerated, and that while some good is anticipated as the result of a really singular movement, it is not likely to be nearly so momentous as was expected. A correspondent of the New York World says: "At one time the American missionaries had great reason to hope that he (Omar Effendi) and his many followers might be brought immediately under the influence of the gospel; but these hopes have been disappointed in a measure, so that at present little can be hoped from the influence of this man. Those who have seen him in Brousa are inclined to believe that he differs little from other Moslem fakirs or holy men. Few of his disciples now come to visit the missionaries, and there is reason to fear that there was some intentional misrepresentation in their statements. But however this may have been, great good has come out of this movement, and much more may be hoped for. It has seemed to have opened the door for preaching the gospel freely among the Turks, and has made all the Turks in Constantinople familiar with the fact that there are missionaries here who are laboring for them. It has roused their curiosity, and you find them now on all sides ready to talk freely with you about religion, when a little time ago you would have met only with injury and insult."

A MINISTER SPEAKING FROM AN IMMENSE SPEAKING TRUMPET.—Hearing in large churches, according to the New York Evening Post, is now made as easy as in the smallest, by the success of an experiment just completed in Trinity Church, in New York. It consists of a paraboloidal reflector of sound, placed at the back of the pulpit, of which the speaker's mouth is the focus. The beam of sound, about ten feet in diameter, is thus thrown to the most remote point of the church, and by its sideflow fills the whole body of the building.—The structure is quite ornamental, and in harmony with the general architecture of the building. All great public buildings, whether for singing or speaking, may have a similar arrangement adapted to their use. The whole of the rear end of a building should be one paraboloidal surface. It is particularly suitable for legislature halls, as it works both ways. A person standing in the furthest door in Trinity Church can carry on a conversation with one in the pulpit in the lowest tones, even in a whisper. Any person well acquainted with the higher mathematics, and accustomed to make constructions in architecture, engineering or machinery, is competent to superintend such an erection.

THE BROOKS HOUSE.—The improvements are now completed. It has five stories, beautiful verandahs, and fifty rooms. We call attention to the advertisement in another column. The Brooks House is now the largest, roomiest, airiest, and best situated boarding house we know of in the city. And, from personal experience, we can speak well of the table. Capt. Brooks devotes himself with great assiduity, to the comfort of his boarders, and makes them feel at home. If you wish a good home when you come to New Orleans, tell the omnibus driver to take you to the Brooks House.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVCCATE.

DECEMBER 8, 1860.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

METHODIST.

Our Home Work.—We compile the following interesting revival news from our correspondents throughout the Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi Conferences:—

BAYOU CHEEK CIRCUIT, ALT. CONF.—Rev. A. J. Briggs writes: "Within the last two months we have had 173 converts, of which 108 were received into the church on probation; one of which I joined the church, and many more were convicted. Our circuit has paid her preachers, and will fully meet her Conference and Missionary assessments." A good work truly.

GREENVILLE, ALA., Rev. W. A. McCarly writes: "We have had a good meeting in Greenville—32 converts, and the Church much refreshed."

The following we gather from our exchanges:—

ANNIVERSARY OF THE MISSIONARY SOCIETY.—The anniversary of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church will this year be held in Cincinnati, December 16.

BOUNDS MISSIONS. The Central Christian Advocate states, that during the ten years closing with 1859, the Northern Methodist Missionary Society expended on the home field $1,500,000; and that the Book publishing house has, where this money was applied, increased its offices, plenishes and personages, to the value of $500,000.

WESTERN OHIO CONFERENCE.—The whole number of members in the Western Iowa Conference is 5,536; probationers, 1,251; local preachers, 92—total, 6,879; decrease, 91; raised for missions, $177; Sunday School Union, $4 83; Tracts, $1 20; Bible society, $1 25.

We learn from the Western Christian Advocate that the venerable James M'Mahon, of the North Ohio Conference, is no more. He was the oldest member of that Conference, and one of the pioneers of Western Methodism.

The Baltimore Herald says that some of the ministers who have arrived at Pittsburgh to attend the Methodist Conference, made the journey on foot, some as far as one hundred and fifty miles.

DRIVING THE METHODISTS OUT OF THE PARISH.—An English paper mentions that Rev. Baptist Noel, at a late meeting of the Baptist Union, stated that the other day he was staying in Cornwall with a gentleman who mentioned that there was an order in the parish book to this effect: "Paid to Mr. So and So [God, for driving away the Methodists." But now in that parish there were fourteen Wesleyan chapels, and they were all filled. The population of the place was 10,000, and the whole of them [illegible] of five families were Methodists. This result was attributable to the earnest determination of the first Methodists to preach the Gospel to every creature. They did it, and the Lord went with them.

PRESBYTERIAN.

TENDENCY—CONSERVATIVE.—The Synod of New Jersey, O. S., has sent an invitation to all the Presbyterian ministers in the United States, to unite with its members in commemorating the tercentenary of the First Meeting of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, the precious germ from which almost all the Presbyterian churches in England, Ireland, and America have sprung, on the 23d of December next. The time will be highly appropriate for historical discourses upon the points in the causes, the doctrines, and the effects of the Reformation—a great subject worthy of profound study, and eminently practical.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN IRELAND.—Twenty years ago, this church consisted of two branches, the Synod of Ulster and the Secession Synod. In the year 1840, a full and formal union was effected; and it is on that period, we may date the prosperity of this church. God has evidently greatly blessed the efforts of Presbytery, and in twenty years it has been about twenty-five per cent. notwithstanding, there has been but little, if any, increase in the population. The gain in this church has been from the world and the dominions of Popery.

DOCTRINAL NEW SCHOOL PRESBYTERIANISM.—The Christian Observatory states, "that the first seven years of the history of the New School Presbyterian Church from 1839, show an increase of [illegible] churches and 17,100 members. The last fourteen years show a decrease of ninety churches and 10,183 members."

The N. Y. Churchman says the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian church have issued a circular in which they bring out the fact that over nineteen hundred churches, or more than half the whole number under the care of the General Assembly, are nothing to the spread of the Gospel abroad during the past year.

BAPTIST.

Rev. G. Abord, a French Baptist minister, who was formerly a Jesuit, has been appointed missionary of a mission which has been organized for the purpose of bringing the Gospel before the French population of Philadelphia. Mr. Abord will travel to solicit aid for this interesting mission.

At the recent annual meeting of the Baptist Bible Union in New York, it was voted to raise a fund of $100,000 for the purpose of circulating gratuitously the revised English Scriptures, when they shall have passed the final committee.

The New York Tribune says there are forty-five Baptist churches in New York city and vicinity, which support twelve mission schools, the attendance in which will average over one hundred to each.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE REVIVAL IN IRELAND.—From the statistical table appended to Professor Gibson's "Year of Grace" in Ireland, it appears that there were nine counties visited by the Revival; that the aggregate number of the congregations to which it extended was 317, and that the aggregate number of communicants added to the church was 10,636, that is, between seventeen and thirty-four on an average to each of the congregations.

[illegible], of the Jamaica Mission, returned to the United States. They were in the service of the American Missionary Association. Mrs. R.'s health necessitates a return, and Mr. W. was advised by his physicians to leave Jamaica for a season, such a course furnishing the best hopes for his recovery.

REVIVAL IN FRANCE.—A revival of great interest and power is reported as in progress among the Roman Catholics, near Vessoul, in France. In two or three villages near a thousand souls, it is stated, have left the Roman Catholic Church, and entered Evangelical Protestantism.

TRIAL OF DR. KING, AMERICAN MISSIONARY TO GREECE.—Dr. King writes from Athens, under date of August 3: "The decision of the Council of Judges with regard to my case has been given, but I have not been able to get a copy of it through the regular channel. I have procured a copy through a friend, which I suppose is correct. According to that, they neither say that I am guilty or innocent, but simply that they will not proceed with the prosecution for the present. Cessation for the present! Of course this leaves me always in doubt whether I am eventually to be tried or not. They may at any time resume the case; and should I leave, they may then resume it, and say that I fled in order to avoid justice. From this decision I may make an appeal.

CONVERSIONS IN AUSTRIA.—At Spalow, in the district of Semille, 17 persons embraced Protestantism in a single day. They were, for the most part, artisans. Since the beginning of the year these conversions have been very numerous among the working classes of Eastern Bohemia.

GIVING.—The 19,351 Congregationalists of Maine contributed to benevolent objects last year $28,858; and the 10,118 of Ohio, contributed $7,127.

It is estimated that there are in New York city about 85,000 Germans, of whom 25,000 are Roman Catholics. About 5,000 are Jews, and 8,000 are attendants upon Protestant worship. While more than forty thousand are infidels or are indifferent to religion.

INTOLERANCE.—Miss Ann Morice, of Cardiganshire, Wales, has placed before her Methodist tenants, the alternative of conformity to the Established Church or immediate departure from her estates.

INTERESTING MISSIONARY MEETING.—On the 4th of October last, a most interesting missionary meeting was held in Constantinople, Turkey, in commemoration of the fiftieth anniversary of the American Missionary Board. In the assembly fourteen different countries, and nearly every Protestant denomination were represented. It was a remarkable meeting, especially in the spirit of gospel charity and intercommunion of the different denominations which prevailed.

BIBLES FOR ITALY.—At the late monthly meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society, a communication was received from Colonel Bonchin, Geneva, Chairman of the Swiss Italian Committee, asking renewed and increased appropriation for circulating the Scriptures in Italy, which was granted; and also from Rev. Isaac F. Bliss, and Rev. Henry A. Cobb, reporting favorable prospects for circulating the Scriptures in Turkey.

GOOD NEWS FROM SIAM.—Dr. Bradley, missionary to Siam, says that Boodhism is manifestly melting away in that country, and that it is evident that the king has but little respect for it. While he is under political obligations to do something as a defender of the faith, he is at the same time doing much to diminish the number of the priesthood, and is obliging the priests to work, as no other Siamese king has done. It is commonly remarked that he does not patronize the priests, or build temples, as the late king did; while some say that he is no Boodhist at heart, but that he hates and despises the system.

DEATH OF A MISSIONARY.—The Rev. Richard Armstrong, D.D., died at his missionary post, in the Sandwich Islands, on the 23d of September, from injuries received by a fall from his horse.

DOMESTIC.

From the latest telegraphic dispatches to this city, we are in possession of the following intelligence:—

The Political Crisis.—From Tallahassee, Fla., we learn that the bill providing for the assembling of a Convention of the people of that State has passed both branches of the Legislature. The Convention is to meet on the 3d of January, 1861. A telegram from Washington says the President-elect has determined that South Carolina will not compel him to collect the revenue by force. At the large meeting held here last night Col. Bilbo said that Tennessee would secede thirty days after South Carolina. From Washington we also learn that the assurance of Representatives and others from Georgia, Alabama, and Mississippi, that these States will positively follow South Carolina, have unmistakeably alarmed the conservatives who believed that South Carolina would have no supporters among the Southern States. The Washington correspondent of the Times telegraphs Texas advices representing the people on the eve of revolution against the State government, Governor Houston having refused to call a Convention.

Congressional.—The United States Senate assembled in Washington on Monday morning, 3d instant. Seventeen Senators were absent. In the House, two hundred members answered to their names. It is stated from Washington that a proposition is on foot that the Representatives of all the Southern States, South Carolina excepted, confer to prepare a list of their grievances and what will satisfy them. The list is to be submitted to the conservative Republicans and in the event of receiving their favor, to be referred to a committee of one from each State. It is believed that Senator Clingman will soon offer a proposition for the peaceable secession of the States and a fair distribution of the assets and liabilities. It is rumored that Secretary Thompson will resign on Thursday and will be succeeded by Gov. Pratt, of Maryland. The idea of a National Convention being called by Congress is not favorably received by either party. The naval estimates for the year amount to eleven and a half millions. The President's Message fills eight columns of the Constitution newspaper. Nearly half the message is devoted to the secession question.

More Lincoln States.—The latest advices from San Francisco, by the Pony Express, are to the 21st ult. California has gone for Lincoln by a plurality of from 700 to 1000. Lincoln's plurality in Oregon thus far amounts to 318.

The following we gather from our exchanges:—

LOUISIANA.

INCENDIARISM.—In various parts of the State several fires have taken place, which are evidently the work of incendiaries. Major J. M. Wells has lost three hundred bales of cotton. Major Wells has suffered severely on three separate occasions. The new gin house of J. H. Olcott, Esq., on Bayou Blanche, was destroyed by fire last week and one hundred and fifty bales were consumed.

SAD ACCIDENT.—Mrs. Magruder, wife of Prof. Magruder, of Botoh House, was thrown out of her carriage last Sunday morning, while the horses were running away, and received severe injury.

WASHED AWAY.—The dam constructed by the Rapides Navigation Company, at the Bayou Rapides, has been washed away.

The post office of Bauit Bayou, Franklin parish, La., has been discontinued.

MISSISSIPPI.

THE LEGISLATURE.—On Friday last this body adjourned. The bill calling a State Convention on the 7th January passed unanimously. The 20th December is the day fixed for holding an election of members to said Convention. Strong secession resolutions were also adopted.

BURNING OF MCNAIR'S ACADEMY.—Saturday, the 24th ult., the academy of Mr. McNair, one mile and a half from Summit, Miss., was burned to the ground—the furnitures and stores and the clothing and books of the pupils being nearly all lost. One of the pupils, Master J. M. Brown, an orphan, whose brother is a planter near New River, was, we regret to say, consumed in the fire.

ALABAMA.

DIRECT TRADE.—The Eufaula Express notices the receipt, by an enterprising merchant of that inland town, of a consignment of goods imported direct to his order from Glasgow, Scotland, by way of Apalachicola, Fla. Though the goods were put down in Eufaula at an expense of 8 to 10 per cent. for duties, charges, etc., he holds them on a fair margin of profit at New York prices for like articles.

VOTE OF ALABAMA.—The Montgomery Advertiser publishes the official returns of the late election, derived from the office of the Secretary of State. It stands for Breckinridge, 48,831; for Bell, 27,500; for Douglas, 13,618.

A SUDDEN DEATH.—During a political meeting in Tuskegee, Macomber, Ala., on Thursday, 25th Oct., whilst they were firing a cannon some 150 yards from the stand where the people were collecting to hear the speeches, the cannon burst, and a piece weighing several pounds was thrown into the midst of the crowd, and striking a Mr. Watts on the head, crushed and mangled his skull, killing him almost instantly!

MOBILE WINE COMPANY.—This company, organized for the purpose of encouraging the culture of the native grape, met Friday last. They report that, should the season be favorable, they expect to make, this year, 10,000 gallons, or 500 gallons to the acre. The actual capital stock of the company now is $20,100. It is proposed to add to this $10,000, making $30,100. During the two years which the company has been in existence, the stockholders have paid in forty-per cent., on the capital subscribed.

MONTGOMERY.—The population of Montgomery county (Ala.) according to the recent census, is 26,950. Of this there are 12,308 freemen and 23,752 slaves. The value of the real and personal property of the county is assessed at $51,326,045.—The population of the city of Montgomery is 5,889 freemen and 4,000 slaves.

Hon. H. W. Hilliard contradicts through the Montgomery Mail, its report that he has accepted overtures to make Brooklyn, New York, his residence.

GEORGIA.

A LITTLE BOY REWARDED FOR HIS HUMANITY.—The track of the Wilmington and Atlanta Railroad was washed away by rain in the night not long ago, and a little boy, discovering the damage, walked up the track and stopped a coming train in time to prevent a dreadful catastrophe. The little fellow is to be sent to the Georgia Military Institute at the expense of the State.

One hundred and eighty cases of Sharpe's patent carbines, containing ten pieces each, amounting to arms for 1800 men, and forty cases of conical balls, each containing 1000 bullets, were shipped to Georgia on Monday from Hartford. This shipment is only the first of a large order given by the State of Georgia.

TENNESSEE.

AN ANCIENT BRICKFIELD.—Bricks of a bright red color, longer and wider than those in present use and bearing evidences of having been carefully pressed and burnt, were discovered in an ancient brickkiln at Memphis recently exhumed by some workmen. These relics of an ancient race have been buried for untold years; the earth around showing no signs of ever having been disturbed.

TENNESSEE COTTON CROP.—The total number of bales of cotton raised in Tennessee for the year ending August 31, 1860, was 108,876, valued at $5,133,809. For the year previous it was only 86,821, valued at $1,268,050.

SHORTEST ROUTE FROM NEW ORLEANS TO NASHVILLE.—The Nashville papers announce the completion of the "Central Southern Railroad," from that city to Decatur. Through trains were to commence running Wednesday last. The Nashville Union says Dr. [illegible] visited

VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA.—The Old Dominion seems to have taken a fresh start. The census reports will exhibit an increase in the population of between 250,000 and 300,000. The cities have not increased very rapidly, but throughout the State we notice evidences of advancement in wealth and prosperity. The pleasant town of Hampton, beautifully located near Old Point Comfort, contained in 1850 about 1,350 inhabitants; the present census shows an increase of nearly 1,000, and we are informed there are about 2,000 including the surroundings or suburbs, making a total increase of about 700 in ten years. Few small towns in the Eastern States can boast of greater prosperity than the town of Hampton.

A FORMIDABLE FORTRESS.—Fort Monroe, at Old Point Comfort, Va., is said to be one of the most formidable fortresses in the country. The number of guns mounted is 285, which throw 12,117 lbs. of iron. There are, besides these, ten mortars and five siege howitzers. The new fort commonly known as the Rip Raps, will, when perfectly completed, have 180 eight-inch Columbiads, and 31 forty-two guns, all casemated; and eight ten-inch Columbiads, and forty-six nine-inch ditto, all in barbette.

There is a movement on foot to bring the remains of the gallant Henry Lee, one of Washington's most trusted officers, to Richmond and erect a monument over them.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

MARL.—South Carolina planters are hunting up beds of marl, as a fertilizer; one gentleman who paid a dollar an acre for land two years ago, has refused twenty dollars an acre for the whole plantation, as renovated by this ingredient.

A RETIRED CAROLINIAN.—On yesterday, a gentleman who had married a Northern lady, and had removed to New Jersey, passed through this place on his way to Pendleton. He has been living several years North, but the political excitement has brought him back to his native State.—South Carolinian.

BANK SUSPENSIONS IN CHARLESTON.—The State Banks of South Carolina; the Bank of the State of South Carolina and the Railroad Bank all suspended specie payments on the 28th ult. On the following day the remaining four banks of Charleston suspended.

CARGO OF "SECESSION HAY."—The Charleston Courier says: The schooner W. W. Starr, from Pon Pon, brought here on Friday 100 bales of rice straw, an excellent substitute for Northern hay. We hope our rice planters generally will use and apply their rice straw—and that all who need provender will give a trial to this "secession hay."

Rev. Dist. of South Carolina, is one of the pillars of the Methodist Episcopal Church in his state, immensely wealthy, and cares for nothing but the welfare of his people.

Hon. James L. Orr, who has been looked on as the leader of the Union men in South Carolina, has made a speech in favor of the immediate and unconditional secession of South Carolina.

NORTH CAROLINA.

GREAT YIELD OF CORN.—Mr. E. D. Hull, of Holly Shelter, New Hanover county, N. C., recently gathered from a single acre one hundred and twenty-two bushels and three pecks of corn.

OFFICIAL VOTE.—The official returns from North Carolina give 48,539 votes to Breckinridge, 44,990 to Bell, and 2701 to Douglas. Breckinridge, over Bell, 3549; over Bell and Douglas, 841.

Sheriff Martin, of Weed county, absconded with $12,000 of the revenues.

MARYLAND.

The Palmetto flag has been hoisted in Baltimore and thousands of Minute men of Maryland pledge themselves to defend it.

FLORIDA.

WILD COTTON IN FLORIDA.—A correspondent writes to the Charleston Mercury as follows: "I send you herewith a small sample of wild cotton, or cotton indigenous to south Florida. It is found growing wild in various places along our bay coast, usually on shell or limestone land. I have now a specimen of this kind of cotton in my garden, where it has been growing for the last five years, winter and summer. It has this peculiarity; the cotton adheres to the seed, and the boll seldom ever has more than three peds to the boll. I have never seen a caterpillar or red bug upon it. Both of these insects are usually regarded by the planters of this region as very destructive. Perhaps if some of the scientific planters of your State would give the wild cotton a trial, it might be made to yield, in a few years, a cotton plant peculiar to the Carolina.

TEXAS.

CROPS.—The Galveston Civilian learns that the second picking of the cotton fields is turning out much better than the first. The sugar crop also promises a much larger yield than was expected.

THE CRISIS.—Gov. Houston, of Texas, declines to call the Legislature of his State together. It is thought that the people will refuse to be overruled by their Governor. Senator Wigfall will resume his seat in the Senate, until the Texas Convention meets. In all parts of Texan political feeling is very warm. A strong disposition out to be behind any State in taking action in the present crisis is manifested, but we find indications in several of our exchanges that if secession be finally determined on, it is for the purpose of establishing an independent republic, not to join a Southern confederation, if such a thing should ever be effected.

The Indianola Courier says that Mr. Benton Johnson, died at Corpus Christi, on the 17th ult. He was an old "Texian," and fought in the battle of San Jacinto.

The Wisconsin State Journal publishes a supplement of fourteen large newspaper pages of the type, being a list of the lands forfeited in that State for non-payment of taxes.

CALIFORNIA AND OREGON.

A company has been formed for the purpose of pearl fishing in the Gulf of California. At the lower end of the bay pearls of great value are found in the shallow beds. It was here that the pearls were found at the close of the last century, which formed a necklace for the Queen of Spain, and were so much admired at all the European Courts.

WEALTH ON THE RAMPAGE.—The property of Siskiyou county, bordering Oregon, is worth $6,227,475, belonging to a population of 7,010—1,270 of whom are females.

CALIFORNIA EXPORTING WHEAT.—Our late San Francisco papers state that the ship David Brown was loading there with wheat for Liverpool. What a change this indicates. Ten years ago California imported nearly all her breadstuffs now, she is competing with New York and Ohio in exporting wheat to England, though it requires from 90 to 120 days to haul a cargo in Liverpool shipped at San Francisco.

DISCOVERY OF A RICH COPPER MINE.—The editor of the San Francisco Alta California of the 21th September, has seen a specimen of copper ore, containing 90 per cent. of pure copper, from a mine in Klamath county, about 40 miles inland from Crescent City. There is a boulder of equal richness at the mine, and the vine extends to an unknown depth. The Alta believes it to be the richest copper mine in the world.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ILLINOIS.—The census returns from Illinois, already received at Washington, indicate the total population of that State to be 1,600,000 in 1860. On the basis of one Congressman to every 120,000 inhabitants, it will now be entitled to thirteen members of Congress, instead of nine.

WESTERN CITIES.—The population of Chicago is 109,420—In 1850 it was 29,963—gain in ten years—79,457. In the decade Milwaukee has grown from 20,061 to 45,000, gain 25,000; Detroit from 21,019 to 46,831, gain 25,815; Cleveland from 17,034 to 43,550, gain 26,516.

LINCOLN STATES.—The following table of majorities has been prepared. The official returns have not yet been received, and these figures are only approximates, which, however, are considered within a few hundred of the actual result: Connecticut 10,000; Illinois 15,000; Indiana 25,000; Iowa 10,000; Maine 20,000; Massachusetts 60,000; Michigan 20,000; Minnesota 10,000; New Hampshire 9,000; New York 45,000; Ohio 35,000; Pennsylvania 50,000; Rhode Island 1,500; Vermont 20,000; Wisconsin 10,000. Total electoral vote for Lincoln, 168.

DAMAGE TO THE JACKSON RAILROAD.—The injury to the Jackson railroad by the late rain storm has been found more extensive than was at first supposed. Immense washes have been made in the embankments between Dayka and Magnolia, and on this side of Summit, Miss. In many places the earth has been washed away for the distance of several hundred yards, leaving wide gulfs through which the waters flow like broad swollen currents. We regret to learn that an accident, resulting in the death of three persons, occurred below Magnolia, on Tuesday. Our information is, that a down freight train was precipitated into one of the washes, and the boiler of the engine exploded, causing the death of the conductor, engineer and wood passer, and injuring a fireman.

POPULATION OF THE NORTHWEST.—The census returns are now so nearly completed that we can approximate closely to the population of the Northwest. It will stand about as follows:—Ohio, 1,500,000; Indiana 1,000,000; Illinois 1,630,600; Wisconsin 800,000; Michigan 750,000; Iowa 700,000; Minnesota, 180,000. Total, eight million and thirty thousand. More than one-quarter of the population of the United States is now in the Northwest. Its population is nearly equal to New York, Pennsylvania, and New England combined! "Westward the star of empire takes its way." Vermont, on the other hand, is receding in population.

LINCOLN IN THE SLAVE STATES.—The vote of Lincoln in the slaveholding States thus far reported is as follows:—Missouri (estimated), 17,000; Delaware 3,751; Maryland, 2,193; Virginia 1,500; Kentucky 2,150. Total, 26,557.

ONE OF THE EFFECTS OF NORTHERN FANATICISM.—Already there is a good deal of destitution among mechanics and laborers throughout the North, growing out of the panic and interruption of business consequent upon the election of Lincoln.—One clothing establishment in New York has discharged 2000; a hat establishment has discharged nearly 1000, a saddlery firm has reduced its force about 500; and curtailing is very general. At Newark, New Jersey, especially, the crisis is severely felt, on account of their extensive connections with the Southern trade. In one city as many as three thousand were discharged from the shops of Newark, New Haven, Bridgeport and neighboring cities. The Journal of Commerce thinks it would proximately be no exaggeration to estimate the number of persons thrown out of employment since election day at 25,000. The first to be turned out of employment are the young women.—It is estimated that of the twenty-five thousand persons who have been discharged from labor in New York since the election, fifteen thousand have been females. The benevolent societies of that city will have to tax their energies to the utmost this winter, lest some form of starvation and misery the thousands who will be deprived of the means of subsistence in consequence of the election of Lincoln.

THE SOUTH AND HER COTTON.—The New World, in its money article of the 6th, has the following: The South has curtailed her liabilities this fall to so great an extent that a few months hence will rapidly place her in a position of great financial ease and strength. The cotton crop will, probably, now much exceed by 2,000,000 bales, and the knowledge of this fact stimulate sales in Liverpool and advanced prices. The consumption of cotton in Liverpool is increasing in a greater ratio than heretofore, and many manufacturers in Manchester, England, have more orders on hand than they can execute for the next three months. There is every reason to believe that the Southern crops of cotton, sugar, and tobacco will realize more in cash value than the very large amount of last year. This, with the diminished purchases made by Southern buyers from the North, will soon enable them to get rid of the effects of their previous over-trading.

QUITE A CHANGE.—A Portland, Maine, correspondent notes the fact that it was on the 15th of October, 1775, that a British fleet entered Portland Harbor, set fire to the town and reduced it to ashes. On the same day, eighty-five years later, another British fleet enters the harbor to receive their prince, who has been enjoying the hospitalities and honors of the Republic.

THE MANUFACTURES OF LOWELL.—In Lowell Mass., there are fifty-two mills with a total capital stock of $13,400,000; total number of spindles 400,300; of looms 12,430, of females employed 8,771, of males employed 5,250.

STAMPEDE FROM CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY.—Seventeen Southern law students have left the Cambridge Peak gold coined at the private mint in Denver city from August 14th to October 14th, was $92,410; the average fineness of the gold dust is 832-1000 fine, making the average value of the bullion, after melting into bars $17.20 per ounce. The average per cent. of silver, by weight, in the Pike's Peak gold dust is sixteen and a half.

MINNESOTA.—Some statistics appearing in a recent number of the Winona Democrat exhibit the fact that in 1859 there were produced in this state nearly three times as much wheat per acre as in Ohio, and nearly five times as much as in Iowa. She produced more than one fourth the whole quantity produced in Ohio, and fifty per cent more than was produced in Iowa in the same year. Also that there was thirty times as much land in cultivation in Minnesota in 1859 as in 1854.

CENSUS OF INDIANA.—The present census of Indiana shows the State to have a population of 1,347,000. In 1850 the population of the State was 999,258.

A horrible accident occurred on Thursday of last week, at Port Griffith, between Pittson and Wilkesbarre, at the Pennsylvania Coal Company's works. A car containing 12 miners, started for the mine, down a slope of 1,600 feet; when about half way, the rope broke, and the car was precipitated to the bottom. Eight men were instantly killed.

NEW ENGLAND MANUFACTORIES.—The Boston Traveller, of the 22d, says: The Providence Journal says that owing to the stagnation in the market, Messrs. A. & W. Sprague have stopped their print works. We understand that some of the other printers have for several weeks reduced their production. The market for prints has been dull for some time, and in the panic in the New York money market sales are naturally very limited.

THE SLAVE TRADE.—Accounts from Africa state that the slave trade was very active on the windward coast. The American ship Lauretta is reported to have left Whydah on the 28th of September with 600 slaves; and the American bark Buckeye, a few days previously with a cargo of slaves.

POTATOES.—In Davenport, Iowa, potatoes are so plenty that there is not shipping enough on the Mississippi to carry them away. The price is from ten to fifteen cents per bushel.

CONSUL JOHNSON.—The American Consul for Syria recently died on his way to Constantinople. He was a man of great energy, and well adapted to the high and responsible station he occupied. As a Christian, and in his official character, he has been very useful in Syria.

The shipping on the great lakes is rapidly increasing.—There are now 350 steamers, valued at $9,500,000, and 1169 sailing vessels, valued at $13,000,000 employed in freighting.

Charles Carroll Carroll, of Columbus, Ohio; Frank Maney, of Nashville, Tennessee; Henry N. Spencer, Jr., of Pennsylvania; and Alfred Van Benthuysen, of Louisiana, are among the Americans serving under Garibaldi in Italy.

The New York World is now printed upon a new Hoe tencylinder press, made expressly for the World, which claims to be the largest, most highly-finished and most rapidly-working press which has yet been made. It can work 20,000 sheets in a single hour! Its cost was $40,000.

There was $405,000,000 of capital represented at the late Railroad Time-Table Convention in Cincinnati.

A School of Architecture has been established in the Polytechnic College, Philadelphia.

The yield of the Iowa mines this season has been equal to $800,000.

Mrs. Washington, the wife of John A. Washington, Esq., late of Mount Vernon, died a few days since.

A large and very fierce black bear, weighing 225 pounds, was killed near Toria, New York, last week.

The ginseng excitement in Minnesota is equal to that of last year. Twenty-five tons of the root have been exported from the State this fall.

In the United States there are nearly six times as many doctorals as in Great Britain.

Wool-growing is gradually, but surely, increasing in California.

Small pox is said to prevail to an alarming extent in New Jersey.

Several beds of pottery and fire brick clay have recently been discovered near Red Bank, New Jersey.

The Oskaloosa Herald says there are some 9,000 Friends, or Quakers, in Iowa.

A Republican daily paper is soon to be started at Washington, and to be called the Republican Era.

Trask's Journal states that the clergy of the United States cost annually $4,000,000; criminals, $19,000,000; lawyers, $35,000,000; tobacco, $10,000,000; Rum, $100,000,000. Rum one hundred million of dollars every year! This, says an exchange, is a queer classification, but it speaks volumes.

The Jews in Philadelphia are about erecting a magnificent building for a Hebrew Orphan Asylum, at an expense of from $75,000 to $100,000. The lot has been secured, and the work will be commenced forthwith.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

The fourth and last part of Wordsworth's Greek Testament has been published in London. It contains the General Epistles and the Book of Revelation, and indexes to the whole work.

Messrs. James Munroe & Co. have in press Dr. Noyes's Translation of the Hebrew Prophets, which has for some time been out of print. It is to be published in two volumes.

Childs & Peterson will soon issue a volume entitled "A Critical History of the Doctrine of a Future Life. With a complete Bibliography of the Subject." By Rev. William Rounseville Alger.

A POEM BY JOHN BUNYAN.—A reprint is announced of a hitherto almost unknown poem, written by Bunyan for the support of his wife and family while he was confined in Bedford jail.

Lieut. Maury is soon to visit England to arrange for the publication there of an important work on which he has long been engaged, The Meteorology of the Ocean.

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

PRINCE OF WALES.—The foreign news by the Palestine reports that the Prince of Wales and his brother, Prince Alfred, have both arrived at home, much to the joy, no doubt, of the royal family and of the English people.

THE ENGLISH VOLUNTEERS.—A London letter, referring to the volunteer force which has sprung up with such astounding rapidity in England says: There is now an imposing army of volunteers, their numbers being estimated a little below 200,000 men. A year has also done wonders in drilling and rifle practice. Most corps are thoroughly up in all field manœuvres, and the recent prize contest at Wimbledon and other places have shown that there are many excellent shots. Almost every public hall now has its shooting ground and target, and the prizes given by contribution prove a vigorous incentive to rifle practice.

DEATH OF A DISTINGUISHED ANTIQUARIAN.—The London papers record the death at Sir Charles Fellows, who brought the Xanthian marbles, discovered by him in Syria, to the British Museum. He was also author of "A Journal in Asia Minor," "Discoveries in Asia," &c.

It is said that, during the twenty-three years Queen Victoria has been on the British throne, she has never been confined to her room from sickness for a single day, excepting upon the occasions when she has added to the number of the Guelph olive branches.

Late statistics show that five million persons are supported in England by cotton; that thirty million spindles are employed in the production of the yarn, and that the capital absorbed exceeds $505,000,000.

In London, at the Mayor's banquet, Count de Persigny spoke for a diplomatique corps in a friendly and cordial speech.

A Cotton Company is forming at Manchester, with a capital of £60,000.

FRANCE.

NEWSPAPERS IN PARIS.—Paris possesses at present five hundred and three newspapers; forty-two of these, as treating of politics and national economy, have to deposit a security in the hands of the Government; four hundred and sixty are devoted to art, science, literature, industry, commerce, and agriculture. The most ancient of the latter is the Journal des Savans, and dates from the year 1665.

THE FRENCH VINTAGE.—Accounts from the south of France state that the vintage is abundant, but that a large portion of the wine is of inferior quality, and will be used for distillation, so that there will be more brandy made this year than last.

A French machinist, named Babil, has just invented a movable fortress, which is said to be a terrible machine, propelled by steam. It is mounted on wheels, and may at some future day be expedited into an enemy's camp to deal out the destroying missiles by which it is well supplied.

The municipal government of Paris is making a series of experiments with electric light, fixing a powerful reflector in all the different quarters of the capital by turns. This means of illumination presents great advantages over gas lamps; but, while the electric projects its rays to a great distance, it possesses the drawback of a brilliancy entirely too dazzling for the purpose to which it is sought to apply it.

It is stated that the French army now in Italy kill horses unfit for further service by injecting air into an open vein, which produces instantaneous and painless death.

SPAIN.

THE CARLIST CHIEFS.—We recently noticed a report that the principal Carlist chiefs were disposed to recognize Queen Isabella. The Espana says the report is confirmed, and that the secretaries of General Cabrera and M. Arbiz Tegelen were lately in Madrid making the necessary arrangements for the submission of those two personages.

ITALY.

THE ITALIAN NAVY.—A letter from Turin says that the indefatigable Count Cavour is consecrating his thoughts to the Italian navy, turning his best efforts to utilize these Neapolitan men of war which Admiral Persano towed into Genoa almost without a man on board. The strongest appeal is made to the patriotism of Genoese merchant sailors, and the deserted fleet is being rapidly manned.

RETIREMENT OF GARIBALDI.—A Naples despatch of the 9th announces that Garibaldi left Naples that morning for his home on the island of Caprera. The last visit that he paid was to the English Admiral Mundy. A national subscription has been opened in Sicily to purchase a villa in the neighborhood of Palermo as a gift to General Garibaldi.

A LETTER WORTH MORE THAN A BATTLE.—The Italian papers say Lord John Russell's letter to the British Minister to Sardinia is of more value to them than a decisive battle. In this letter the Secretary recognized the Doctrine of popular sovereignty to the fullest extent.

CHINA.

REPORTED PEACE WITH CHINA.—The Paris Patrie, brought by the Africa, has the following important news, if true: Latest advices from China announce that the Chinese Commissioners Extraordinary, appointed to carry on negotiations for a treaty of peace with the Ambassadors of France and England, arrived at Tientsin on the 7th of September. We are assured by the last accounts that the treaty has been signed in that town, and that the exchange of ratifications would take place in Pekin, according to a special ceremonial, which was to be the object of a separate negotiation and convention. Letters state that the marines in China would return to England on the first of October.

MISCELLANEOUS.

A PROTESTANT PROFESSOR APPOINTED TO A PAPAL UNIVERSITY.—The Leeds (England) Mercury publishes the following as a reliable communication recently received from Italy:—Our beloved King, Victor Emanuel, has offered to Mazzarelli, a distinguished Protestant preacher of Genoa, the Chair of Philosophy at the University of Bologna, and I believe that he has already accepted it. Hereby the King offers a reward to Mazzarelli's literary merits, and believes that the object of the book has been understood and appreciated. The Government draws the sword for conflict against the hierarchy by intrusting Mazzarella with the instruction of youth at the first University of Italy. Praised be God, who prepares great things for poor Italy.

MOHAMMEDAN PLOT IN BARBARY.—A letter from Tunis contains an account of a plot in Barbary, by the Mohammedans, to massacre the Jews and Christians. It was set on foot by a Cherseef (Descendant of the Prophet), who landed on the coast with a party of followers. He was one of the ring-leaders at Damascus, and when driven from there went to Tunis. The Bey gave orders that, that dead or alive, he must have that Cherseef. He was alive when he arrived at Tunis, but not long afterwards.

RETURN OF THE IRISH BRIGADE.—The Irish Brigade, which was in the service of the Papal Government, arrived home on the 3d. They came through France, and sailed from Havre to Cork. They were honored with a brilliant reception at Rome.

EAST INDIA TELEGRAPH.—The magnificent telegraph cable, destined to connect Rangoon in British India with the British settlement of Singapore, was about being shipped from England. It is thirteen hundred miles in length.

HONDURAS.—Dr. Charles H. Vanpatten, bearer of dispatches to the Government at Washington, containing the official report of the trial and execution of Walker, arrived at New York on the 22d. He reports that Col. Rudler arrived at Comoyagua on the 4th of October; he was in bad health at the time of his arrival, but soon began to improve. He did not complain of the treatment he received, and was not closely confined, being allowed to walk about in the jail yard. The shooting of Gen. Walker appeared to be unpopular; it had not been ordered by the President, and, according to the law of Honduras, there is no death penalty for any crime whatever. A number of California miners had arrived in the country, and were preparing to work the gold and silver mines.

SCARCITY OF FOOD IN IRELAND.—Letters from the North of Ireland state that there will be a great scarcity of food for the people. Potatoes are scarce, and the price is rising daily, while oats, which rank next to potatoes as an article of food, sells for four dollars and a half per barrel.

AN IRON PALACE.—The pasha of Egypt is establishing a magnificent palace, built of French cast iron, for a museum of antiquities, to be filled with relics of antiquity found in Egypt, in the execution of which 2,500 men are now employed under the direction of Mariette, the French archæologist.

HOMŒOPATHIC.—A German journal states that the number of homœopathic physicians now practising is 3254, of whom 1612 are in America. There are five homœopathic colleges in Germany, viz.—two at Prague, two at Munich, and one at Vienna; one in London and one in the United States.

EXTRAORDINARY PEDESTRIANISM.—Capt. Cochran, who set out from St. Petersburg in May, 1860, to walk through the interior of Russia to the east of Asia, with a view of ascertaining the fact of a north-east cape, traveled at the rate of 43 miles a-day for 123 consecutive days. He afterwards walked upwards of 400 miles without meeting a human being.

Another German traveler has become the victim of his scientific zeal in the wilderness of Africa. Dr. Roscher has been killed by the natives of Hisoguing, a village in the neighborhood of Useva and the river Ruvuma. The murderers have been executed at Zanzibar, but the books and drawings of the doctor seem to have been destroyed.

Letters from Melbourne, dated August the 5th, say the trade is growing worse.

Gen. Todtleben is at Sebastopol, the fortifications of which, on the north side, are undergoing repairs.

A bronze statue of the late Sir John Franklin is about to be erected at Spilsby, and the town's people are anxious to pay a tribute of respect to his memory.

Kossuth is

Children's Column.

INTO THE SUNSHINE.

"I wish father would come home."

The voice that said this had a troubled tone, and the face that looked up was sad.

"Your father will be very angry," said an aunt, who was sitting in the room with a book in her hand. The boy raised himself from the sofa, where he had been lying in tears for half an hour, and with a touch of indignation in his voice, answered:

"He will be sorry, not angry. Father never gets angry."

For a few moments the aunt looked at the boy half-coldly, and let her eyes fall again upon the book that was in her hand. The boy laid himself down on the sofa again, and hid his face from sight.

"That's the same now!" As she started up, after the lapse of [illegible] minutes, the sound of a bell reached his ear. He went to the room door. He stood there a little while, and then came slowly back, saying with a disappointed air:

"It isn't father. I wonder what keeps him so late. Oh, I wish he would come!"

"You seem anxious to get deeper into trouble," remarked the aunt, who had only been in the house for a week, and who was neither very amiable, nor very sympathising toward children. The boy's fault provoked her, and she considered him a fit subject for punishment.

"I believe, aunt Phebe, that you'd like to see me whipped," said the boy a little warmly. "But you won't."

"I must confess," replied aunt Phebe, "that a little wholesome discipline, of the kind you speak of, would not be out of place. If you were my child, I am sure you wouldn't escape."

"I'm not your child; I don't want to be. Father's good and loves me."

"If your father is so good, and loves you so well, you must be a very ungrateful, or a very inconsiderate boy. His goodness don't seem to have helped you much."

"Hush, will you!" ejaculated the boy, excited to anger by the unkindness of speech.

"Phebe!" It was the boy's mother who spoke now, for the first time. In an undertone, she added, "You are wrong. Richard is suffering quite enough, and you are doing him harm rather than good."

Again the door bell rang, and again the boy left the sofa, and went to the sitting-room door.

"It's father!" and he went gliding down stairs.

"Ah, Richard!" was the kindly greeting, as Mr. Gordon took the hand of his boy. "But what's the matter, my son? You don't look happy."

"Won't you come in here?" And Richard drew his father into the library. Mr. Gordon sat down still holding Richard's hand.

"You are in trouble, my son. What has happened?"

The eyes of Richard filled with tears as he looked up into his father's face. He tried to answer, but his lips quivered. Then he turned away and opening the door of a cabinet, brought out the fragments of a broken statuette, which had been sent home only the day before, and set them on a table before his father, over whose countenance came instantly a shadow of regret.

"Who did this, my son?" was asked in an even voice.

"I did it."

"How?"

"I threw my ball in there, once—only once, in forgetfulness."

The poor boy's tones were husky and tremulous.

A little while Mr. Gordon sat, controlling himself, and collecting his disturbed thoughts. Then he said, cheerfully—

"What is done, Richard, can't be helped. Put the broken pieces away. You have had trouble enough about it, I can see—and reproof enough for your thoughtlessness—so I shall not add a word to increase your pain."

"Oh, father!" and the boy threw his arms about his father's neck, "you are so kind, so good!"

Five minutes later, and Richard entered the sitting-room with his father. Aunt Phebe looked up for two shadowed faces, but did not see them. She was puzzled.

"That was very unfortunate," she said, a little while after Mr. Gordon came in. "It was such an exquisite work of art. It is hopelessly ruined."

Richard was leaning against his father when his aunt said this. Mr. Gordon only smiled, and drew his arm closely around his boy. Mrs. Gordon threw upon her sister a look of warning, but it was unheeded.

"I think Richard was a very naughty boy."

"We have settled all that, Phebe," was the mild but firm answer of Mr. Gordon; "and it is one of our rules to get into sunshine as quickly as possible."

Phebe was rebuked, while Richard looked grateful, and it may be, a little triumphant; for his aunt had borne down upon him rather too hard for a boy's patience to endure.

"Sunshine as quickly as possible! Oh is not Christian [illegible] for our homes? Is it not true and repels, because a fault had been [illegible] angry get the offender into the sunshine as quickly as possible, so that true thought and right feelings may grow vigorous in its warmth. We retain anger, not that anger may act as a wholesome discipline, but because we are unwilling to forgive. Ah! if we were always right with ourselves, we would oftener be right with our children.—N. Y. Principia.

AN IMPRESSIVE NARRATIVE.

A few years ago I was travelling in South America. As I approached the base of a mountain which lay in my route, I found it covered with what I supposed to be an undergrowth of weeds. But I pressed my way onward, and climbed up its sides till I reached the summit. When I had gained the top I gazed around me with delight, and happened to look back upon the winding path in which I had ascended, and lo! my whole path was clearly marked out, to the very foot of the mountain. I found it was caused by my having walked through a growth of the sensitive plant, as it is familiarly known to us, which grows indigenous there. It had left all my way plain before me, so that I could trace my footsteps in all their curves and deviations, as I had struggled up the sides of that beautiful mountain.

A few months after that, as I was reposing in my tent in California, at 12 o'clock at night, a man came to the door of an adjoining tent and called out:

"Are there any Christians here, gentlemen?"

One man sprang from his bed.

"I love my Saviour," said he.

"Come with me, then," said the stranger. "There's a man dying out here just beyond the walls of Captain ——'s fort, and he says he wants to talk with a Christian."

They ran out together, although the rain poured down in torrents, until they came to where the dying man lay. He was stretched on a couch, I was going to say, but I hardly know what to call it, for it was made up of broken branches. On these he lay while a few bed-spreads were thrown over him. He was dying. Let me hear his testimony:

He said to my Christian friends who gathered around him:

"I have now reached a point at which the whole scene of my life seems to lie visibly before me. Every action that I have committed, every sin, every crime that I have perpetrated before God, seems to stare me right in the face. I can see my way clear back to my youth; and, as I look, the scenes of iniquity and guilt in which I have engaged pass one another before me in terrible review."

They sang with him and prayed with him, and endeavored to console him, and point him to Jesus; but, said he:

"It's all over now—all over! I have rejected Christ, and there is no salvation for me."

He ceased speaking. They sang and prayed with him again; and, whilst thus engaged, he closed his eyes in death. His immortal spirit passed into the presence of the God whom he acknowledged to have sinned against and rejected all his life.

Unconverted friend, you will reach that point by-and-by when every scene of your life, like the life of this dying man, or like my path up the mountain, will pass in terrible review before you. Then your anguish and your agony will be terrible to witness, when you reflect that you have rejected Jesus Christ, and that he is about to leave you perish in your sins!

A RAILWAY TRAIN SAVED SUPERNATURALLY.

The Xenia (Ohio) News is publishing a series of reminiscences by an engineer. In No. 24 of his series, the writer gives the following rather startling incident: I was running a night train, and had ten cars—eight passenger and two baggage cars, and all were well loaded. I was behind time, and was very anxious to make a certain point; therefore I was using every exertion, and putting the engine to the utmost speed of which she was capable. I was on a section of the road usually considered the best running ground on the line, and was endeavoring to make the most of it, when a conviction struck me that I must stop. A something seemed to tell me that to go ahead was dangerous, and that I must stop if I would save life. I looked at my train, and it was all right. I strained my eyes and could see no signal of danger nor anything betokening danger, and there I could see five miles in the daytime. I listened to the working of my engine, tried the water, looked at the scales, and all was right. I tried to laugh myself out of what I then considered to be childish fear; but, like a Banquo's ghost, it would down on my bidding, but grew stronger in its hold upon me. I thought of the ridicule I would have heaped upon me, if I did stop; but it was all of no avail.

The conviction—for by the time it had ripened into a conviction—that I must stop, grew stronger and I resolved to stop; and I shut off, and blew the whistle for brakes accordingly. I came to a dead halt, got off, and went ahead a little way, without saying any thing to any body what was the matter. I had my lamp in my hand and had gone about sixty feet, when I saw what convinced me that premonitions are sometimes possible. I dropped the lantern from my nerveless grasp, and sat down on the track, utterly unable to stand; for there was a switch, the thought of which had never entered my mind, as it had never been used since I had been on the road, and as known to be spiked, but which was now open to lead me off the track. The switch led me into a stone quarry, from whence stone for bridge purposes had been quarried, and the switch was left there, in case stone should be needed at any time; but it was always kept locked, and the switch rail spiked. Yet here it was wide open, and had I not obeyed my premonition—warning—call it what you will—I should have run into it, and, at the end of the track, only about ten rods off, my heavy engine and train, moving at the rate of forty-five miles per hour, would have come into collision with a solid wall of rock eighteen feet high. The consequences, had I done so, can neither be imagined nor described; but they could, by no possibility, have been otherwise than fatally horrid. This is my experience in getting warnings from a source that I know not and cannot divine. It is a mystery to me—a mercy for which I am very thankful, however, although I dare not attempt to explain it, nor say whence it came.

"THERE IS NO PLACE LIKE HOME."

BY LUTHA FONTELLE.

Come home!

Come home! The shadows gather round our hearth
And yearning hearts are waiting there for thee,
Long years have vanished since thy tones of mirth
Breathed into our souls thy soul's minstrelsy!
Come home! It is not quite home without thee.

Come home! Dost thou recall the unbidden tears
Shed o'er that first and lingering farewell?
Think not they've ceased to flow though lapsing years
Their tale of mournful changes sadly tell.
Come home! for still our hearts infold thee well.

Come home! Thy cheek has paled since last we met,
And illness worn thy form with wasting pain;
A shade is on thy brow where beauty set
Her seal of light to lighten ours again.
Come home! Once more thy brow of light regain.

I come!

I came! Brother, I hear thy thrilling call;
I read the memories that gave it birth;
My spirit, en rapport, awilt echoes all,
As in the winged hours of our childhood's mirth.
I come! No place as dear to me on earth.

Months, years have flown, since parting, thy sad eye
Revealed what else I never might have known,
Thy love how tender, and how strong the tie
That thought congeal round our lives had thrown.
I come! My heart has caught thy heart's deep tone.

I have been roaming through our father-land;
Its grey old castles and its storied tombs
Have spoken thrilling tales in accents bland,
And from the sea of time the past upcomes.
To thee I turn from all its gorgeous rooms.

The proud French nobles, gay Parisian dames,
Have welcomed me to their ancestral halls,
And minds, god-like, forever to be fame's.
Now on my ear home's linked-heart's music falls;
There is no power to charm like warm home-calls.

A shade upon my brow? Would I had power
To cast a rich sunlight o'er all thy way,
And hers, the graceful bud, now radiant flower,
And his from whose soul's fire mine caught the ray.
I come! and all heaven's blessings come with me, I pray.

THE TWO GOLD DOLLARS.

"O mother, grandpa has given me two little gold dollars, to spend just as I please!" exclaimed a bright, rosy-faced boy, as he came hastening into the room where his mother sat reading.

"Has he? Well bow are you going to spend them, Joey?" and sweet lips smiled upon him, and a soft hand passed caressingly over his head.

"I am going to buy a Christmas present for cousin Louey; but I don't know what to get. Say, what shall I get, mother?" Inquired the boy, lifting his sparkling eyes eagerly to the face which was bent lovingly upon him.

"Just what you please, my son."

"But, mother, there are so many things, I really dont know what to get. Say, can't you tell me, mother?"

"I guess not, Joey. I think you would know better than I; exercise your own taste, and you will be sure and make a good selection. But it is getting late, and you had better go now and make your purchase."

"Where shall I go, mother—to Victor's?"

"Yes, my dear; I believe Victor keeps a good assortment of Christmas toys." And the little boy hastened out with a light heart.

"O dear! O dear! what shall I do?" groaned a bare-footed, tinly-clad little girl, with tears streaming like rain down her pale cheeks.

"Why, what is the matter?" inquired a soft, gentle voice beside her.

The little girl looked up through her tears, and seeing pitying eyes bent upon her, she replied through choking sobs, pointing to the gutter: "See there! the beautiful white bread which I just bought is all spoiled with the dirty black water!"

"But how did you drop it there?"

"I didn't drop it. A bad boy came along and knocked what shall I do? [illegible] laughed he did. O, dear! have to go without their suppers. O dear!" And she flowed afresh.

"But can't you buy some more bread?"

"No, I can't get any more, because that was all the money my grandma had got; and we'll have nothing to eat to morrow, neither."

"There, don't cry;" and the two gold dollars were slipped into the little red hands. There is money enough to buy you more bread, and a pair of shoes, too, for your cold, bare feet." And little Joey did not stop to hear the joyful cry and grateful words which issued from the pale lips; but he turned hastily away and bent his steps homeward, with a happy heart, feeling that it was better to buy bread for the hungry to eat, than to buy toys for his little cousin.—Evangelist.

POOR JACK.

At a meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society, a speaker related the following:

A drunkard was one day staggering in drink on the brink of the sea. His little son by him, three years of age, being very hungry, solicited him for something to eat. The miserable father, conscious of his poverty, and the criminal cause of it, in a kind of rage occasioned by his intemperance and despair, hurled the little child into the sea, and made off with himself. The poor little sufferer, finding a floating plank by his side on the water, clung to it. A British man-of-war passing by, discovered the plank and child; a sailor, at the risk of his own life, plunged into the sea, and brought him on board. He could inform them little more than his name was Jack. They gave him the name of Poor Jack. He grew up on board the man-of-war, behaved well, and gained the love of the officers and men. He became an officer of the sick and wounded department. During an action of the late war, an aged man came under his care in a dying state. He was all attention to the dying stranger, but could not save his life.

The aged stranger was dying, and thus addressed this kind young officer: "For the great attention you have shown me, I give you this only treasure that I am possessor of," (presenting him with a Bible bearing the stamp of the British and Foreign Bible Society.) "It was given me by a lady, and has been the means of my conversion; and has been a great comfort to me. Read it, and it will lead you in the way you should go." He went on to confess the wickedness and profligacy of his life before the reception of his Bible; and, among other enormities, how he once cast a little son, three years old, into the sea, because he cried to him for needful food.

The young officer inquired of him the time and place, and found here was his own history. Judge, if you can, of his feelings, to recognize in the dying old man his father, dying a penitent under his care! and judge of the feeling of the dying penitent, to find that the same young stranger was his son—the very son whom he had plunged into the sea and had no idea but that he immediately perished! A description of their mutual feelings will not be attempted. The man soon expired in the arms of his son. The latter left the service and became a pious preacher of the Gospel.

On closing this story, the minister in the meeting of the Bible Society, bowed to the chairman and said, "Sir, I am little Jack."

JAPANESE LITTLE FOLKS.

During more than a half-year's residence in Japan, I have never seen a quarrel among young or old. I have never seen a blow struck, scarcely an angry face. I have seen the children at their sports, flying kites on the hills, and no amount of interlaugled strings or kites lodged in the trees provoked angry words or impatience. I have seen them intent on their games of jack-stones and marbles under the shaded gate-ways of the temples, but have never seen an approach to a quarrel among them. They are taught implicit obedience to their parents, but I have never seen one of them chastised. Respect and reverence to the aged is universal. A crying child is a rarity seldom heard or seen. We have nothing to teach them, in this respect, out of our abundant civilization. I speak what I know of the little folks of Japan, for more than any other foreigner have I been among them.

Of all that Japan holds there is nothing I like half so well as the happy children. I shall always remember their slop black eyes and ruddy brown faces with pleasure. I have played battledore with the little maidens in the streets and flown kites in the fields with as happy a set of boys as one could wish to see. They have been my guides in my rambles—shown me where all the streams and the ponds were; where the flowers lay hid in the thicket, where the berries were ripening on the hills; they have brought me shells from the ocean, and blossoms from the field, presenting them with all the modesty and less bashful grace than a young American boy would do. We have hunted the lox-holes together and looked for the green and golden ducks among the hedge. They have laughed at my broken Japanese, and taught me better, and for a happy, good-natured set of children, I will turn out my little Japanese friends against the world. God bless the boys and girls of Nipbon!—Cox. Home Journal

TAR AND FEATHERS. Mr. James says the first mention of this singular punishment occurs in one of the regulations framed by Richard Cœur de Lion for the government of his troops, when about to enter the second crusade, that if any one should be discovered committing a robbery, he should be tarred and feathered.

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

ELIJAH WILSON died in Dallas county, Ala., Oct. 30th, 1860, in the 68th year of his natural life, in great peace with God and man. He was born in Green county, Ga., moved to Alabama, and settled near where he lived and died; professed religion some eight or nine years since, and after some hesitancy united with the M. E. Church, in which he filled the office of Steward with promptness and acceptability until death called him off. Father Wilson was a plain, unpretending man, made no parade or show, but pursued the even tenor of his way; regular at church, in the use of the appointed means of grace, "ever showing his faith by his works." In every relation of life his example was worthy of imitation. A devoted husband, an indulgent father, a forbearing master, a worthy citizen, and an obliging neighbor. As a farmer, he was industrious, thrifty and frugal, ready to make, save, and give. Eight or ten days before his death, his brain seemed to be affected by a peculiar disease, so as to deprive his family and friends of any communication with him. This was very mortifying; but, thank God, his peace was made in heaven; at a protracted meeting held at his church a few weeks before his death, he manifested more than usual of that zeal which is according to knowledge, and in every interview he gave the strongest evidence that all was well. He has left a wife and six children to mourn.

T. Moody.

MRS. MARY E. NABORS, wife of Rev. E. T. Nabors, and daughter of Capt. John and Sarah L. McNeor, of Malon, died Nov. 9, 1860, aged 26 years. The deceased was in early life deprived of her mother, but God careth for orphans, and in proof of it this little girl fell into the hands of Mrs. Greenberry Garrett, now of Summofield, Ala.; and as might be expected from such training, was converted to God while quite young. Her conversion meant something, for she joined the Church, and ever after, in all the relations of life, it was abundantly evident that she obtained that secret something which the world cannot give nor take away. She was naturally mild and amiable, and after receiving the flashing touch which piety gives to such a character, it is not to be wondered at that she was the pride of her friends and the object of general admiration. Sister Nabors was a working christian, and seemed to have the right views of life and its responsibilities; she strove to make herself useful, and especially in the department of Sabbath-school labors was she zealous and successful. Up to the time of her death she was actively engaged in this favorite employment. Her death was sudden, so much so that she had no opportunity of giving any dying testimony as to her readiness for her change; but there was that in her consistent walk and lovely life which speaks louder and clearer than dying words.

A. H. Mitchell.

MISS BESSIE HUTHNANCE died Oct. 14th, 1860, of typhoid fever, at Montgomery, Winn parish, La., aged 20 years. From a child she was the subject of religious impressions; she often talked of death, and seemed always to have a presentiment that she would die young. She joined the M. E. Church at Vienna, La., in 1857; since which time the lovely graces of matured piety have been increasingly displayed. From the nature of the disease she was scarcely conscious, but in the few lucid intervals she gave satisfactory evidence of her acceptance with God. She never omitted private prayer, although often among the thoughtless. She was strictly conscientious, and always careful so to conduct herself, that she might be no hindrance to others, or bring a reproach on the cross of Christ. During a respite of suffering, she wished to know why her mother had desired her stay on earth; "for," said she, "I wish to die and go to heaven—why do you wish me to stay in this dark world?" Long will she live in the hearts of those who knew her.

W. H. R.

MRS. SARAH AMANDA MAYFIELD was born in Wilkinson County, Mississippi, July 28th, 1826. She married Mr. James W. Mayfield in 1844. She joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1835 of which she continued a faithful and consistent member, until August the 10th, 1860, when she left this world in great peace, with strong hope of a blissful immortality and eternal life. I conversed with her frequently during her last illness; her faith was fixed on God, her sky was clear; she said to me a few days before her death, that some of her friends had tried to persuade her that her complaint was not consumption, but that she was satisfied that it was, and that it would do its work sooner or later. This was not at all alarming to her; yet she said the thought of lingering so long, caused her often to feel gloomy—the thought of leaving her two little helpless children was a heavy weight upon her mind. I exhorted her to put her trust in God and give all up into his hands, which she said she was trying to do. In a few days she was called away from her sufferings. I was with her a few minutes before she died; she was in her right mind and quite composed, and so left the world. She has left a husband and two little children to lament their irreparable loss.

Matthew D. Thomason.

Biloxi, Oct, 1860.

DR. ARTHUR P. MYERS, son of Major W. G. Myers, was born in Sumpter county, Ala., Feb. 16, 1836; moved to Morehouse parish, La., 1857; was united in marriage to Miss M. M. More in 1859; professed religion, and joined the M. E. Church, Oct. 1, 1860; was taken with typhoid fever the next week, and died in peace on the 24th of same month, leaving an infant son, wife, and a large circle of friends to deplore his loss. The deceased had entered upon his professional career with flattering prospects for the future; he was esteemed greatly by the community, who deeply sympathize with his bereaved widow and relatives.

J. H. Stone.

REBECCA BARROW, daughter of Dr. H. and Sarah A. Isbithut Sunday-school scholar, was born the 3d ult., of whose obedience to her parents. For two years she exhibited a beautiful christian character, praying to God night and morning, and was never known to tell a falsehood. Loved by all who knew her, she promised to be a bright ornament to society and a useful member of the Church. A second link is taken from the family chain on earth this year, to form one in the "glory world."

A Friend.

SARAH FRANCES, second daughter of Robert and E. W. Y. Lewis, of Greene county, Ala., aged 4 years, 2 months, and 6 days. Little Fannie manifested much interest in religious topics, and delighted in asking questions about the Savior, his angels, and heaven. A short time before she breathed her last she asked her weeping parents if the Lord would not send his angels for her, and told them that she was willing to die, and requested them not to weep for her.

A. R. Ramey.

ELIZABETH ANN, daughter of Asa and Clarissa Guice, of Franklin county, Miss., was born July 20th, 1846, and died on the 15th of November, 1860, after a short and severe illness. Every means that could be thought of for the purpose of effecting recovery, was resorted to, but to no avail; so desirous was the physician to save his sister, that he said he would be willing to lay down his life for her. But the summons had come, and she must go. She gave clear and satisfactory evidences to her father, brothers and sisters, and others, that she has a home now with all the redeemed of God.

T. W. Flowers.

WILLIAM HENRY SEGREST was born December 7th, 1848, and died October 8th, 1860. About two years before his death he joined the Methodist Church, and within the last year of his life there appeared a great change in his every day deportment, so as to lead his friends to believe that although he did not make an outward profession of religion, yet that he experienced a change of heart. During his last illness he seemed to have been conscious of his approaching death, and often said he was going to die; nor did he appear to dread his coming fate, but said at one time to his mother, for her consolation, that he was going to heaven, and ere long would meet her there where parting and death would be known no more.

W. B. L.

MRS. AMELIA G. THRASH died of consumption on the 14th of October, 1860, at the residence of her brother-in-law, Rev. H. Buck, in Choctaw county, Miss., in the 54th year of her age. She was the daughter of Susan and Nathaniel Perry, S. C. She embraced religion in early life; in 1818 she was married to Mr. Eli Thrash of Dallas county, Ala., where he closed his christian life. Mrs. T. was an amiable and exemplary christian; her life was one uninterrupted exercise of piety, adorned by all the christian graces; her life closed like the setting sun without a cloud. Many weeks before death came, she saw it approaching; and she met it with such calmness and pious resignation as may, no doubt, be equaled, but cannot be surpassed.

H. C. Buck.

Black's Wells, Miss., Nov. 15th, 1860.

MRS. SARAH WATERS died in Pensacola, Fla., Oct. 30, 1860, in the 67th year of her age. She was born in Richmond city, N. C., lived some years in Ala., but for the last seventeen years has been a resident of Pensacola. She has long been a member of the Methodist church, and enjoyed the comforts of religion. In all the relations of life her godly example has been an ornament to the christian name. Her meek and quiet spirit has ever spoken the language of christian experience, a language which her lips continued to utter to the last hour of consciousness. In her death the church has been robbed of one of its brightest jewels, the community of one of its best members, and a sorrowing family of a model wife and devoted mother.

W. K. Norton.

SARAH G., youngest daughter of B. W. and Mathatical Dunson of Leake County, Miss., died of pneumonia after a short illness of fourteen days, in her 13th year. Sarah was an affectionate daughter, a kind sister and a devout christian. She was happily converted in August, 1858, and joined the M. E. Church South. A short time before her death she addressed her aged father: "O! father, this is a blessed time."

W. C. B.

ROBERT FULTON ELLIS was born July 10th, 1858, and died Oct. 11, 1860. His death was the result of measles. Little Robert was a lovely boy, a general favorite among all who knew him.

W. B. L.

JOHN MOORE, infant son of R. H. and C. E. Moore, aged 1 year and 4 months, died in Baldwin county, Ala., September 17th, after a long and painful illness.

E.

FEBRUL.—Dr. Coy remarks upon good authority, that within the bounds of London there are at present 16,000 children systematically trained to crime; 15,000 who live by low gambling, 50,000 by constant thieving; there are 5,000 receivers of stolen goods; 150,000 men and women who live by miscellaneous disgraceful means, and not less than 12,000 beggars. Altogether, at least calculation, there is 261,000 persons in the London population of 2,362,236 who subsist wholly by preying on the industry of others. One ninth of our entire city who are either felons or paupers.

Dr Vella, an Italian physician of renown, has cured one of the conquerors of Magenta of a severe case of tetanus by the use of curare. From many experiments he has determined also, that curare is the antagonist of strychnine: he has poisoned dogs with strychnine and cured them by injecting curare into their veins. He has also injected into the veins of dogs a mixture of strychnine and curare in such quantity that either without the other, would have been fatal.

EDUCATIONAL.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.—THE next term of this Institution will open on Monday, the first of October, 1860.

FACULTY.

REV. JOHN C. MILLER, M. A., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Sciences.
REV. W. H. SEALES, M. A., Professor of Mathematics.
REV. JOHN J. WHEAT, M. A., Professor of Greek.
GEORGE H. WILEY, M. A., Professor of Latin.
A. R. HOLCOMBE, M. A., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. J. E. SUNDSTROM, M. A., Professor of Modern Languages.
REV. A. G. MILLER, M. A. } Principals of Preparatory Department.
WM. N. POTTER, M. A. }
R. D. NORWORTHY, M. A., Tutor.
LEWIS FITZHUGH, Tutor.

Tuition per session of five months, payable in advance.

In Preparatory Department.....$21 50
In College Department.....30 00
Matriculation Fee on entering College Department.....5 00
Music, extra.

Board can be obtained at the Steward's Hall, or in private families at prices varying from ten to fifteen dollars per month. This Institution having an able Faculty, extensive buildings, large library, cabinet and apparatus, commends itself to all desiring a thorough classical or normal education.

Ceolanary College is located at Jackson, La., twelve miles East of Bayou Sara.

For information apply to Rev. C. C. Gillespie, No. 112 Camp street, Dr. John C. Keener, New Orleans, or to the undersigned, Jackson, La.

JOHN C. MILLER, President.

Aug 5, 1860. } 1y

COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE.—COLUMBUS, Miss. The Fifteenth Annual Session of this Institution will open on MONDAY, the 1st day of October, 1860,

THIS IS NOT A SECTARIAN SCHOOL.

Tuition and Board but little higher than at other Southern Female Colleges. The Teachers are all experienced in their profession. The location is remarkably healthy, and the society moral and refined.

Columbus is accessible from various directions by daily Stage Lines, and by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, a branch of which terminates only a few Squares from the College buildings. Pupils should endeavour to be in present at the opening of the Session.

MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY:

Rev. B. F. Lamhader, M.A., President.
J. W. M. Shattuck, M.D., Secretary.

Rev. W. T. H. Stott, M.A.; Professor A. Poleman, M.A.; Mrs. L. E. Eadan; Mrs. A. Polman; Miss C. R. Shaufry; Mrs E. S. Hendry; Miss L. Street; Miss M. A. Witter; Miss R. E. Tucker, Miss E. B. Southall.

BOARDING IN THE ESTABLISHMENT.—Mr. Larrabee and family, and Dr Shattuck and family, reside with the boarders, and have charge of that department.

For further particulars apply for a Catalogue.

Sept 26th, 1860.

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE, Located Seven Miles east of Canton, has recently received a new and elegant Philosophical Apparatus; and is prepared to give young Ladies a thorough Course in Natural Sciences, Languages and Mathematics; as well as Music, French and Embroidery, and the various primary and Collegiate branches of English education. Lessons in Vocal Music, gratis.

Board, $12 per month; Washing and Lights, extra. Tuition, from $12 to $22 per session, of five months. Payments due in advance.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, President.

Nov. 1, 1860. 8t

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, BROOKHAVEN, Lawrence county, Mississippi. Rev. J. P. Lee, A.M., President, assisted by competent teachers.

The Exercises of the Second Collegiate Year will begin September 12th, 1860, and end June 19th, 1861. Friday, June 14th, Annual Examination begins.

Sunday, June 16th, Commencement Sermon.—17th and 18th, Examination continued, Night Concert.—Wednesday, June 19th, Commencement Day.

For further particulars apply to

Rev. J. P. LEE, President and Secretary,
Rev. M. J. WHITWORTH, Proprietor.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.—The Exercises of the Institute will be resumed on Wednesday, 19th October. As the number of Pupils is necessarily limited, those who wish to secure places will do well to apply as early as practicable.

W. H. S MAGRUDER

Aug 6, 1860.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE.—The Twenty-Third annual session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, OCTOBER 1st, under the superintendence of the following corps of instructors:

Rev J. M. Bonell, President, and Professor of Modern Science, Rhetoric, &c.
Rev. C. W. Smith Professor of Mathematics.
Rev. F. R. Forster, Professor of Ancient Languages.
Rev. W. C. Bas Professor of Natural Sciences.
C. Schwartz Professor of Modern Languages and Painting.
Miss M. E. Carlton, Assistant in Academical Department.
Miss C. M. Schuple, Assistant in Primary Department.
P. G. Guttenberger, Senior Professor of Music.
W. S. B Matthews, junior ditto.
Miss L. Guttenberger, and Miss M. A. Matthews, Assistants in Music.
Mrs. S. Schwartz Teacher of Ornamental Branches.

$210 will meet the annual expenses of a Student for Board and Tuition, if no extra studies be taken. The expense of furnishing a room varies from $5 to $12.

In addition to the regular College classes, there will be henceforth an Academic and a Primary Department, all under the charge of the same general faculty.

Letters on Financial business should be directed to Professor C Schwartz, the Accountant of the Faculty; on all other matters, either to the President or to

W. C. BASS, Secretary.

Macon, Georgia, Aug. 21, 1860. 1mt

BASCOM FEMALE SEMINARY, Grenada, Miss. This Institution, with a select Boarding Department, and superior educational facilities, will commence its next Session, Sept. 24th 1860.

Rev. S. D. OGBURN, President

Aug. 28, 1860.

[illegible] day in October. Number of [illegible] more for Young Ladies [illegible] now in course of erection will be ready for occupancy early in October. With unsurpassed facilities for thirty additional boarders. A room has been erected for Calisthenics, with implements for scientific physical training, which give beauty, grace and health.

The College is furnished with Maps, Charts, Globes, a Cabinet of Minerals, Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, a full corps of efficient and faithful teachers, and we offer to young ladies desiring an education of a high order of advantages

Terms per session of forty weeks, board and tuition in English branches, from $100 to $210. Music, Languages and ornamental branches at moderate extra charges.

Catalogues, with full information, can be had by addressing

sept22 REV. B. JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

GREENSBORO' (ALA.) HIGH SCHOOL.—A Select School for Boys.—Rev. J. W. N. Means, A. M., M. D., Principal and Proprietor.

Six boys from ten to fifteen years of age can board with the Principal. The whole expense of board, tuition, washing, fuel, lights, and books and stationery, except books of reference, per scholastic year, $200. s12-3m

READVILLE SEMINARY, BATON ROUGE, La., will commence its next session October 16th. The patrons of the school are cordially requested to have their daughters and wards present in other classes at that time.

Sept 12-3m* MRS. M. W. READ, Principal.

Feliciana Female Institute, Jackson, La.—The regular exercises of this Institution will be resumed on Monday, October 1st. Large additions have been made to the buildings and premises. With good discipline, thorough teachers, complete apparatus, and newly furnished apartments, superior facilities are afforded for a thorough female education.

Sept. 14, 1860. THOS. W. BROWN President.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAMES J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama., will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties. [au24]

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, HATON ROUGE.

REFERENCES—Henderson & Gaines and Cliffe & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta, Baton Rouge.

FUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Clinton, Louisiana, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, and East Baton Rouge.

References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., W. and C. Leidelfont and Co., Broadwell & Haynes, and Pritchard & Flower, New Orleans. mar 7-1y

W. P. WINANS. J. T. HEATH.

WINANS & HEATH, ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS at Law, Shreveport, La. Office—Market street.

Will practice in the courts of Caddo, Bu Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

J. SPENCER MAYO, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Harrisonburg, La., will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

J. C. & T. H. LEWIS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, will practice in the Parishes of Catahoula, Caldwell, Franklin, Ouachita and Morehouse.

Office at Harrisonburg, La.

Oct 3, 1860. 1y.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

A. H. MAY & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No 94 Gravier street, New Orleans. au21y

J. D. PAYNE, W. HARRISON. J. P. HARRISON, WM. H. HARRISON

PAYNE & HARRISON, COMMISSION MERCHANTS No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

LEONARD FASH. P. S. LAPLANE.

LEONARD FASH & CO COMMISSION MERCHANTS, and Dealers in Western Produce, 91 Magazine street, New Orleans. Oct 24.

JOHN E. WYCHE & CO., COTTON FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No 119 Common street, New Orleans.

JOS. W. CARROLL, W. B. SINDALL, JOS. HOY, J. S. SIVEN.

CARROLL, HOY and Co., Cotton Factors, No. 38 Perdido street, "Factors Row," New Orleans. July 10, 1860. 12 m's

MOORE & BROWDER, Successors to Moore and Vaughn, Commission Merchants, and Cotton Factors, No. 41 Carondelet street, New Orleans. July 10 1860

LAFE, SALTER & CO., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS, No 128 Common St. Oct. 17 1860

STONE'S INFIRMARY—Corner of Canal and Carondelet streets, New Orleans. This well known institution is fully provided with everything necessary for the comfort and convenience of patients.

Separate Buildings have been erected for the accommodation of Negroes.

Terms, including Medical attendance, Nursing, Medicines, &c., $3 to $5 per day for Whites; $1 to $2 per day for Negroes.

Extra charges for surgical cases and operations

T. G. RICHARDSON, M.D.,
Attending Physician and Surgeon,
WARREN STONE, M.D.,
Consulting Physician and Surgeon.

P.S. Special accommodations for females affected with Venereal Fistula, Prolapsus and other diseases peculiar to the sex. Also for patients with diseases of the eyes.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CUDDY, BROWN & CO.—HAVING CLOSED THE office of MILES OWEN & CO., on the first day of January, 1857, my business connections in future in this city will be with Messrs. Cuddy, Brown & Co., 38 Camp street. MILES OWEN

L. SAWYER, DEALER IN WOODEN-WARE, PAPER, Brooms, Matches, Cordage, Twines, Scales; and DEARBORN'S CELEBRATED BALANCES for Weighing Cotton, Sugar and Tobacco, No. 60 MAGAZINE STREET New Orleans. ap20

J. H. KELLER, SOAP MANUFACTORY, CORNER of Howard and St Andrew streets, New Orleans.

☞ A good supply constantly on hand, and, all orders promptly filled.

PRINTERS' ROLLERS.—T. BEAULIEU IS READY to cast Printers' Rollers of the best quality, upon reception of orders either from city or country, at short notice. It is just as foolish for each pressman to cast his own rollers as it is for each man to make his own shirt. Work warranted to be of the best kind.

Address, T. BEAULIEU,
Office of the Christian Advocate,
112 Camp st., New Orleans.

oct9

PH. P. WERLEIN, PUBLISHER AND DEALER in SHEET MUSIC and MUSIC BOOKS. Dealers will be supplied at the regular Board of Trade prices. The PIANO FORTES are of the best manufacture, and sold at Eastern prices. MELODEONS of the celebrated George A. Prince & Co., "the best in the world," (Musical Journal,) of wholesale and retail. PIANOS, VIOLINS, GUITARS, and all other instruments tuned and repaired.

Call at the Music Store, No. 5 Camp street, PH. P. WERLEIN

P. H. WILLARD, COAL MERCHANT, IN EXCHANGE Place, (opposite the Post office.) Those desirous of purchasing Coal or Wood, can be supplied at short notice at the City Coal Office, where is constantly kept on hand Pittsburgh, Sapphire, and Cannel, Anthracite and Lower Ohio Coal. Faulkins, Hotels, Cotton Presses, Steamers, &c., &c., supplied at the lowest market prices. s22 1y

THE BROOKS HOUSE, 155 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS, next door to Odd Fellows' Hall, fronting Lafayette Square. A delightful situation for boarders, convenient for travelers; every accommodation, as good a table as the city affords

TO MERCHANTS AND P

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 50. WHOLE NUMBER 511.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1860.

$2 00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE OFFICE—119 CAMP ST.

THE TURKISH BATH.

I know what the Panacea is: it isn't education, it isn't prize-fighting, and it isn't volunteering—it's the Turkish bath. Methuselah, it is now generally allowed, owed his length of days to this practice. I know that an ingenious captain of Artillery has written a book, in which he endeavors to account for the nine centuries of that patriarch in another way. He holds, and he is under the impression that he proves, that the earth grows and has gone on growing ever since the creation; that in the days of Methuselah it was a very diminutive sphere indeed; that the days and years were proportionately short; and that, consequently, Methuselah was by no means a long lived man, reckoning according to our present scale of days and years. But the majority of scientific men deny this theory, and adopt the Turkish bath explanation. The bard, I am aware, with that disregard for truth which is one of the privileges of the poetic race, asserts unblushingly that

> Brandy cures the gout, the colic, and the phthisic,
> And is to all man the very best of physic.

But the user of the Turkish bath needs no physic of any description, and inveighs against stimulants of all kinds; nay, it has been asserted with some vehemence, and maintained with some degree of argument, that the man (or woman) who should daily take a Turkish bath, would stand in need of neither medicine nor raiment, and very little food would be necessary. Oxygen is the one thing needful, and the regular user of the Turkish bath gets plenty of that. I took my first in Parking Street, Pimlico. There's a chapel next door, but they don't charge anything extra on that account, though you can hear the organ-practising quite distinctly. Now, the appearance of the bath outside is as if it were built of some crumbly sort of stone, and upon it is printed, "The Turkish Bath," in red letters, for somehow in England red is associated with everything Turkish. There are two entrances—one for gentlemen, and the other for ladies. What they do on the ladies' side, I can't say, but I've no doubt things are conducted in very much the same manner as upon the gentlemen's; and the fashion hereof is as follows:

As soon as you enter, you are requested to sit upon a form, pull off your shoes, and insert your feet in a pair of slippers a la Turque, fashioned out of an old pair of American goloshes or "rubbers" (at least mine were), not that it is by any means necessary, but it looks Turkish. Then, much as you may admire that sentiment of Ancient Pistol's which proclaims the baseness of the "slave who pays," you must submit to slavery for the nonce, and dispose of the tune of three-and-six-pence; whereupon a ticket of admittance is put into your hand, and you are politely requested to mount, as well as your Turkish slippers will allow you, into an upper chamber. This chamber has windows in the roof only. These windows are all open, and at your entrance, you are a little scared at observing what at first appear to you corpses in winding sheets lying upon red-covered ottomans. After a few moments, however, you recover sufficient self-possession to be aware that some of the corpses are reading newspapers, and many smoking.—They repose at full length within a sheet partially thrown round them, and girt about the loins with what would in South Africa be considered a very handsome evening-dress, either of red or yellow color. One of these "evening dresses," together with a sheet, is then thrust into your hands. You accept both with thanks, grin feebly at the donor, and take the liberty of asking if you are expected to imitate the apparently insane conduct of the gentlemen whom you see lying about, and every mother's son of whom you are willing to bet more than you can afford, will catch his death of cold. To your relief, you find that no such sacrifice is required of you at present, your three-and sixpence. Having given up your valuables into the care of the superintendent, your attention is directed to a number of square compartments, or apartments, protected from the public gaze by red curtains. Into one of these you are inducted, and recommended to reduce yourself to a state of nudity, to gird yourself with the red or yellow "apron" before mentioned; to throw the sheet, ghost-like, about you, and then descend the steps you just now ascended. Arrived at the bottom, you are desired to undress still more, and then you are told to walk in, and do so, but for an instant feel disposed to back out again at the double. The temperature of the room is 120°, but that is comparatively a trifle: it is the spectacle you behold which appals you. In the first place, the room is darkened; through the gloom, you dimly discover, seated upon wooden stools—as it were of repentance—placed against the walls, and over a grating, through which comes the hot air, nude figures, both fat and thin. They sit and glare, as you take your place upon a vacant stool in a corner, and spring up on the spot with a cry of pain, for you've not been in the habit of sitting on the hob, and prefer a chair "with just the chill off;" there they sit, glare, and perspire, read pant. Their faces are red, their veins distended; and that stout old gentleman who weighs, on a rough calculation, about forty-seven stone, and looks like Hercules in very bad condition, gazes pitcously at the steam which is pouring from his fat. After a few moments, you are sufficiently acclimatised to the temperature to sit down quietly and observe the operations. Your first impression is decidedly unconfortable; you can't help thinking you must have got into a torture-chamber by mistake; your memory brings back all the tales you have read about the Spanish Inquisition, and scenes from Mr. Ainsworth's Tower of London come floating before your mental vision; for in the middle of the room wherein you are sitting, are what you take to be two racks; upon them are stretched at full length two human figures, and over these stand two ghastly executioners; an occasional sigh or groan from the recumbent figures aids the horrible delusion.—But after awhile your eyesight becomes clearer, your nerves stronger, and your imagination deller, so that the racks soften down into simple wooden tables or dressers, the victims into voluntary patients, and the grim executioners into civil, careful, and tender operators.

Being now in a position, mentally and corporeally, to look about you, you perceive that the room in which you are has three doors; one by which you entered; another on your right as you enter, which leads into a sort of a yard, the temperature whereof is about 70°; and a third upon your left as you enter, which opens into another room, letted to the same what alarming height of 180°. Of course, it is only by degrees that you gain all this knowledge. Hints are dropped from time to time by perspiring neighbors, which enable you to make up your mind that your room is still hotter than that in which you sit, and that you must get baked there before you can consider yourself "thoroughly done." Then you are warned a-list of Regulations, which you rise up and read. They are six in number; and, if memory serve me truly, the first is a recommendation "to remain in the first or intermediate room until a general perspiration takes place." The second is to this effect: "If the heat be disagreeable or oppressive, wash the head with a little warm water, and the feet and hands with cold;" and, as the heat is disagreeable and oppressive, you proceed at once to act upon it; then kicking, or fancying you feel, a little inferior, you peruse the remaining regulations. The third, in a teetotal spirit, accords you the kind permission "to drink cold water freely, if you feel inclined;" as soon as the body becomes moist." The fourth is a warning to you "to take care and cool thoroughly before dressing, and whilst cooling, to expose the body as much as possible to the air." The fifth advises you "to repose as much as you can whilst in the bath, and to avoid all exciting topics of conversation." The sixth it is rather difficult to comprehend, by reason of its grammatical structure, the complication of conjunctions being worthy of Thucydides himself. I can only give it as it is printed, to the best of my recollection: "The proper time for taking a bath is either before meals, and not for less than two hours after a hearty one." The first part is sufficiently intelligible, but the last is too much for most scholars; however, the best way would be never to take me at all after a meal, and then you will be quite safe. After this short trial of the effect produced upon the human body at a temperature of 120° by a little reading, and discovering the result to be a gentle perspiration, you, in accordance with regulation one, enter the more fiercely heated room. You look at the thermometer, and find that you are actually enduring a temperature of 180°. You sit down upon a board placed upon a marble slab, as you see other people sitting, and you take particular care not to touch the marble itself with any part of your body, for the sudden hop, the starting eyes, the twisted mouth, and the profane ejaculation of the gentleman opposite, the calf of whose leg came into contact with the marble, led you to the conclusion that it isn't agreeable. In point of fact, the board is, to say the least, quite hot enough, and you're not quite sure you're not a fool for sitting on it; you think there is a great deal of reason in the remark of the gentleman next to you, who mutters that it's quite hot enough for him; and you listen with considerable interest to the short-necked gentleman, with very prominent veins, who asks in a husky voice if that sort of thing ever brings on apoplexy.

When you think you have reduced yourself by perspiration as nearly to a skeleton as is convenient, you retreat to the "intermediate" room. You are then taken in hand by an "operator." He requests you to sit down upon one of the "dressers;" he then takes hold of your right hand, pulls the arm out sharply, tugs at your thumb and each of your fingers, striving to "crack" the joints, and pinches and kneads the muscles. Afterwards, he repeats the operation upon your left hand and arm.—Now he jumps up behind you, rubs down your neck, presses upon your shoulders, and bidding you support your hands upon the "dresser," passes the palm of his hand heavily down from shoulder to wrist. Next, he tells you to lie upon your back, putting a soft of block under your head, to support it. He leans the weight of his body upon your chest, and passes his hand over your ribs and all the muscles from the neck to the waist; he rubs your thighs, pulls your legs and toes, and twists your ankles; lastly, he turns you over, back uppermost, and leans upon all parts of your back; runs what feels very like his elbow down from the nape of your neck between your shoulder-blades as far as the string of the "apron" you have on; pulls all the muscles you have "off" with thumb and finger, as one stretches a piece of India-rubber; pinches your calves; and with a parting wrench of the left leg, let's you know you're "done."—Being "done," you sit down for a minute or two till the "washer" is ready for you.

He awaits you in the third room, or court, or back-kitchen, or yard, or whatever is the proper name for it. He will seat you upon a form, cover you all over with Castilian Soap, and then wash you with warm water—During this time, he will most likely question you after his kind, thus:

"This your first bath, sir?"

"Yes."

(Sceptically.) "I thought so."

"Why?"

"Why, you're so alarmin' dirty."

(Uneasily.) "Oh! am I? I didn't know that. I have a bath every morning."

"What! a water-bath?"

"Yes."

"That counts for it—that ain't a bath; you might take that sort of bath all day, and yet be as dirty as a chimney-sweep."

Not feeling on safe ground, you close the conversation. The "washer" requests you stand up, empties the tub of warm water in which you have been washed over your head, and proceeds to behave in a manner which excites a suspicion, on your part, that something unpleasant is coming. He begs you will stand as far back as you can; he then catches hold of a gutta-percha tube, at one end of which is that part of a watering-pot which is pierced with holes, while the other end is fastened in the wall, and communicates, you have a horrid fancy, with a tank of cool water. Your fancy has not deceived you, for in a moment a cold stream is poured over feet and legs, and chest and back, and, peradventure, head. This sudden attack is a little bewildering at first, and takes away the breath, causing any remarks you may have to make to issue forth in a broken form, accompanied by frequent gasps; but before it is over, you really enjoy it. You are now sent back into the warm room again; and after remaining there a few minutes, until you become dry, you make your exit by the door of the one which you entered. Your clogs or patterns are now taken off; your slippers put on; a fresh "apron" is tied around your middle; your sheet is thrown round your shoulders; and you walk upstairs to the "lying-in-state" room. You fling yourself upon an ottoman, throw your sheet off your chest and legs, call for a cigar and a cup of coffee, and believe yourself in Paradise. The sensations you experience are indescribable. So far from feeling the air from the open windows uncomfortable, you delight in it; you feel as though a weight had fallen from mind and body. In about half an hour, you find yourself thoroughly cooled—go into your little compartment, dress yourself, recover your valuables, descend the stairs, put on your slippers, put on your shoes, and sally forth in an ecstasy.

But as no one with the full complement of wits ever goes a warfare without counting the cost, so a reasonable being takes a review of the charges he has to pay for, then, I entered at 3 P. M., and though, in obedience to the exhortation of regulation three, I drank six tumblers of water, as soon as my body became moist, and employed all the means I could think of to bring on a perspiration, it was six o'clock before I showed any marked symptom—indeed, I began to doubt whether the pores hadn't been forgotten when my particular skin was manufactured. Those superior beings who know all about the Turkish bath and the human skin, were horrified at the state of my hide, I dare say, and thought I must be a personification of the unclean thing; but I can only say, that if it's perspiration they want, I've plenty of that for them. Why, half an hour's fencing, or stick-playing, or rowing, makes me perspire to five times as much as two hours' baking in the bath room; and I humbly submit that there may be persons for whom perspiration from exercise is more healthy than from artificial heat. I was two hours getting into a proper state for shampooing or kneading; I had to wait about a quarter of an hour, until the operator was ready to pinch, press, rub, and twist my limbs; I was about another quarter of an hour, I should think, having my limbs pinched, pressed, rubbed, and twisted, and my epidermis peeled off; I had to wait ten minutes before I was washed, and five minutes before I was dry, so that it was a quarter to seven when I arrived at the "lying-in-state" room; and I was three-quarters of an hour getting cool and dressing. On the whole, then, I had been three hours and a half taking my bath; and though I am bound to say that, in a luxurious point of view, the delicious sensations I experienced at the end, and for at least an hour after it, were quite worth the while, in an industrial point of view, I very much fear it was time wasted.—Chambers' Journal.

DEGRADED CONDITION OF THE BUSHMEN.

On the Bunkeveld in the valley of the Snowberg or Stormy Mountains, which form the northern boundary of the Cape, humanity is found in the very lowest state of degradation in which it has ever been exhibited. The Bosjesmans or Bushmen two or three specimens of which race were brought to this country a few years ago, present an example of human nature even of the hideous form in which characterizes the Hottentot. Hunger and cold, and nakedness, and every description of privation and distress, have so dwarfed their forms and depraved their minds, that they present a spectacle painful to look upon. The stature of these pigmy inhabitants of the desert rarely exceeds four feet or four feet two inches. Thieves by profession, ferael and treacherous, without a fixed habitation, without society, without any sort of common interest or government, and living only from day to day, and from hand to mouth, they were objects of loathing to neighboring tribes even before Europeans had approached their country. The most civilized of the Hottentots and Kaffirs, more especially, waged a deadly war against them; and the sight of one of these diminutive savages is said to rouse the passions of that race to uncontrollable fury. Many years since, a Kaffir saw in the governmental house at Cape Town, among the other domestics, a Bushmen eleven years of age. With the impulse of a beast of prey he darted upon him, and transfixed him with his assgai.

The little intelligence which the Bushmen possess is displayed chiefly in robbery and the chase. Rivaling the antelope in fleetness, and the monkey in agility, they accompany their wild, half-famished savage dogs until they come within bow-shot of their game, or run down the objects of their pursuit. Arrayed generally with a bow, a quiver full of arrows, a bat and belt, leather sandals, a sheep's fleece, a gourd, or the shell of an ostrich's egg, to carry water, these puny creatures wander over their parched and desolate plains, supported by a food, which, unless when occasionally varied by the luxuries of the chase, consists entirely of roots, berries, ant-eggs, grasshoppers, mice, toads, lizards, and snakes. They smear the arrows which they use for hunting and in war with a poison which, extracted from a bulb, and mingled with venom drawn from the jaws of the yellow serpent, forms a compound of the most noxious character, for no creature was ever pierced by a dart prepared with the deadly virus and lived. They have another poison more fearful in its effects, which is extracted from a caterpillar. The agony produced by it, Dr. Livingstone says, is so intense, that the person wounded cuts himself with knives, and flies from human habitation a raving maniac. Its effects on the lion is equally terrible. He is heard moaning in distress, becomes furious, and bites trees and the ground in his rage.

They are said to be totally devoid of natural affection; "and there are" instances," adds a missionary (Mr. Kiehcrer), who lived for some time in their neighborhood, "of parents throwing their tender offspring to the hungry lion who stood roaring before their cavern, refusing to depart until some peace-offering was made to him."—They shun the face of strangers, concealing themselves among rocks and bushes, and even throwing themselves over rocks and precipices rather than fall into the hands of their enemies. But they have been known, when escape was cut all, to fight with the most determined resolution.—Religion they have none. They regard the thunder as the voice of an angry demon, and they reply to it with curses and imprecations. Their language is inarticulate to all but themselves; and there appears to be scarcely even a possibility of either civilizing or converting them. In the North-east of Natal, where the Bushmen appear in their lowest type, they reside in holes of the earth scraped out with their nails, or, rather with their claws. "They will not receive kindness," says a close observer of their character; "or if they do, only make a return of treachery, robbery, and murder. No presents of cattle or corn, nor inducements to locate and settle, can prevail on them to relinquish their wild life, or to make any approach toward civilization." The only satisfactory thought connected with them is the belief of their gradual extinction. They exist in the meantime an awful proof of the depth of degradation to which humanity, in its gradual deterioration, can fall, and an instance of physical and moral degeneracy probably unparalleled in the world.

SPIRITUAL DISCIPLINE OF HUMANITY.

"As an eagle stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings: so the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange God with him." Deut. xxxii, 11, 12.

The passage suggests two introductory thoughts:

1. The spiritual function of nature. What is the grand moral office of the visible creation? To reveal God. The visible is the mirror of the infinite Invisible. God reveals himself through creature existences. No words can fully reveal him. There is no part of nature, however humble, that does not reveal something of him. He compares himself to the "rock"—the "sun," the "lion," the "eagle," etc. Each shows a divine something; but all—the whole universe, can only reflect a few rays of the infinite Sun.

2. Man's great duty in relation to nature. What is that? To study it, study it not merely to discover riches, formulate sciences, etc., but to see God. If God made everything to reveal something of himself, we should look at everything with this view—look at the universe as a gallery filled with pictures of God—pictures, not of his person, but of his attributes, tendencies, relations. Natural history is a glorious Bible—a Bible, however, unstudied by the millions. It is God's first scripture; but few have ever rightly read it.

The subject of the words before us is, The spiritual discipline of humanity.

I. THAT THE GREAT END OF THE SPIRITUAL DISCIPLINE OF HUMANITY IS TO SECURE THE RIGHT ACTION OF OUR POWERS. The "eagle stirreth up her nest" in order to induce the young ones to use their energies. Naturalists tell us that when the eaglets are old enough to fly, the kind and industrious parent breaks up the nest and forces them to fly to some neighboring crag. The object is to induce them to make use of their own powers. This God says he did with the Israelites. Man's powers are either inactive, or wrongly active; in either case he tends to ruin. What is right action? Let us take the answer from the incident before us. 1. It is a constitutionally-befitting action. What does the parent bird require of her eaglets to do? Just that which they are made to do—put their little pinions into action, and mount toward the sun. We are made to love, study, and serve God. 2. It is a self-reliant action. The parent bird seeks to make her young ones trust their own powers. Self-reliance is not self-sufficiency. Self-reliance is the condition of progress, and implies a trust in moral principles and in God. 3. It is a divinely-prompted action. The parent bird prompts the young one by her "fluttering," etc. God must prompt us before ever we shall act aright. He gives the impulse.

II. THAT THE MEANS OF THE SPIRITUAL DISCIPLINE OF HUMANITY INVOLVE A VARIETY OF DIVINE ACTIONS. "Stirreth up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings," etc. 1. Here is a stimulating action. It is said that the eagle breaks up her nest to [illegible] the disciples on account of the first persecution, are examples. He takes health, property, friends, children away, to stir us up to action. 2. Here is an exemplary action. The parent "fluttereth over them" to show them how to use their wings. God teaches by example. The pillar was an example in the wilderness. Christ is our example now. In Christ we see how we can act, and ought to act. 3. Here is a protecting action. "Spreadeth abroad her wings." It is said that when she finds her young ones weary or unwilling she spreads her wings, takes her brood upon her back and soars with them aloft. In order to exercise their strength, she then shakes them off; and when she finds that their pinions flag, or that an enemy is near, she darts beneath them with surprising skill, and at once restores their strength, and places her body between her young and the danger that threatens them. What a striking representation of God's protecting care is this.

III. THAT THE GENIUS OF THE SPIRITUAL DISCIPLINE OF HUMANITY IS EVER THAT OF PARENTAL AFFECTION. What but the parental instinct of kindness stimulated the parent bird to do all this? That kind instinct is an emanation and divine reflection of the feeling which the great Father has for his countless offspring. That parental love is the spirit of the disciplinary system under which we live is evident from numerous Scriptures.

If the parental affection is the spirit of discipline, two practical conclusions follow: 1. That there should be on our part a cordial acquiescence. Our Father knows what is best. He knows what we require. 2. That there should be on our part an endeavor to realize the end of discipline. Job felt this. Job xxiii, 10. Psalm lxvi, 10-12.

If we are nestling down in material comforts, O eternal Spirit, do thou, like the imperial bird, chosen symbol of thyself, break up our resting-places, force us to the right use of our energies, and guide us into the sunny realms of thine own glory!

HOLINESS THE MEASURE OF POWER.

An individual professor takes his place in the Church. He has wealth, and uses it for the benefit of the organization; he has talents, and they are generally devoted to the defense of the Church; he has popular influence, and he uses it to gather proselytes to the faith. But his piety is superficial. Words escape him every day which show that they come from an impure fountain. He is, in spirit, a man of the world, and he has very little power to reform one. He may induce men to attend his church, and even to join it; but in all his efforts to reform them, he feels that he is weak, and they turn away in disgust, or look to others for their models and advice.—But let this man improve in his piety, and his power at once begins to increase. Let him approximate nearer the standard of Christian perfection, and it will be seen that his spiritual power increases in exact proportion.

On the other hand, take a man whose heart is entirely concentrated, whose pure life indicates purity of heart, whose holy example commands universal respect, whose simple, unpretending efforts move all who hear his voice in prayer, or praise, or exhortation.—Now, let him yield to temptation—admit corruption into his heart—and how soon it is seen he is shorn of his strength. Just in proportion as he recedes from this elevated position in christian holiness, his power of usefulness diminishes.—Nor can he supply this deficiency by any other element. He who loses his purity may strive to save his power by increase of zeal, by enlarged charities, by the severest austerities; but it is all of no avail. He makes himself a living proof that holiness is the measure of power.

A comparison of two men in the ministry will strengthen this conclusion. One is a man of shining talent, of gentle mildness; the other, ordinary in these respects—in all natural qualities the inferior of his brother. But he is a man of God—a man of faith; his soul is filled with love—"perfect love that casteth out fear;" he moves among the people like a spirit from eternity; his rebukes of sin fall with dreadful force upon the hearts of the wicked; his sermons, his prayers, his expostulations, his tears, all indicate the presence of an extraordinary power; and thousands are converted, sanctified, and saved through his instrumentality. He wonders at the difference. He increases his exertions, elaborates his sermons with more labor and research, improves his rhetoric and oratory; but all to little purpose. He may increase the admiration of his hearers, but he cannot subdue their hearts, bring them weeping to the foot of the cross, and present them with joy as the trophies of the Redeemer. But let him seek and obtain the Holy Spirit—let fire from God's altar touch his lips, and purify his soul—and he is a new man. He does not throw away his talents, his learning, but they are all sanctified. With the simplicity of a child, and a heart overflowing with love he preaches the truth; and it is in "the demonstration of the spirit, and with power;" and a glorious reformation follows. Hu is another living proof that holiness is the measure of power.—Evangelist.

(A translation from Mme. de Stael's review of Schiller.)

JUAN OF ARC.

BY LUTHY FONTELLE.

The historical epoch in which Joan of Arc lived, was peculiarly adapted to exhibit the French character in all its beauty, when an incorruptible faith, an unbounded respect for woman, and a generosity almost rash in war, distinguished this chivalric nation.

Schiller presents a girl of sixteen with some features still childlike, of a lithe, delicate, but stately figure, inspired by religion, a poet in her actions and in her language, when animated by the Divine spirit; manifesting in her discourse the most admirable genius, and at the same time, absolute ignorance of everything which Heaven had not revealed to her.

Thus Schiller has conceived the scene:

Joan appears first at Vaucouleurs in the rustic dwelling of her father, listening to the reverses of France, and inflamed by the recital. Her aged father censures her sadness, her reverie, her enthusiasm. He does not penetrate the extraordinary secret, and believes (like many in our age) that there is evil in everything which he is not accustomed to see. At this moment a peasant brings in a helmet which a Bohemian had intrusted to him in a very mysterious manner. Joan seizes it, places it upon her head, and even her family are astonished at the expression of her countenance.

She prophesies the triumph of France, and the defeat of her enemies. A witty peasant remarks that the age of miracles is past.

"There will be one more," she replies; "a white dove will appear, and with the courage of an eagle will oppose the vultures that prey in the country. This proud Duke of Burgundy, a traitor to France; this Talbot, with a hundred arms, the scourge of Heaven; this blasphemous Salisbury, will be overthrown; all their island hordes will be scattered like a flock of sheep. The Lord, the God of combats, will be ever with the dove. He will deign to select a trembling creature, and will triumph by a feeble maiden, for He is all powerful."

Her sisters leave her, and her father commands her to occupy her mind with rural toils, and to remain a stranger to these great events in which poor shepherds ought not to mingle. He departs. Joan of Arc remains alone, and ready to leave forever the abode of her childhood, a sentiment of regret seizes her.

"Adieu!" says she, "country to me so dear, mountains, tranquil and faithful valleys, adieu! Joan of Arc will return no more to roam in your smiling meadows; flowers which I have planted will bloom when I am far away. I leave you sombre grottoes, refreshing fountains; echo, thou pure voice of the valley that responded to my songs, you, asylum of all my innocent joys; never will these places behold me again. I leave you for ever; let my lambs disperse on the heath; another flock claims me; I am called to a bloody career of peril. It is not a vain or earthly desire that draws me, it is the voice of Him who appeared to Moses in the burning bush of Mount Horeb, and commanded him to resist Pharaoh. It is He who ever favoring shepherds, called the youth, David, to attack the giant. He has said to me also, 'Go and bear witness to me on the earth. Bind on your tender limbs the rude accoutrements of war; let iron cover your delicate bosom. Permit no one to kindle in your heart love's flame. Hymen's wreath shall never adorn your locks. But when the bravest weary, when the fatal hour of France seems approaching, it is thou that shalt bear my standard and cast down the proud conquerors as ears fall in the day of harvest. Thy exploits shall change the wheel of fortune; thou shalt go to bear safety to the heroes of France, and in Rheims, delivered from the invaders, shalt place the crown upon the head of thy king."

It is thus that Heaven directs me. It has sent me this helmet as a token of its will. The miraculous temper of this steel communicates to me its power, and the ardor of warrior angels inflames me. I go to precipitate myself into the whirl of combat; it hurries me along with the impetuosity of a storm: I hear the [illegible] of heroes who [illegible]."

This first scene is a prologue, but it is inseparable from the piece; it introduces the action at the moment that Joan of Arc takes her solemn resolution.

Shakespeare has given the idea of the scene in which Joan of Arc restores the Duke of Burgundy to the fidelity he owes his king; but Schiller has developed it in a masterly manner.

The Maid of Orleans wishes to re-awaken in the Duke's mind that attachment to France which was then so powerful in all the generous inhabitants of that beautiful country.

"What do you purpose?" says she to him; "who is then the enemy whom your murderous look is seeking? This prince whom you wish to attack is, like you, of the royal race—you were his companion in arms. This country is thine; even I, am I not a daughter of thy country? All of us whom you wish to destroy, are we not your friends? Our arms are open to receive you, our knees are waiting to bend humbly before you. Our sword is without point against your heart. Your aspect intimidates us, and under a hostile helmet, we respect still in your features the resemblance to our kings."

The Duke repels the entreaties of Joan of Arc, fearing a supernatural enchantment.

"It is not," she continues, "necessity that bows me at your feet; I do not come here as a suppliant. Look around you; the camp of the English is in ashes, and your dead cover the battle-field. You hear on all sides the war trumpets of the French. God has decided; victory is ours. We wish to divide with our friends the laurels we have won. O come with us, noble deserter! come! It is with us that you will find justice and victory. I, an envoy of God, extend towards you the hand of a sister. I wish in saying you to draw you to our side. Heaven is for France. Angels whom you do not see, fight for our king; they are all decked with lilies. The standard of our noble cause is white also like the lily, and a virgin is its chaste symbol.

The Duke replies: "The deceitful words of falsehood are full of artifice, but the language of this maid is simple, like that of a child, and if an evil genius inspires her, it knows how to breathe the words of innocence. No, I will hear her no longer. To arms! I can defend myself better in fighting than in listening to her."

She replies: "You accuse me of magic; you think you see in me the artifices of hell. To establish peace, to reconcile hatred, is this the work of hell? Does concord proceed from that dark abode? What is there innocent, sacred, or humanly good, if it is not to devote one's self to his country? Since what time was nature so strong as combating herself that heaven abandons the good cause, and a demon defends it? If what I have told you is true, from what source was it drawn? Who was the companion of my pastoral life? Who instructed the simple daughter of a shepherd in royal things? Never was I presented before kings; eloquence is a stranger to me; but now that I have need to move you, a profound penetration enlightens me; the destiny of empires and of kings appears to shine as to my sight, and scarcely out of my infancy, I am able to direct the thunderbolts of heaven against thy heart."

At these words the Duke of Burgundy is moved, troubled. Joan of Arc perceives it, and exclaims: "He has wept, he is conquered, he is ours!"

The French lower their swords and standards before him. Charles VII. appears, and the Duke of Burgundy casts himself at his feet.

The astonishing influence and success of this Maid of Orleans, so simple by nature, so wise under the inspiration of love to her country; the superstition and ingratitude of the country she had rescued from its powerful enemy, and of the king whom she had crowned, and her tragical fate, are all familiar to you.

Yet the French whom she saved have not honored her memory, and no writer of note in that nation has attempted to efface the impression made by the poem of Voltaire, who being a sceptic, ridiculed the idea of her inspiration, and depreciated her heroism. But Shakespeare in his Henry VI., represents her as inspired at first by Heaven; and Schiller, also a foreigner, has kindled a blaze of glory around the unfortunate heroine.

Her life is a graphic picture of the superstition that ruled that epoch.

A WORD PICTURE.

We seldom meet with a more exquisite little piece of word painting than the following, which occurs in Stuar Kings sermon on Yo-Semite: "But what words shall describe the beauty of one of the waterfalls as we see it plunging from the brow of a cliff nearly three thousand feet high, and clearing fifteen hundred feet at one jump? It is comparatively narrow at the top of the precipice; but it widens as it descends, so that it shapes itself before it reaches its first bowl of granite into the charming figure of the comet that glowed in our sky two years ago. But more beautiful than the comet, you can see the substance of this watery loveliness over renew itself, and never pour itself away. And all over its white swaying mistiness, which now and then swings along the mountain side, at the persuasion of the wind, like a pendulum of lace, and now, and then is whiled round and round by some eddying breeze as though the gust meant to wring it dry, all over its surface as it falls, are shooting rockets of water which spend themselves by the time they half reach the bottom, and then reform for the remaining descent—thus fascinating the gazer so that he could lie for hours never tired, but ever hungry for more of the exquisite witchery of liquid motion and grace. It is the Prophet said: 'The mountains and hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.'"

THE CHIRIQUI EXPEDITION.

A Washington dispatch to the New York Herald gives the following account of the Chiriqui expedition:

Commodore Engle, Lieutenant Morton, Dr. Evans, and Lieutenant Jellers, composing the Chiriqui surveying party, arrived here to-day. The explorations have been most satisfactory and successful.

Commodore Engle represents the Chiriqui lagoon to be a harbor of unequaled excellence. Its waters are deep, its shores bold, its locality healthful. It is not one, but a system of many harbors, some of which, such as Almirante bay, Ambrosia bay, Pulos Lagoon, and Bluefields bay, afford every requisite for commercial or naval purposes. The entrances are bold and deep, both the entrances and the interiors being from eight to fourteen fathoms. A line-of-battle ship in most of them may lay near the shore and take ie coal or water which their sides supply.

These harbors and the entire lagoon in its length and breadth, are sheltered by the outlying islands and keys from all storms—only gentle land and sea-breezes are known. The Indian canoes navigate at all times and crossing the waters of this great system of harbors. Its shores produce every tropical fruit and vegetable in the greatest abundance and of the most extraordinary size and delicacy. Sugar-cane, cotton, coffee, and the cacao or chocolate-nut grow wild and in profusion.

Go Dulce and Go Cite, on the Pacific, are reported by Lieut. Jellers, who was charged with their special survey, as surpassing any harbor on the Pacific coast.—Though smaller than Chiriqui, he deems it every way equal in all harbor advantages, and superior in some facilities. Throughout its entire length vessels of the largest class may be moored to the shore, while a double-track railroad may encircle the inshore part of the harbor, extending from the great road nerves. Its shores and the plains beyond are of surpassing beauty, offering town and villa sites, and commercial facilities, while the entrance is bold, clear, strongly defined, and adapted by nature for purposes of defense.

Lieut. Morton has had great difficulties to contend with. He was sent out in the rainy season, and this has been a severe one. The mountain streams were swollen to torrents. The rivers of the plains had overflowed their banks and extended into the forests, making them appear in some places as deep and impassable swamps. Not deterred by unfavorable circumstances he went gallantly through, wading frequently for miles waist deep to ascertain whether the bottoms were solid. He has found and located the line of a railroad, whose grades and bridging are far within the cost of a profitable commercial investment. The mountain passes were at first deemed impolite and impracticable, but he energetically renewed his labors, and had the great satisfaction to discover a cleft or pass through the mountains which established the certainty of the projected line. In consideration of his untiring efforts, his companions unanimously named this discovery as Morton's Pass, and it will bear his name hereafter in honor of his exertions.

Dr. Evans examined the entire Atlantic shores of the Lagoon, and the islands which are its barriers. On the Changanola the coal is of the finest quality for steam purposes. Its flame is bright and strong, its heat intense, and it is free from sulphur, pyrites or clinker when burned. The coals of Pope's Island and Shepherd's harbor are hard and good, but do not burn so [illegible] as those of Changanola. [illegible] coal covers an extent, and is of such thickness of vein as to show it is inexhaustible. Dr. Evans visited the Pacific, and found coal there, but not of a quality which can be used for steam purposes, for which that at Changanola is so eminently adapted.

The entire surveying party have had much to encounter, but they have gone through all. No better evidence of the healthfulness of the place can be given than the fact of every member of the party returning in health. Several of them suffered severely from intermittent fever, brought on by constant exposure to the rain; but this disappeared by the use of quinine.

COME IT WILL.

Manhood will come, and old age will come, and the dying bed will come, and the very last look you shall ever have on your acquaintances will come, and the agony of the parting breath will come, and the time when you are stretched a lifeless corpse before the eyes of weeping relatives will come, and the coffin that is to enclose you will come, and that hour when the company assemble to carry you to the churchyard will come, and that minute when you are put down into the grave will come, and the throwing in of the loose dirt into the narrow house where you are laid, and the spreading of the green sod over it—all, all will come on every living creature who now hears me; and in a few little years, the minister who now speaks, and the people who now listen will be carried to their long homes, and make room for another generation. Now all this you know must and will happen—your common sense and common experience serve to convince you of it.

Perhaps it may have been little thought in the days of careless, and thoughtless, and thankless unconcern which you have spent hitherto; but I call upon you to think of it now, to lay it seriously to heart, and no longer to delay when the high matters of death, and judgment, and eternity, are thus set so evidently before you. And the tidings wherewith I am charged—and the blood both upon your own head, and not upon mine, if you will not listen to them—the object of my coming amongst you is to let you know what more things are to come; it is to carry you beyond the regions of sight and of sense, to the regions of faith, and to assure you in the name of Him who cannot lie, that as sure as the hour for laying the body in the grave comes, so surely will also come the hour of the spirit returning to Him who gave it. Yes the day of final reckoning will come, and the appearance of the Son of God in heaven, and his mighty angels around him, will come, and the opening of the books will come, and the standing of men of all generations before the judgment seat will come, and the solemn passing of that sentence which is to fix you for eternity will come. —Dr. Chalmers.

CRISES IN LIFE.

The following extract, from the life of Rev. Dr. Taylor, of New Haven, should be read and pondered by all who are conscious of the strivings of the Spirit of God. That Spirit may be grieved. Because most gentle and loving, He is easily wounded. When His repeated warnings are despised, He often takes His flight, never to return. We have known of crises in the spiritual destiny of companions and friends as decisive as this of the great theologian and his classmate. The biographer says:

One incident during his early religious interest, which the writer has heard him relate, is worthy of permanent record for its instructive and monitory character. There was a classmate and particular friend of his, who at the same time, by the working of the Divine Spirit, was concerned for his eternal interests. The two friends communicated their feelings to each other. And one day, while walking together, they raised the question whether they should call on President Dwight, who had invited all persons thoughtful upon religion to call and converse with him. At length, while still talking and doubting on that question, they came to Dr. Dwight's gate. There they stopped and hesitated. Soon, Taylor said, "Well, I shall go in." "Well," rejoined his companion, "I think I will not, to-day." Taylor did go in. And the result of his conversation with that eminent Christian guide, was that he gave himself to Christ, in a covenant never to be broken, and became a burning and shining light in his kingdom. His friend from that time thought less and less on the subject; and though he lived for many years afterwards, a respectable man, he died without giving any evidence of a saving interest in Christ. Such are the crises in the history of an immortal soul! Such are the turning points in eternal destiny! Thus it is that companions travel together till they come to where they see plainly the open path to Christ. They consider; they decide; the one taking the way to eternal life, and the other pursuing the way to everlasting death. How important that in these crises of eternal destiny, men act aright! that they then regard the divine warning and entreaty, "Quench not the Spirit."

The proof that we believe in the reality of religion, is that we walk in the power of it.

THE LOST SEA.

Upon the Atchison and Topeka road, about midway from Grasshopper Falls to West Florence, the divides take a sudden rise from an elevation of about six hundred feet. At the base of this prairie mountain stretches forth a basin which embraces many thousand acres of land, and which resembles in form the bottom of a sea. Upon the top of this mountain is a fertile soil, evidently for a long time exposed to the atmosphere, while fifty feet below is a shelf abounding in curious stones and shells. About fifty feet still lower a similar shelf is formed which more plentifully abounds in shells, with now and then portions of petrified fish; still lower the last shelf is formed, and upon this are traces of the gradual decrease of waters, and of a long continued beating of waves. It is supposed that the waters once covered the country embraced in a basin of from fifteen to twenty miles square, and that an outlet having been formed, the liquid passed out to the first, and the second, and third shelves of this mountain, and that by evaporation the basin was finally relieved of its watery burden. No geologist could view this scene without conviction that Kansas has at one day been the bottom of an extensive sea.—Cor. N. Y. World.

THE ARK OF THE COVENANT.

"Arise, O Lord, into thy rest; Thou, and the ark of Thy strength." The strong ark, the symbol of Thy majesty—strong, when Thou art

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1860.

PREACHERS' POST-OFFICES AND THE ADVOCATE.

We hope all our preachers who may desire to have the Advocate changed to other post-offices, will write us immediately. Give us the names of both the old and the new post-offices. And as soon as you can learn them, send us a list of all the post-offices in your respective charges. All preachers who receive an appointment from the Bishop, and those who are employed by presiding elders, are expected to act as agents, and will receive the paper gratis. No paper will be sent, or changed, unless it is ordered.

We ask the brethren to remember the resolution passed by the Mississippi Conference, calling upon the other patronizing Conferences to unite with her in raising the subscription list to 10,000 subscribers this year, in order that the paper may be enlarged and improved. We wish to enlarge just as soon as possible—at the beginning of the year, if we are sufficiently encouraged.

METHODIST UNITY IN VIRGINIA.

At the recent Conference, which assembled at Alexandria, Va., Nov. 21st, 1860, Bishop Paine presiding, the following interesting episode occurred. We condense it from the proceedings of the Conference published in the Alexandria Sentinel:

The Rev. Dr. McGwigan, a fraternal messenger from the Methodist Protestant Church, was introduced to the Conference, and addressed that body amid profound silence and attention. He thanked the Conference for his kind and courteous reception. The visit of their messenger (Dr. Doggett) had afforded a great degree of pleasure to his Conference. While he was present a delightful interchange of fraternal regards took place.—He (Dr. M.) was highly honored by his mission to this Conference. It was a high office to bear the fraternal regards of one Conference to another—especially from his Conference to this. His message was in good faith, and he knew it would be received as such. The plan of fraternal intercourse was instituted for very good reasons—as tending to open up a new era in Methodism in this country. He wished the system had been adopted earlier. If it had been, some things which both regretted would never have occurred. But let us thank God for what is done now, and let by-gones be by-gones. He firmly believed the wall of separation was falling, being broken down and demolished. He hoped the time was not far distant when there shall be found of that wall "not one stone upon another." He did not speak authoritatively, but he did know his Conference was willing, if not desirous, that the Conferences should take another step, if mutually harmonious and satisfactory.—They were similar in many respects. The few lines of difference seemed fading away. He hoped there was enough brotherly love to reconcile differences and let us be one people. He hoped he might be permitted to say it was desirable that nothing should occur—that nothing should be suffered to occur in our districts to mar the delightful state of feeling now existing between the Conferences. Should any difficulties arise—which God forbid—he trusted it might be considered a personal, local trouble, not a Conference difference, that it might be crushed out. Our prayer was surrounded, starved or destroy or hurt in the Holy Mount." We bid you from our hearts, "God speed". May you continue to win many souls to Christ, increase, edify the body of Christ, have abundant success in "spreading scriptural holiness over these lands," accomplish your glorious mission on earth, and have an abundant entrance admiaistered unto you in the kingdom of our Lord and Saviour.

Dr. Doggett said it was to him a sacred day, a day of gracious influence. He did not think it appropriate for him to formally respond to the sentiments just uttered as he was their last messenger to the Methodist Protestant Church. As he said before the M. P. Conference, there is now a converging of the different streams of Methodism to the original channel. He looked for a glorious union. He knew he uttered the sentiment of every brother present. In the present crisis they ought to be one in hand and heart. Christian union was the Palladium of our liberties. In such times it poured oil upon the troubled waters and soothed them to rest.

The Bishop said the expression of fraternal love fell sweetly upon our ears. He pitied the man who was not affected by such expressions of Christian affection. We cannot hate each other and be Christians. God knew it was his feeling ever since he was born again. He had seen divisions, he had struggled against them, he wept over them, he deeply deplored crimination and recrimination. He did not believe in sweeping denunciations on account of misunderstandings purely personal. Let them remain personal. Confine them and let them perish. He did not speak authoritatively, but he reciprocated for himself and for the Conference, the fraternal feeling expressed by Dr. McGwigan. We occupy a dignified position as a Christian Church. We neither upbraid others nor do we come down from our honorable position to invite any to join us. All must give us credit for love and honesty. He hoped these fraternal interchanges would continue.

Dr. Smith said he had seen several disruptions of Methodism. He prayed that his eyes might never behold another similar scene. He was for union of Methodism everywhere, especially at the South. He would rejoice for the Virginia Conference to retire to her old boundary and the flag of United Methodism wave over the soil of the glorious commonwealth. This could be done only by prayer and forbearance. May all of us breathe such a spirit before God! Let us trust in him through the intercession of the Son for a glorious consummation!

Mr. Dowling moved the appointment of a committee to respond in behalf of the Conference to the friendly message borne by Dr. McGwigan. Adopted.

The Bishop appointed the following: W. A. Smith, W. R. Rowsie, John E. Edwards, G. W. Nalley, W. H. Starr.

THE GEORGIA CONFERENCE.

On Wednesday, 28th November, this body met in Augusta, Ga. A large number of the members were present at roll-call. Bishop Pierce was present, in good health—indeed, quite recovered from the chills and fever from which he had been suffering for so many months.

The Bishop in his address to the Class made some strong points. Personal religion, full consecration to God and his work, was of first importance. If they enter the Conference they have but one work. This must be their resolution—from the heart. Any vacillation embarrasses. They must not come with the expectation of locating in a few years; but come to preach the gospel and keep to it. They must know the rules of the Church—study them frequently—ponder them—keep them. Be diligent—and here the Bishop happily expanded the precept. Punctuality was much insisted on. Be punctual in every duty. Bishop Soule had said that for forty years, when his name was called in the Conference, he was present. Yet Conferences open now with but few present. Punctuality is in many cases accepted as a substitute for talent, and increases the congregation, especially in the country. Meet the Class. The Discipline requires it. The promise here made requires it. The Bishop insisted upon care of children, forming them in classes, making every effort to lead them to Christ—and many other profitable topics did he develop and enforce in his brief exhortation.

Friday evening was devoted to the Anniversary Meeting of the Conference Sunday School Society. Perhaps no Conference is doing as much for Sunday Schools as this—so, at least, Dr. Huston reports. The Society was formed several years ago, and is much indebted to Pres. Bonnell for its efficient organization.

The Missionary Anniversary was held on Saturday night. The Report of the Board of Managers indicates a healthy and prosperous condition of our several missions. The amount collected will be about $28,000—a better collection than has yet been made, and very good, when we consider the pressure in the money market.—Rev. W. M. Crumley, Dr. Huston and Bishop Pierce were the speakers. The Society no longer makes a collection at the anniversary, the preachers making their own donations on their work.

GARIBALDI GREATER THAN EVER.

Garibaldi's last act is the noblest of all his life. When the brave soldier drew his sword to achieve the liberty of Italy, all men looked on with admiration. When that liberty was achieved—after a long struggle, ending at last in victory—if he had chosen to put himself at the head of the Government, which he might easily have done by using only half the arts of common-place politicians, his elevation would have been looked upon only as the legitimate reward for his brilliant exploits. But in the final hour of complete triumph, he rides to Turin, knocks at the palace gate, fixes the crown of Italy securely upon the head of Victor Emanuel, and then retires to the voluntary obscurity of his island home at Caprera—

"While all the world wonders."

Nobody can doubt that Garibaldi's soldiers—who love him as the French Grenadiers loved Napoleon—would have eagerly lifted him on their shoulders and carried him anywhere he pleased, even to the seat on which Victor Emanuel sits. But the brave and Christian soldier—loving God, liberty, and Italy—wished only to secure freedom for his country, and nothing for himself. Historians have not many such careers to record. The retirement of the great Emperor Charles V., who went with trembling step from a throne into a monastery, throwing the mantle of the government upon his son, presents no parallel of self-sacrificing heroism, for the old man felt his hand quivering under the weight of his scepter, and simply showed himself wise enough to get rid of a burden which he was growing too infirm to bear. The three great co-equal names are Quintus Cincinnatus—the obscure, yet illustrious Roman who rose from the plow to the dictatorship, and returned voluntarily from the dictatorship to the plow; the Emperor Diocletian, born a slave in Dalmatia, whose virtues and valor won for him the throne of the Roman Empire, yet who proved himself greater than an Emperor by resigning the crown, and retiring from the world's gaze to sit under the shadow of his grape-vines; and last, the great name in our own history, the Father of his country, who voluntarily retired from the head of the nation to the solitude of his country-seat, leaving behind him a perpetual memory greener than the banks of the Potomac. As these names are venerated in history, so will be the name of Garibaldi;—and the historic record will narrate how the Candle-maker of Staten Island became successively the Hunter of the Alps, the Soldier of Liberty, the second Cincinnatus of the Dictatorship, and last—and most noble of all—the humble farmer of Caprera!—Good men in all nations, speaking in many diverse languages, are at this moment uttering wishes of long life and perpetual fame to the Christian hero of Italy, Giu-

OUR MISSIONARY SYSTEM.

The Nashville Advocate contains a short letter from one of the "foremost" men of the Church, in which he indicates a policy in the carrying forward of our Missionary work, that we believe is beginning to be very generally regarded with favor. He says:

"Glad to see that there is a man prepared and detailed for Central America. Our foreign mission work looks small on the evangelical map now, and it is time to extend it, especially southward. This work is at our door, and should be carried forward vigorously. Would it not be well for the Louisiana, or some other Conference, to assume its direction, and the responsibility of its support? The practical mission work is too far removed from the people. The money and the management take such a roundabout direction in reaching the missionary and his field, that the Churches never feel the contact with either. If every Annual Conference had a foreign mission of its own, and was pledged for its support, the money and the prayers of the people would come up to the demand. The most of the Conferences are able to do it, and will do it, if some plan can be devised to bring the missionary interests home to their sympathies. Circumlocution and indirectness are evils alike in Church and State. I am sure our congregations would contribute more liberally, could they but feel a more direct interest and responsibility in some mission, the support of which should be thrown immediately upon them.

"Another thing which has been in our way in the extension of the foreign work, is its practical association and oneness with the work at home. If the two were kept apart, in name and in fact, both would fare better, and the foreign work would be much more developed. If the word mission were restricted to the last, and the home evangelization called by some other name, it would be all the better. Let the missionary idea be developed from this point, and let its funds, management, and advocacy be a distinct affair altogether, and we shall have something sharply defined, and, at length, understood and felt. What the Church has to do at home, and what she has to do abroad, are different things, and must be shaped to themselves, in name and in their oversight, before the Christian conscience will recognize them and respond to their appeals. Let the word mission mean the planting of religion in foreign parts alone, and let it stand for a great Christian idea, which is not met by giving the gospel to the slaves and the poor at home, and the missionary becomes at once an impressive type of character, and his work stands out with distinctive and independent claims upon the support of the Church. At present the idea of missions is too complex, nebulous, and even contradictory, to admit of that efficient advocacy which the subject merits."

METHODIST CONVERTS.

In reply to the remark of the Southern Churchman, that the great instability of Methodist converts may be traced to the want of sound conversion in the majority of those who apostatize, Rev. Paul Whitehead says, in the Richmond Christian Advocate:

"Hundreds and thousands of persons connected with families in other churches, have been converted in our meetings, and now form a large part of some of those churches—largest of all in the Episcopal Church. Indeed, in some places, its whole growth is of converts made among Methodists. I saw two confirmations in one parish of a diocese within ten or fifteen years past, consisting of fifteen or twenty persons, of whom all except one or two had been recently converted at Methodist revivals. Many persons raised in our church and converted in our revivals have been persuaded by Episcopal ministers to join their church. These ministers (the very same, in some instances we know of, who talk about excitement and sympathy in our meetings,) have declared their confidence in the piety of these converts, and treated and instructed them, after getting them into their fold, as people whom they had good reason to believe were regenerated."

VIRGINIA CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor:—I address you from the seat of the Virginia Annual Conference, which commenced its session last Wednesday, and is progressing slowly, but satisfactorily and successfully in the transaction of its varied business. Bishop Paine occupies the Chair, and in every way sustains the high reputation he has won as a superior presiding officer. All the interests of the Church, within the bounds of the Conference, are being discussed with great care and marked ability, and such measures proposed and adopted, as will best advance and secure the permanent prosperity of these interests. The Missionary Anniversary was one of stirring interest, and resulted in great good. Mr. Schon was present, and addressed the immense audience before him in his happiest style and with great power. The amount raised, in cash, and subscriptions, was about fourteen hundred dollars.

Mr. Schon also addressed the Young Preachers' Aid Society, and the congregation assembled to witness its anniversary with wonderful success. Over one thousand dollars was collected at the time. Those large amounts, contributed in the very midst of the financial embarrassments prevailing all over the country, indicate a spirit of great liberality on the part of the preachers and the citizens of this place.

The whole amount of Missionary money raised by the Conference is about twenty thousand dollars. The Conference collection is very small. The claimants on this fund will not receive more than fifty cents on the dollar. How sad the thought that poor widows and orphans and worn out preachers will obtain only half the amount allowed for their support!

The question, "Who are received on trial?" is not yet finished. The number admitted will be quite small. On yesterday and to-day there was an exciting debate in relation to the Richmond Christian Advocate. Dr. Roper, the editor, defended himself, ably and eloquently, against complaints as to his management of the paper. Measures are being devised by which the paper is to be released from debt and placed upon a self-sustaining basis. The Conference will not close before Friday.

In concluding this communication allow me to say a word for the College I represent. I am here on my way to New York to purchase materials for an Art Department to be connected with the Tuskaloosa Female College. I go to New York because the materials cannot be obtained elsewhere. One of the most accomplished Art teachers in the United States has been secured to take charge of this department. Young ladies will be taught the art of Drawing, Painting and Designing in the highest, most useful, attractive and elevating forms. They will be constantly exercised in sketching from nature and painting original pictures. The most novel, beautiful and practical feature of the department will be the drawing of original designs for calicoes, carpets, wall-paper, window-shades, &c., &c. If Southern manufactures are increased, this particular application of art will be of immense value to the South, and highly remunerative to those who undertake it.

R. M. Saunders.

Alexandria, Va., November 28, 1860.

LETTER FROM NEW YORK.

New York, Sunday night, Dec. 2d, 1860.

Mr. Editor: I arrived in this city on yesterday; I had the unexpected pleasure of meeting Dr. Schon, who is here for the purpose of prosecuting a claim of the M. E. Church, South, against the Missionary Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North, for at least ten thousand dollars. If this claim is not acknowledged and paid, he intends to seek redress at the bands of the law.

He is a noble man; devoted to the Church of his for the development and [illegible] and successfully He is deservedly popular as a preacher and a Church officer wherever he goes. May he be long spared to labor for the prosperity of our beloved Zion!

I went, to-day, to the Bedford-street M. E. Church, and worshipped with its congregation. It is one of the largest and most prosperous Methodist Churches in the city. About fifteen hundred persons crowd its aisles and worship at its altars every Sabbath. The Sabbath School numbers over six hundred scholars. Its pastor—Rev. J. Poissal—is an affable, intelligent, warm-hearted, zealous Christian minister. He is a warm friend to the South, and takes especial pains to invite Southern ministers to preach in his pulpit. A minister from the extreme South preached for him to-day, and was listened to, by the immense audience before him, with the most respectful and profound attention. Towards the close of his sermon he alluded to the present crisis in our national affairs, and said that God alone could deliver us from the dangers that threatened us, and therefore all Christians throughout our country should pray most earnestly for help and guidance in the midst of the frightful, prophetic darkness which was rapidly overspreading our sky and hiding from our view the sure and certain light which has hitherto directed us as a nation. During the delivery of this portion of his sermon, great excitement prevailed. Tears flowed freely, and "amen!" "God grant it!" and similar exclamations were heard in almost every part of the church. Under all the circumstances, it was a scene abundantly suggestive and one of thrilling interest. If you had been there, Mr. Editor, you would, no doubt, have felt as I did—that it was a great outrage, an unpardonable crime, now and forever, that the masses North had been so sadly and so terribly deluded by designing, ambitious, unprincipled politicians, and under the prompting and influence of this delusion, were pulling down the pillars which have hitherto upheld the glorious temple of our Union, as it was reared, beautified, adorned, and transmitted to us by our forefathers, and would involve, not only themselves in irreparable ruin, but also thousands of as true, honest, faithful, and christian patriots as ever walked the earth.

In the afternoon I attended an experience meeting at the same Church. Between six and eight hundred persons were present and participated in the exercises of the occasion. The meeting was conducted in true Methodist style and with old fashioned Methodist simplicity and zeal. The speakers followed each other in quick succession, and spoke briefly, pointedly, warmly and joyously of their present experience. Occasionally an appropriate song would be sung by the whole congregation with great effect. It was a precious season—one not to be forgotten. It will be an oasis in my past history to which my mind will often recur with pleasure and profit. May God continue to bless and prosper Bedford Street M. E. Church, and may her worthy Pastor be ever encompassed with as favorable and happy surroundings as are now about him!

R. M. Saunders.

Important Movement Among the Israelites.—There is a remarkable movement going on among the Israelites of France at the present time. There are more than one hundred Jews engaged in it. For months they have been preparing an association, which is called the Universal Israelite Alliance. Its aim is: 1. To work for the general emancipation and moral progress of Israelites. 2. To give effectual support to all who suffer, because they are Israelites. 3. To encourage publications for the foregoing object. This appeal is made not only to the 100,000 Jews of France, but to the scattered millions of Israelites throughout the world. One of its aims is to encourage agriculture and all manual arts, as well as many other objects that are, or ought to be, important for the best interests of the Jews. Jews of wealth and influence are said to be at the head of the movement.

☞ Bishop Andrew passed through our city to-day.

AUTHORS AND BOOKS.

New York, Dec. 3, 1860.

Last week, if I remember right, I had something to say about the autobiography of Rev. Dr. Carlyle, minister of Inverese. From the prospectus I extract the following particulars concerning what seems likely to be a very interesting work, even to us Americans: "It has long been known that this autobiography existed, and surprise has been expressed that it has never been published; but it was well to let it sleep awhile, for its prompt appearance would have been an act of cruelty towards surviving men or the near relations of the deported. It is not that the book is in the slightest degree slanderous or malicious, or that it even exaggerated any man's sins or failings; but the portraits of character are so powerful and so accurate—the remorseless artist looks so entirely to the truth and effect of his picture, that few indeed of his likenesses would please either the persons delineated or their partial friends, however much the world may enjoy so wonderful a gallery of life-like portraits. There has been no such delineation of the private life of our great men since Boswell's 'Johnson;' and it will give an idea of the number and eminence of the men in this group, when it is stated that it contains such names as Chatham, Lord Clive, Benjamin Franklin, Lord Mansfield, John Wilkes, Lord Bute, Lord North, Col. Barre, Hutcheson, Hume, Adam Smith, Robertson, Black, Andrew Crosbie, Henry Dundas, Andrew Millar, Dr. Hunter, Sir Gilbert Elliott, Lord Hailes, Charles Townshead, Dr. Dodd, McPherson (Ossian), Smollett, Thomson, Armstrong, Gray, Adam Ferguson, John Home, Lord Heathfield, Dr. Blair, Sir Robert Keith, Baron Mure, Dr. Gregory, Lord Loughborough, Governor Johnston, The Adams, Dr. Webster, Archibald Duke of Argyll, Garrick."

A couple of years ago a certain Reverend Doctor Leicester, Ambrose Sawyer, of somewhere in New England, published a new translation of the New Testament, in which it was confidently asserted, all the faults of previous translations were corrected, and in particular the supposed many wretched blunders of the accepted version were cured. The book was issued amidst a flutter of puffs, and with a blaze of advertising which has not been surpassed by the finning issue of any yellow-covered novel. And like a good many of the yellow-covered novels, it fell very very dead. Literally it went up like a rocket and came down like a stick. The good old version, for which Mr. Sawyer, in his very conceited preface, predicted a speedy downfall, still holds its place; and the Reverend Sawyer, who should rather have been called the Reverend Tinker, subsided into his natural obscurity, so far as this country was concerned. Recently, however, an effort has been made to introduce this new and improved version into England, but with like nonsuccess. It won't go down. The critics are rather merry over it as another American blunder, and content themselves with citing passages, to prove its unfitness.—This I will also do here; premising only that the special object of Mr. Sawyer, in making a new translation, was to substitute for hard words easy words, and to so modernize the text that it would need no explanation to the least educated reader. See how admirably this is accomplished in the following passage:

"1. Then the soldiers of the procurator taking Jesus to the Pretorium assembled about him the whole cohort, and stripped him, and put on him a crimson cloak, and making a crown of thorns they put it on his head, and a reed in his right hand; and they knelt before him, and mocked him, saying, Hail, King of the Jews! And they spit on him, and took the reed and beat him on his head. And when they had mocked him, they took the cloak off from him, and put on him his own clothes; and led him away to crucify him.

2. And going out, they found a Cyrenian, by the name of Simon, whom they compelled to bear his cross. And gave him vinegar [illegible] of a cranium, they he had tasted of it he would not drink."

An English critic says of this very justly: "We should like to know what idea the converted costermonger who had been persuaded by his district visitor to try the effect of church upon him for the first time, if he happened to hear this passage read out, would carry away of a prætorium and a cranium; the common hall and skull, if they did not convey to his mind any very clear idea, would at any rate be more intelligible to him than Mr. Sawyer's corrections. Moreover, there are at least two American vulgarisms in the passage: He 'tasted of it' is one, and 'by the name of Simon' is another; neither of which is justified by the Greek. 'When he had tasted thereof,' in the old version, though the last word is an unnecessary addition, does not offend by its vulgarity."

Again, see how absurdly he has paraphrased the touching story of the widow's mite:

"And sitting opposite to the Treasury, he observed how the multitude cast copper into the Treasury. And many rich men cast in much; and one poor widow came and cast in two lepta, which is a quadrans (4 mills). And calling his disciples, he said unto them, I tell you truly, that this poor widow has cast in more than all who have cast into the Treasury. For all [others] have cast in of their abundance; but she of her want has cast in all that she had, her entire living."

Is not this profane? And when a man translates "four mills," does he take it for granted that nobody but Americans are to read the New Testament? Does the point of the incident hang on the exact amount of the poor widow's contribution? And is there not something written about those who value the letter but despise the spirit? An English critic sums up the numerous sins of this new translation as follows: "We very much wish we hadn't seen the book, with its chilarchs and chanices, and good news, and change of minds; and yet, with strange inconsistency, Mr. Sawyer says the Gospel of Matthew, not the Good News of Matthew. He has the distinction of having reduced the New Testament to a condition of complete vulgarity; he has altered it so ingeniously, that it is sometimes hardly recognisable; he has cleverly removed nearly all its sublimity, its simplicity, its quaintness, and its touching pathos; and it is only when there was anything rather unintelligible that he has either left it in its original state, or labored conscientiously to increase its unintelligibility. He has altered the arrangement of the chapters and verses, in a manner which he assures us he believes a great improvement upon that in common use. We hope it may be so; but for our own part, the only advantage which we derived from it was the questionable one of being unable, for ever so long, to find out passages which we were in quest of. Mr. Sawyer complacently remarks in his preface, that 'this is not a work of compromises;' and that it 'adopts, except in the prayers, a thoroughly modern style.' Why not in the prayers? Surely it is not more irreverent to represent a Son addressing a Father in 'modern style,' than the Disciples conversing with Him whom they had acknowledged as the Son of God, with rather less reverence than a ragged-school boy towards his teacher. Besides, Mr. Sawyer does not adopt a thoroughly modern style in his conversation; his own conscience must have taken him to task, and forbidden him in some instances to modernise his expressions. For instance, in the second chapter of St. John, Mr. Sawyer translates, 'Jesus said to her, what have you to do with me, woman?' which clearly is neither a literal rendering (and yet Mr. Sawyer says his translation is literal) nor a modern method of expression. When did Mr. Sawyer ever hear a son, even in America, address his mother as "woman"? It is plain that the translator dared not face the consequences of his law of translation: 'Jesus says to her, what have you to do with me, Ma'am,' would have been too profane; and we merely write it here that we may show the utter absurdity of attempting to completely to modernise without completely profaning that book which we all reverence."

By a curious coincidence, the Presbyterian Publishing Committee of this country have just published a reprint of an old translation of Aonio Paleario's "Beneficium Christi," with an historical sketch of the book and its author, while at the same time, and quite independently, an English gentleman, Mr. M. Young, publishes in London "The Life and Times of Aonio Paleario."—The history of the book is most curious. Lord Macaulay said of it, in one of his papers in the Edinburgh Review, that "the Inquisitors proscribed it; and it is now as utterly lost as the Second Decade of Levy." But for once Lord Macaulay was mistaken. The curious history of its preservation is given in the following words in the present American reprint: "Dr. M'Crie, the Scotch historian, had learned from the will of one Thomas Bassinden, printer in Edinburgh, who died in 1577, that an English version of this treatise must have existed, previous to the death of Bassinden. This statement induced the Rev. John Ayre of England, to search for a volume which he thought might still survive in the English language. In 1843 or 1844 he succeeded in discovering it, and in 1847 reprinted it, stating in the introduction that no copy of the original Italian work was known to exist. This republication awakened a new interest in the subject, and led to the discovery by antiquaries of three copies in Italian, of one in French, one in German, and of a copy of the Croatic version, as well as of several English copies. It was found that there was in existence also a manuscript English translation of the book, in the library of Cambridge University. This version was made from the Italian by Edward Courtenay, the twelth Earl of Devonshire, in 1558, whilst lying a prisoner in the Tower. Its interest is increased by the fact that King Edward VI. of England had evidently read, and in two places had written in it. The English translation which has been republished in Great Britain was made from the French version, and printed at London in 1573. An Italian version, has also been re-issued at Pisa and at Florence, thus giving it again to the land of its birth. In German, Dutch, Danish, and French, it has likewise renewed its race; and it is now also given to the American public."

Paleario was one of the early Italian Reformers, a scholar, "a learned, eloquent, and correct man, in a land which, in the sixteenth century was renowned for its eloquence and learning." He was an admirer of Luther, and the other German Reformers; and at last, when he had attained a great age, suffered death for his liberal opinions—under the authority of Pope Pius V.—some say because of an incautious remark, that "the Inquisition was a deadly weapon against literary men."—But he had said many truer things than that—as for instance, that "the laws of the Gospel and those of the Papacy cannot hold together."

Messrs. Harper & Brothers have in press a work entitled, "The wits and Beaux of Society," by Grace and Phillip Wharton, whose work on "The Queens of Society," published last Spring, has been very popular. The present book gives some curious glimpses of fashionable life at various periods in the last three centuries. Here are some stories of the celebrated Beau Nash, from which one may gather the vast improvement which has taken place in manners, within a century. Such a man as Beau Nash would not now a-days be tolerated for a moment. Then he was the admired, not only of rough men but of virtuous women:

"Nash was, proverbially, more generous than just. He would not pay a debt if he could help it, but would give the very amount to the first friend that begged it. There was much ostentation in this, but my friend Nash was ostentatious. One friend bothered him day and night for 20*l.* that was owing to him, and he could not get it. Knowing his debtor's character he hit, at last, on a happy expedient, and sent a friend to borrow the money to [illegible] his urgent necessities. Out came the bank-note, carried it to the creditor, and when the latter again met Nash, he ought to have made him a pretty compliment on his honesty.

"He was not only the King of Bath, he was also the prince of gamblers. The man who, for a wager, once rode naked through a village on the back of a cow, found afterwards an easier, though scarcely more reputable, way of making money at the public gaming-tables. He drove about in a chariot, laming with heraldry, and drawn by six grays, with outriders, running footmen, and all the appendages which made an impression on the vulgar minds of the visiters of his kingdom. His dress was magnificent; his gold lace unlimited, his coats ever new; his hat alone was always of the same colour—white; and as the Emperor Alexander was distinguished by his purple tunic and Brummel by his bow, Emperor Nash was known all England over by his white hat.

"It is due to the King of Bath to say that, however much he gained, he always played fair. He even patronized young players, and after fleecing them, kindly advised them to play no more. When he found a man fixed upon ruining himself, he did his best to keep him from that suicidal act. This was the case with a young Oxonian, to whom he had lost money, and whom he invited to supper, in order to give him his parental advice. The fool would not take the Beau's counsel and 'came to grief.' Even noblemen sought his 'protection.' The Duke of Beaufort entered into a compact with him to save his purse, if not his soul. He agreed to pay Nash ten thousand guineas, whenever he lost the same amount at a sitting. It was a comfortable treaty for our Beau, who accordingly watched his Grace. Yet it must be said, to Nash's honour, that he once saved him from losing eleven thousand, when he had already lost eight, by reminding him of his compact. Such as play in those days! It is said that the Duke had afterwards to pay the line, from losing the stipulated sum at Newmarket.

"He displayed as much honesty with the young Lord Townshead, who lost to him his whole fortune, his estate, and even his carriage and horses—what madmen are gamblers!—and actually cancelled the whole debt, on condition my Lord should pay him £5,000 whenever he chose to claim it. To Nash's honour it must be said that he never came down upon the nobleman during his life: He claimed the sum from his executors, who paid it.

And now, about items of literary news. Dear Editor, do you remember the celebrated chapter which Dr. Johnson boasted he could repeat entire? It was a chapter in somebody's Natural History of Iceland. I came across the book a few weeks ago in one of the "Old Book Stores," which are such pleasant lounging places in our great and busy Babel. The chapter reads as follows, and I don't wonder the old lexicographer remembered it:

"Chapter xli.—Of the Snakes of Iceland.

"There are no snakes in Iceland."

So I have to say of the literary news of New York: "There is no literary news in New York."

And how can a poor fellow make bricks without either straw or hay?

Mrs. Susan Capers, relict of the late Bishop Capers, died in Charleston, S. C., on the morning of the 29th ult., after an illness of but a few hours. While a large family lament their heavy loss, the Church feels that it has been bereaved of a "mother in Israel." Her funeral services were conducted at Bethel Church on Saturday 1st ult, and her remains were then conveyed to Columbia, to be laid beside those of her revered husband.

A missionary writes that in the neighborhood of Runcheo, India, the Gospel is spreading like fire in a jungle. As many as eight hundred villagers have received the Gospel.

Visit of a Missionary.—One of the most successful female missionaries on record has just paid a visit to Montreal, Canada. We allude to Miss Fisk, of the Persian Mission of the American Board. When this lady went to Oroomiah, seventeen years ago, to labor as a teacher among the Nestorian women, there was not one who had any just conception of the truths of the gospel; and when she left last year, to re-visit her native land, she had the inexpressible pleasure of partaking of the communion with ninety-eight women, mostly her own pupils, many of whom are teachers in various parts of that country.

Preachers for Oregon.—The Pacific Methodist of the 1st ult., says: Our band of preachers—Fisher, Fenwell, Newton, Culp, Hopkins, Merlin, Rice and Kelsay—are most of them on their way to Oregon. Part go by land and the rest by water. May all these dear brethren be preserved during their journey, and the Church of God in Oregon be edified abundantly and a multitude of the people be saved by their labors. They are all true men."

The Eternal City.—At this moment it may be interesting to state that the population of the "Eternal City" is about one hundred and seventy-five thousand, divided into fifty-four parishes, with 1,280 priests, 2,092 monks and members of religious orders, 1,590 nuns, and 547 ecclesiastical pupils. Exclusive of Jews, the number of inhabitants not acknowledging the Roman Church is 412. There are seventy Cardinals composing the Sacred College, six of whom are Bishops, fifty Priests and fourteen Deacons. Bayard Taylor says there are more schools in Rome in proportion than in New York.

APPOINTMENTS OF MEMPHIS CONFERENCE.

Memphis Dist.—T L Roswell, P E; Wesley Chapel, Wm T Harris; Asbury Chapel, Robert Martin; Union Charge, Thos T Ashby; McKendree and Asbury colored mission, Jos H Harris; Memphis German mission, to be supplied; Davidson's chapel, M D Fly; Greenwood station and Cullins' chapel, L H Davis; Hernando stations, Amos Kendall; Nobleville circuit, Phillip Tuggle, J W Mitchell; Ed Williams, sup; Germantown colored mission, to be supplied; Horn Lake, Thomas P David-ony Forest chapel and Edgewood and colored mission, B T Clowe; Randolph, A P Sage; Randolph colored mission, Marcus H Cullum; Mt Zion Circuit, T P Hobman; Book and Tract Depository, S Watson and S W Moore, agents; State Female College, Charles Cullins, President; Editor of the Christian Advocate, S Watson.

Somerville Dist.—L D Mullins, P E; Somerville station, James W Kirk; R V Taylor, sup; Macon circuit, Wm M McFerrin; Macon colored mission, John W Walkup; Wesley circuit, John Ratdle, J H Evans; J T Baskerville, sup; Wesley colored mission, to be supplied; Raleigh, Daniel F Tabb; Brownsville and Prospect, John W Shelton; Brownsville circuit, Bryant Medlin, F M Morris; J M Scott, sup; LaGrange station, A C Smith; LaGrange circuit, Jas N Temple, G W Hochman; W N Morgan sup; LaGrange colored mission, N A H Bryant; Bolivar, F A Wilkerson; Rock Spring, Henry Bell.

Jackson Dist.—G W H Harris, P E; Jackson station, Geo K Brooks; L Lee, sup; Jackson colored mission, A W Jones; Jackson circuit, N Sullivan; Ms Pinson, P J Kelsey; Denmark circuit, R S Harris; J H Garrett; Cagleville circuit, William S Harrison, J R Byrns; Byersburg, N P Ramsey, H F Peeples; R N Tarrant, sup; Memphis Conference Female Institute, A W Jones.

Trenton Dist.—J A Vincent, P E; Paris station, E H Bishop; Paris circuit, E E Hamilton, E H Allen; Bleeden circuit, J R Sykes, H B Avery; Trenton, W H Leigh; Trenton circuit, R H Burns, R H Mahon; D C McCutcheon, sup; Pleasant Plains, J L Burrow; Huntingdon, Simpson Weaver; Camden, Wm H Ramsey; Lexington, B A Hayes; Morgan's creek, John W. Mellin; Andrew College, E C Slater, Pres; Agent for Andrew College, W H F Halford.

Paducah Dist.—F Hynam, P E; Paducah station, G Jones; Paducah circuit, one to be supplied, J H Cooper; Clinton, A L Hunsacker, J H Slaughter; Columbus, J W Mathis; Hickman station, R H Rosenhoover; Hickman circuit, J H Witt, N B Basford; Madrid Bend, D C Johnson; Obion mission, Manlif H Robinson; Fulbrevity, ——; Murray circuit, J H McClitchcon; Benton, A K Miller; Bryansburg, Thos C Ellis.

Iuka Dist.—H D Howell, P E; Iuka station, Ruckus Smith; Iuka circuit, John P Webb; Jacinto circuit, Matthew M Taylor; Rienzi, R A Nibblett; Jas Gains, sup; Rienzi circuit, Jas M Hampton; R Ellis, sup; Ripley, Jos P Duncer; Ripley circuit, A S Hamilton; Middletown, H G Porter; Montezuma, J M Pratt; Jack's creek mission, Joseph Johnson; Decatur ville, H S Swit; Adamsville, John F Williams.

Aberdeen Dist.—M J Blackwell, P E; Aberdeen station, J T Meriweather; Aberdeen colored mission, to be supplied; Aberdeen circuit, Jas P Acton; Prairie colored mission, T J Lowery; Monroe colored mission, John Young; Houston circuit, R A Umstead; Okabena and Verona, J T C Collins; Okalona circuit, Wm H Owen; Richmond, Joseph T Tally; Richmond colored mission, to be supplied; Fulton, H H Covington; Good Spring mission, W W Pearson; Carrollville, Thos L Duke; Pontotoc station, Thos H Davenport; Pontotoc circuit, Jos H Spencer, Wm L Keistler.

Grenada Dist.—John Moss, P E; Grenada and colored mission, Isaac Ebert; Grenada circuit and mission, D J Mauldin; [illegible] circuit, James Perry; [illegible] Thomas, one to be supplied; J W Bates, sup; Charleston circuit, R G Ramy; Richland circuit, to be supplied; Bascom Female Seminary, Samuel D Ogsburn; President.

Holly Springs Dist.—J H Brooks, P E; Holly Springs station, A J See; Holly Springs circuit and mission, Thos J Gooch, J H Chalres; Byhalia circuit and colored mission, Elias Jackson, J W Poston; C H Harris, sup; Chulahoma, E B Plummer, J Y Fly; Chulahoma colored mission, to be supplied; Sardis and colored mission, J A Fife, C H Gregory; Marshall circuit, M H Ford, Wm S Paine; Thos Joiner, sup; Marshall colored mission, M M Dunn; Salem and colored mission, one to be supplied, G W Farmer; Hickory Flat mission, B W Stubbs; S Carson, sup; Corinth station, M V Wells; Franklin Female College, Jos E Douglas, President; Byhalia Female Institute, P J Echols, President.

Mississippi Bottom Dist.—Wm McMahon, P E; Commerce mission, J S Smotherman; Tunica, F A Owen; Friar's Point, Jas M Harton, F C Pearson; Concordia, C C Glover; one to be supplied by J C Lowe; Benlah, J F Marcum; Husbpuckany mission, to be supplied; Traveling Agent for Book and Tract Depository, J W Knott; Wm C Johnson, Agent of American Bible Society; Wm T Sullivan, missionary to Japan; S W Speer, transferred to Mississippi Conference; Henry T Lewis, transferred to Florida Conference; Wade H Frost, transferred to Louisiana Conference; John P Stanfield, transferred to Ouachita Conference, and appointed to Red Fork circuit; G W Carter, transferred to Texas Conference, and appointed to Soule University. Next Conference to be held at Jackson, Tennessee.

APPOINTMENTS OF TEXAS CONFERENCE.

Galveston Dist.—James McLeod, P E; Galveston station, James M Wesson. Bryant T Peel, supernumerary. Galveston Colored Mission, to be supplied; Houston Station, Wm H Seat; Houston Mission and Colored Mission, Wm R Fayle; Harmony Grove, James Rice; Columbia Station and Colored Mission, Joshua H Shapard; Brazoria, Oscar M Addison; Sandy Point Circuit, Thos F Windsor; Richmond Station, Joel T Daves; Union Chapel, R Alexander; Fort Bend Colored Mission, Geo D Parker; Hodge's Bend and Colored Mission, A B Du

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

DECEMBER 12, 1860.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

Citizens of the Senate and House of Representatives:

Throughout the year since our last meeting, the country has been eminently prosperous in all its material interests. The general health has been excellent; our harvests have been abundant, and plenty prevails throughout the land. Our commerce and manufactures have yielded fair and ample returns. In short, a kind Providence has filled the whole country with the means of comfort, and has scattered with profusion the elements of future wealth, while He has graciously permitted us to enjoy in peace the fruits of industry and the blessings of health. Nor has the political condition of the country been less favorable. Although we have recently passed through a presidential contest, which, in most countries, has been productive of violence and civil war, we have enjoyed unusual tranquillity. The voice of the people has been heard, and their will has been obeyed. Our institutions have been subjected to the severest test, and have come forth from it with increased popularity. Our growth as a nation in the midst of the most gigantic progress in all the elements of material prosperity has been regular and continuous, and we have passed the limit which, in the settlement of countries, usually separates the emigrant from the citizen. Our relations with foreign powers have been preserved in peace, notwithstanding the unsettled state of European politics, and the wars which have prevailed in some portions of the world. Our navy has been steadily increased, and is now in a condition of high efficiency. Our flag has been kept in honor on every sea, and American citizens have been protected in the enjoyment of their rights in every quarter of the globe. Our free institutions, and the facility which they afford for the peaceful correction of errors in legislation, have given to us a degree of power and influence among the nations of the earth which our forefathers could not have anticipated even at the close of the glorious revolution which secured our independence. Under the favor of Divine Providence, we have thus been placed in circumstances of unexampled happiness, which should call forth our devout gratitude and inspire us with the firm resolve to transmit unimpaired to our children the blessings which we have inherited.

Such, fellow-citizens, is a brief but faithful picture of our country at the present moment. How long we shall continue to occupy this proud position will depend upon ourselves. If we maintain the Constitution in the spirit in which it was framed by the patriots who achieved our independence, and in which it has been administered during the most prosperous periods of our history, we may look forward to many generations of increasing greatness and happiness. But if we reject the lessons of experience, and violate the compact which binds the States together, we may well doubt whether we deserve the continuance of the blessings which we enjoy.

Throughout the year since our last meeting, the agitation of the slavery question has been eminently prosperous in all its material interests. The general health has been excellent; our harvests have been abundant, and plenty prevails throughout the land. Our commerce and manufactures have yielded fair and ample returns. In short, a kind Providence has filled the whole country with the means of comfort, and has scattered with profusion the elements of future wealth, while He has graciously permitted us to enjoy in peace the fruits of industry and the blessings of health. Nor has the political condition of the country been less favorable. Although we have recently passed through a presidential contest, which, in most countries, has been productive of violence and civil war, we have enjoyed unusual tranquillity. The voice of the people has been heard, and their will has been obeyed. Our institutions have been subjected to the severest test, and have come forth from it with increased popularity. Our growth as a nation in the midst of the most gigantic progress in all the elements of material prosperity has been regular and continuous, and we have passed the limit which, in the settlement of countries, usually separates the emigrant from the citizen. Our relations with foreign powers have been preserved in peace, notwithstanding the unsettled state of European politics, and the wars which have prevailed in some portions of the world. Our navy has been steadily increased, and is now in a condition of high efficiency. Our flag has been kept in honor on every sea, and American citizens have been protected in the enjoyment of their rights in every quarter of the globe. Our free institutions, and the facility which they afford for the peaceful correction of errors in legislation, have given to us a degree of power and influence among the nations of the earth which our forefathers could not have anticipated even at the close of the glorious revolution which secured our independence. Under the favor of Divine Providence, we have thus been placed in circumstances of unexampled happiness, which should call forth our devout gratitude and inspire us with the firm resolve to transmit unimpaired to our children the blessings which we have inherited.

Such, fellow-citizens, is a brief but faithful picture of our country at the present moment. How long we shall continue to occupy this proud position will depend upon ourselves. If we maintain the Constitution in the spirit in which it was framed by the patriots who achieved our independence, and in which it has been administered during the most prosperous periods of our history, we may look forward to many generations of increasing greatness and happiness. But if we reject the lessons of experience, and violate the compact which binds the States together, we may well doubt whether we deserve the continuance of the blessings which we enjoy.

Self-preservation is the first law of nature, and it has been implanted in the heart of man by the hand of his Creator with the wisest purpose; and no political maxim can be more sacred than that which proclaims the right of self-defence. It is perfectly legitimate, when the necessity exists, to repel force by force, and to employ as much violence as may be necessary to protect ourselves against injury. Unless this shall be done without unnecessary delay, it is impossible for any human power to save the Union.

The Southern States, standing on the basis of the Constitution, have a right to demand this act of justice from the States of the North. Should it be refused, then the Constitution, to which all the States are parties, will have been wilfully violated by one portion of them in a provision essential to the domestic security and happiness of the remainder. In that event the injured States, after having first used all peaceful and constitutional means to obtain redress, would be justified in revolutionary resistance to the Government of the Union.

I have purposely confined my remarks to revolutionary resistance, because it has been claimed within the last few years that any State, whenever this shall in its sovereign will and pleasure, may secede from the Union, in accordance with the Constitution, and without any violation of the Constitutional rights of the other members of the Confederacy. That as each became parties to the Union by the vote of its own people assembled in Convention, so any one of them may retire from the Union in a similar manner by the vote of such a convention.

In order to justify secession as a constitutional remedy it must be on the principle that the Federal Government is a mere voluntary association of States, to be dissolved at pleasure by any one of the contracting parties. If this be so, the Confederacy is a rope of sand, to be penetrated and dissolved by the first adverse wave of public opinion in any of the States. In this manner our thirty-three States may resolve themselves into as many petty, jarring, and hostile republics, each one retiring from the Union without responsibility; whenever any sudden excitement might impel them to such a course. By this process a Union might be entirely broken into fragments in a few weeks, which cost our forefathers many years of toil, privation and blood to establish.

Such a principle is wholly inconsistent with the history as well as the character of the Federal Constitution. After it was framed, with the greatest deliberation and care, it was submitted to conventions of the people of the several States for ratification. Its provisions were discussed at length in these bodies, composed of the first men of the country. Its opponents contended that it conferred powers upon the Federal Government dangerous to the rights of the States, whilst its advocates maintained that under a fair construction of the instrument there was no foundation of such apprehensions. In that mighty struggle between the first intellects of this or any other country, it never occurred to any individual, either among its opponents or advocates, to assert, or even to insinuate, that their efforts were all vain labor, because the moment that any State felt herself aggrieved she might secede from the Union. What a crushing argument would this have proved against those who dreaded that the rights of the States would be endangered by the Constitution. The truth is that it was not until many years after the origin of the Federal Government that such a proposition was first advanced. It was then met and refuted by the conclusive arguments of General Jackson, who in his message of 16th January, 1833, transmitting the nullifying ordinance of South Carolina to Congress, employs the following language: "The right to the people of a single State to abolish themselves at will, and without the consent of the other States, from their most solemn obligations, and hazard the liberty and happiness of the millions composing this Union, can not be acknowledged. Such authority is believed to be utterly repugnant both to the principles upon which the General Government is constituted and to the objects which it was expressly formed to attain."

It is not pretended that any clause in the Constitution gives countenance to such a theory. It is altogether founded upon inference, not from any language contained in the instrument itself, but from the sovereign character of the several States by which it was ratified. But is it beyond the power of a State, like an individual, to yield a portion of its sovereign rights to secure the remainder? In the language of Mr. Madison, who has been called the father of the Constitution: "It was formed by the States—that is, by the people in each of the States, acting in their highest sovereign capacity; and formed consequently by the same authority which formed the State Constitutions."

Nor is the Government of the United States, created by the Constitution, less a Government in the strict sense of the term, within the sphere of its powers, than the governments created by the constitutions of the States are, within their several spheres. It is, like them, organized into legislative, executive, and judiciary departments. It operates, like them, directly on persons and things; and, like them, it has at command a physical force for executing the powers committed to it.

It was intended to be perpetual, and not to be annulled at the pleasure of any one of the contracting parties. The old articles of confederation were entitled "Articles of Confederation and Perpetual Union between the States;" and by the 13th article it is expressly declared that "the articles of this Confederation shall be inviolably observed by every State, and the Union shall be perpetual." The preamble to the Constitution of the United States, having express reference to the articles of Confederation, recites that it was established "in order to form a more perfect union." And yet it is contended that this "more perfect union" does not include the essential attribute of perpetuity.

But that the Union was designed to be perpetual appears conclusively from the nature and extent of the powers conferred by the Constitution on the Federal Government. These powers embrace the very highest attributes of national sovereignty. They place both the sword and the purse under its control. Congress has power to make war, and to make peace; to raise and support armies and navies, and to conclude treaties with foreign Governments. It is invested with the power to coin money, and to regulate the value thereof. In short, all the means necessary or proper for the effectual execution of the delegated powers are within its hands. In the language of Mr. Madison, it "is a complete Government; it has all the means within itself, and in its own hands, for every purpose." Can it be conceived that a Government possessing such transcendent powers as these was created by the parties to it for a mere temporary object, which was to be defeated by the secession of any one of its members? Such secession may be said to be inconsistent with the history of the Federal Government, which shows that, from the beginning, it has been the steady object of the Constitution to enlarge the sphere of its power and influence by the admission of new States into the Union. Four States have been admitted into the Union since the first adoption of the Constitution. In all these cases the assent of each State to the admission was implied by the act of admission. Can it be seriously contended that the act of admitting a State into the Union was intended to confer upon her the power of breaking up the Government at her pleasure and without the consent of her sister States?

But the Constitution has not only conferred these high powers upon Congress, but it has adopted effectual means to restrain the States from interfering with their exercise. For that purpose it has, in strong prohibitory language, expressly declared that "no State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation; grant letters of marque and reprisal; coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything but gold and silver coin a legal tender in payment of debts; pass any bill of attainder, ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligation of contracts." Moreover, "with out the consent of Congress, no State shall lay any impost or duties on any imports or exports, except what may be absolutely necessary for executing its inspection laws;" and, if they exceed this amount, the excess shall belong to the United States.

And "no State shall, without the consent of Congress, lay any duty of tonnage; keep troops, or ships of war, in time of peace; enter into any agreement or compact with another State, or with a foreign power; or engage in war, unless actually invaded, or in such imminent danger as will not admit of delay."

In order still further to secure the uninterrupted exercise of these high powers against State interposition, it is provided "that this Constitution and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof; and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the Constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding."

The solemn sanction of religion has been superadded to the obligations of official duty, and all senators and representatives of the United States, all members of the State legislatures, and all executive and judicial officers, "both of the United States and the several States, shall be bound by oath or affirmation to support this Constitution."

In order to carry into effect these powers, the Constitution has established a perfect Government in all its forms—legislative, executive and judicial; and this Government, to the extent of its powers, acts directly upon the individual citizens of every State, and executes its own decrees by the agency of its own officers. In this respect it differs entirely from the Government under the old Confederation, which was confined to making requisitions on the States in their sovereign character. This left it in the discretion of each whether to obey or refuse, and they often declined to comply with such requisitions. It thus became necessary, for the purpose of removing this barrier, and in order to form a more perfect Union, "to establish a Government which could act directly upon the people, and execute its own laws without the intervention of the agencies of the States. This has been accomplished by the Constitution of the United States.

In short, the Government created by the Constitution, and deriving its authority from the sovereign people of each of the several States, has precisely the same right to exercise its power over the people of all these States, in the enumerated cases, that each one of them possesses over subjects not delegated to the United States but "reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people."

To the extent of the delegated powers the Constitution of the United States is such a part of the Constitution of each State, and is as binding upon its people, as though it had been textually inserted therein.

This Government, therefore, is a great and powerful Government, invested with all the attributes of sovereignty over the special subjects to which its authority extends. Its framers never intended to implant in its bosom the seed of its own destruction, nor were they at its creation guilty of the absurdity of providing for its own dissolution. It was not intended by its framers to be the baseless fabric of a vision which, at the touch of the enchanter, would vanish into thin air, but on a substantial and mighty fabric, capable of resisting the slow decay of time and of defying the storms of ages. Indeed, we may the jealous patriotism of that day have indulged fears that a Government of such high powers might violate the reserved rights of the States; and wisely did they adopt the rule of a strict construction of these powers to prevent the danger! But they did not fear, nor had they any reason to imagine, that the Constitution would ever be so interpreted as to enable any State by her own act, and without the consent of her sister States, to discharge her people from all or any of their Federal obligations.

It may be asked, then, are the people of the States without redress against the tyranny and oppression of the Federal Government? By no means. The right of resistance on the part of the governed against the oppression of their governments can not be denied. It exists independently of all constitutions, and has been exercised at all periods of the world's history. Under it old governments have been destroyed, and new ones have taken their place. It is embodied in strong and express language in our own Declaration of Independence. But the distinction must ever be observed, that this is revolution against an established Government, and not voluntary secession from it by virtue of an inherent constitutional right. In short, let us look the danger fairly in the face: secession is neither more nor less than revolution. It may or it may not be a justifiable revolution, but still it is revolution.

What, in the mean time, is the responsibility and true position of the Executive? He is bound by solemn oath before God and the country "to take care that the laws be faithfully executed," and from this obligation he can not be absolved by any human power. But what if the performance of this duty, in whole or in part, has been rendered impracticable by events over which he could have exercised no control? Such, at the present moment, is the case throughout the State of South Carolina, so far as the laws of the United States to secure the administration of justice by means of the Federal Judiciary are concerned. All the Federal officers within its limits, through whose agency alone these laws can be carried into execution, have already resigned. We no longer have a district judge, a district attorney, or a marshal, in South Carolina. In fact, the whole machinery of the Federal Government, necessary for the distribution of remedial justice among the people, has been demolished; and it would be difficult, if not impossible, to replace it.

The only acts of Congress on the statute book, bearing upon this subject, are those of the 28th February, 1795, and 3d March, 1807. These authorize the President, after he shall have ascertained that the marshal with his posse comitatus is unable to execute civil or criminal process in any particular case, to call forth the militia and employ the army and navy to aid him in performing this service, having first by proclamation commanded the insurgents "to disperse and retire peaceably to their respective abodes, within a limited time." This duty can not by possibility be performed in a State where no judicial authority exists to issue process, and where there is no marshal to execute it, and where even if there were such an officer, the entire population would constitute one solid combination to resist him.

The bare enumeration of these provisions proves how inadequate they are without further legislation to overcome a united opposition in a single State, not to speak of other States who may place themselves in a similar attitude. Congress alone has power to decide whether the present laws can or can not be amended so as to carry out more effectually the objects of the Constitution.

The same insuperable obstacles do not lie in the way of executing the laws for the collection of the customs. The revenue still continues to be collected, as heretofore, at the custom-house in Charleston; and should the collector unfortunately resign, a successor may be appointed to perform his duty.

Then in regard to the property of the United States in South Carolina. This has been purchased for a fair equivalent, "by the consent of the Legislature of the State," "for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals," &c., and over these the authority "to exercise exclusive legislation," has been expressly granted by the Constitution to Congress. It is not believed that any attempt will be made to expel the United States from this property by force; but if in this I should prove to be mistaken, the officer in command of the forts has received orders to act strictly on the defensive. In such a contingency the responsibility for consequences would rightfully rest upon the heads of the assailants.

Apart from the execution of the laws, so far as this may be practicable, the Executive has no authority to decide what shall be the relations between the Federal Government and South Carolina. He has been invested with no such discretion. He possesses no power to change the relations heretofore existing between them, much less to acknowledge the independence of that State. This would be to invest a mere Executive officer with the power of recognizing the existence of a sovereign power, annihilating the Union, and requiring from the free citizens of a free State as a constituent member of the Confederacy.

But, if we possessed this power, would it be wise to exercise it under existing circumstances? The object would doubtless be to preserve the Union. War would not only present the most effectual means of destroying it, but would banish all hope of its peaceable reconstruction. Besides, in the fraternal conflict a vast amount of blood and treasure would be expended, rendering future reconciliation between the States impossible. In the meantime, who can foretell what would be the sufferings and privations of the people during its existence?

The fact is, that our Union rests upon public opinion, and can never be cemented by the blood of its citizens shed in civil war. If it can not live in the affections of the people, it must soon die and perish. Congress possesses many means of preserving it by conciliation; but the sword was not placed in their hand to preserve it by force.

It may be permitted solemnly to invoke my countrymen to pause and deliberate, before they determine to destroy this, the grandest temple which has ever been dedicated to human freedom since the world began? It has been consecrated by the blood of our fathers, by the glories of the past, and by the hopes of the future. The Union has already made us the most prosperous and, ere long, will, if preserved, render us the most powerful nation on the face of the earth. In every foreign region of the globe the title of American citizen is held in the highest respect, and when pronounced in a foreign land it causes the hearts of our countrymen to swell with honest pride. Surely when we reach the brink of the yawning abyss, we shall recoil with horror from the last fatal plunge. If such a dreadful calamity as the dissolution of the Union should ever overtake us, posterity will scarcely believe that the hopes of the world from human progress, and the fair prospects which have invited the people of every clime to our shores, could be thus suddenly and entirely blasted. Such a catastrophe would be greeted with shouts of triumph throughout the world, and would be hailed as the downfall of free government throughout the world would be enshrouded the nations. Our example for more than eighty years would not only be lost, but it would be quoted as a conclusive proof that man is unfit for self-government.

It is not every wrong—nay, it is not every grievous wrong—which can justify a resort to such a fearful alternative. This ought to be the last desperate remedy of a despairing people, after every other constitutional means of conciliation had been exhausted. We should reflect that under this free Government there is an ever-active and free public opinion. The slavery question, like everything human, will have its day. I firmly believe that it has already reached and passed the culminating point. But if, to the midst of the existing excitement, the Union shall perish, the evil may then become irreparable. Congress can contribute much to avert it by proposing and recommending to the legislatures of the several States such amendments to the Constitution as may be found necessary for existing evils, which the Constitution has itself provided for its own preservation. This has been tried at different critical periods of our history, and always with eminent success. It is to be found in the 5th article providing for its own amendment. Under this article amendments have been proposed by two thirds of both houses of Congress, and have been "ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the several States," and have consequently become parts of the Constitution. To this process the country is indebted for the clause prohibiting Congress from passing any law respecting an establishment of religion, or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press, or of the right of petition. To this we are, also, indebted for the Bill of Rights, which secures the people against any abuse of power by the Federal Government. Such were the apprehensions justly entertained by the friends of State rights at that period, as to render necessary the incorporation of these principles in the Constitution, or it never would have received the requisite support for its adoption. Without these amendments, it is more than doubtful whether the Constitution could have long survived.

Again, the Constitution was amended by the same process after the election of President Jefferson by the House of Representatives, in February, 1803. This amendment was rendered necessary to prevent a recurrence of the dangers which had seriously threatened the existence of the Government during the pendency of that election. The article for its own amendment was intended to secure the amicable adjustment of conflicting constitutional questions like the present, which might arise between the governments of the States and that of the United States. This appears from contemporaneous history. In this connection, I shall merely call attention to a few sentences in Mr. Madison's justly-celebrated report in 1799, to the Legislature of Virginia. In this he ably and conclusively defended the resolutions of the preceding Legislature against the strictures of several other State Legislatures. These were mainly founded upon the protest of the Virginia Legislature against the "Alien and Sedition Acts," as "palpable and alarming infractions of the Constitution." In pointing out the peaceful and constitutional remedies, and he referred to none but such as were authorized to resort, on such occasions, he concludes by saying, "that the Legislatures of the States might have made a direct representation to Congress with a view to obtain a rescinding of the two obnoxious acts, or they might have represented to their respective Senators in Congress their wish that two-thirds thereof would propose an explanatory amendment to the Constitution, or two-thirds of themselves, if such had been their option, might, by an application to Congress, have obtained a Convention for the same object."

This is the very course which I earnestly recommend in order to obtain an "explanatory amendment" of the Constitution on the subject of slavery. This might originate with Congress or the State Legislatures, as may be deemed most advisable to attain the object.

The explanatory amendment might be confined to the final settlement of the true construction of the Constitution on three special points.

1. An express recognition of the right of property in slaves in the States where it now exists or may hereafter exist.

2. The duty of protecting this right in all the common Territories throughout their territorial existence, and until they shall be admitted as States into the Union, with or without slavery, as their constitutions may prescribe.

3. As the recognition of the right of the master to have his slave, who has escaped from one State to another, restored and "delivered up" to him, and of the validity of the fugitive slave law enacted for this purpose, together with a declaration that all State laws impairing or defeating this right are violations of the Constitution, and are consequently null and void.

It may be objected that this construction of the Constitution has already been settled by the Supreme Court of the United States, and what more ought to be required? The answer is, that a very large proportion of the people of the United States still contest the correctness of this decision, and never will cease from agitation and admit its binding force until clearly established by the people of the several States in their sovereign character. Such an explanatory amendment would, it is believed, forever terminate the existing dissensions and restore peace and harmony among the States.

It ought not to be doubted that such an appeal to the arbitrament established by the Constitution itself would be received with favor by all the States of the Confederacy. In any event it ought to be tried in a spirit of conciliation before any of these States shall separate themselves from the Union.

When I entered upon the duties of the Presidential office, the aspect neither of our foreign nor domestic affairs was at all satisfactory. We were involved in dangerous complications with several nations, and two of our Territories were in a state of revolution against the Government. A reclamation of the African slave trade had numerous and powerful advocates. Unlawful military expeditions were countenanced by many of our citizens, and were suffered, in defiance of the efforts of the Government, to escape from our shores, for the purpose of making war upon the unoffending people of neighboring republics with whom we were at peace. In addition to these and other difficulties, we experienced a revulsion in monetary affairs soon after my advent to power, of unexampled severity and of ruinous consequences to all the great interests of the country. When we take a retrospect of what was then our condition and contrast this with its material prosperity at the time of the late Presidential election, we have abundant reason to return our grateful thanks to that merciful Providence which has never forsaken us as a nation in all our past trials.

OUR FOREIGN RELATIONS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Our relations with Great Britain are of the most friendly character. Since the commencement of my Administration the two dangerous questions arising from the Clayton and Bulwer treaty and from the right of search claimed by the British Government, have been amicably and honorably adjusted.

The discordant constructions of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty between the two Governments which, at different periods of the discussion, bore a threatening aspect, have resulted in a final settlement entirely satisfactory to this Government. In my last annual message I informed Congress that the British Government had proposed to negotiate a treaty arrangement with the Republics of Honduras and Nicaragua, in pursuance of the understanding between the two Governments. It is nevertheless confidently expected that this good work will ere long be accomplished." This confident expectation has since been fulfilled. Her Britannic Majesty concluded a treaty with Honduras on the 28th November, 1859, and with Nicaragua on the 28th August, 1860, relinquishing the Mosquito protectorate. Besides, by the former, the Bay Islands are recognized as a part of the Republic of Honduras. It may be observed that the stipulations of these treaties conform in every important particular to the amendments adopted by the Senate of the United States to the treaty concluded at London on the 17th October, 1856, between the two Governments. It will be recollected that the treaty was rejected by the British Government because of its objection to the just and important amendment of the senate to the article relating to Tiutan and the other islands in the Bay of Honduras.

It must be a source of sincere satisfaction to all classes of our fellow citizens, and especially to those engaged in foreign commerce, that the claim, on the part of Great Britain, forcibly to visit and search American merchant vessels on the high seas in time of peace, has been abandoned. This was by far the most dangerous question to the peace of the two countries which has existed since the war of 1812. Whilst it remained open they might at any moment have been precipitated into war. This was rendered manifest by the exasperated state of public feeling throughout our entire country, produced by the forcible search of American merchant vessels by British cruisers on the coast of Cuba, in the spring of 1858. The American people hailed with general acclaim the orders of the Secretary of the Navy to our naval force in the Gulf of Mexico, "to protect all vessels of the United States on the high seas from search or detention by the vessels of war of any other nation. These orders might have produced an immediate collision between the naval forces of the two countries. This was most fortunately prevented by an appeal to the justice of Great Britain and to the law of nations as expounded by her own most eminent jurists.

The only question of any importance which still remains open, is the disputed title between the two Governments to the island of San Juan, in the vicinity of Washington Territory. As this question is still under negotiation, it is not deemed advisable at the present moment to make any other allusion to the subject.

The recent visit of the Prince of Wales, in a private character, to the people of this country, has proved to be in most auspicious event. In its consequences, it can not fail to increase the kindred and kindly feelings which I trust may ever actuate the Governments and people of the two countries.

FRANCE.

With France, our ancient and powerful ally, our relations continue to be of the most friendly character. A decision has recently been made by a French judicial tribunal, with the approbation of the Imperial Government, which can not fail to foster the sentiments of mutual regard that have so long existed between the two countries. Under the French law no person can serve in the armies of France unless he be a French citizen. The Court of France, exercising the natural right of expatriation, it follows as a necessary consequence that a Frenchman, by the fact of having become a citizen of the United States, has changed his allegiance and has lost his native character. He can not, therefore, be compelled to serve in the French armies in case he should return to his native country. These principles were announced in 1852 by the French Minister of War, and in two late cases have been confirmed by the French judiciary. In these, two natives of France have been discharged from the French army because they had become American citizens. To employ the language of our present Minister to France, who has rendered good service on this occasion, "I do not think our French naturalized fellow-citizens will hereafter experience much annoyance on this subject." I venture to predict that the time is not far distant when the other continental powers will adopt the same wise and just policy which has done so much honor to the enlightened Government of the Emperor. In any event, our Government is bound to protect the rights of our naturalized citizen everywhere to the same extent as though they had drawn their first breath in this country. We can recognize no distinction between our native and naturalized citizens.

RUSSIA.

Between the great empire of Russia and the United States the mutual friendship and regard which has so long existed still continues to prevail, and, if possible, to increase. Indeed our relations with that Empire are all that we could desire.

SPAIN.

Our relations with Spain are now of a more complicated though less dangerous character than they have been for many years. Our citizens have long held, and continue to hold, numerous claims against the Spanish Government. These had been ably urged for a series of years by our successive diplomatic representatives at Madrid, but without obtaining redress. The Spanish Government finally agreed to institute a joint commission for the adjustment of these claims, and on the 5th day of March, 1860, concluded a convention for this purpose with our present Minister at Madrid. Under this convention, what have been denominated "the Cuban claims," amounting to $128,635 and 54 cents, in which more than one hundred of our fellow-citizens are interested, were recognized, and the Spanish Government agreed to pay the amount in this account "within three months following the exchange of ratifications." The payment of the remaining $28,635 54 was to await the decision of the commissioners for or against "the Amistad claim; but in any event the balance was to be paid to the claimants either by Spain or the United States. These terms I have every reason to know are highly satisfactory to the holders of the Cuban claims. Indeed, they have made a formal offer authorizing the State Department to settle these claims, and to deduct the amount of the Amistad claim from the sums which they are entitled to receive from Spain. This offer, of course, can not be accepted.

All other claims of citizens of the United States against Spain, or of subjects of the Queen of Spain against the United States, including the "Amistad claim," were by the convention referred to a board of commissioners of a novel form. Neither the validity of the Amistad claim nor of any other claim against either party, with the single exception of the Cuban claims, was recognized by the convention. Indeed, the Spanish government did not insist that the validity of the Amistad claim should be thus recognized, notwithstanding its payment had been recommended to Congress by two of my predecessors as well as by myself, and an appropriation for that purpose had passed the Senate of the United States. They were content that it should be submitted to the board for examination and decision, like the other claims. Both governments were bound respectively to pay the amounts awarded to the several claimants "at such times and places as may be fixed by and according to the tenor of said awards."

I transmitted this convention to the Senate for their constitutional action on the 3d May, 1860, and on the 27th of the succeeding June they determined that they would "not advise and consent" to its ratification.

These proceedings place our relations with Spain in an awkward, odd embarrassing position. It is more than probable that the final adjustment of these claims will devolve upon my successor.

I reiterate the recommendation contained in my Annual Message of December, 1858, and repeated in that of December, 1859, in favor of the acquisition of Cuba from Spain by fair purchase. I firmly believe that such an acquisition would contribute essentially to the well-being and prosperity of both countries in all future time, as well as prove the certain means of immediately abolishing the African slave-trade throughout the world. I would not repeat this recommendation upon the present occasion, if I believed that the transfer of Cuba to the United States, upon conditions highly favorable to Spain, could justly tarnish the national honor of the proud and ancient Spanish Monarchy. Surely no person ever attributed to the first Napoleon a disregard of the national honor of France, for transferring Louisiana to the United States for a fair equivalent, both in money and commercial advantages.

AUSTRIA, ETC.

With the Emperor of Austria, and the remaining continental powers of Europe, including that of the Sultan, our relations continue to be of the most friendly character. Since the commencement of my Administration the two dangerous questions arising from the Clayton and Bulwer treaty and from the right of search claimed by the British Government, have been amicably and honorably adjusted.

The discordant constructions of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty between the two Governments which, at different periods of the discussion, bore a threatening aspect, have resulted in a final settlement entirely satisfactory to this Government. In my last annual message I informed Congress that the British Government had proposed to negotiate a treaty arrangement with the Republics of Honduras and Nicaragua, in pursuance of the understanding between the two Governments. It is nevertheless confidently expected that this good work will ere long be accomplished." This confident expectation has since been fulfilled. Her Britannic Majesty concluded a treaty with Honduras on the 28th November, 1859, and with Nicaragua on the 28th August, 1860, relinquishing the Mosquito protectorate. Besides, by the former, the Bay Islands are recognized as a part of the Republic of Honduras. It may be observed that the stipulations of these treaties conform in every important particular to the amendments adopted by the Senate of the United States to the treaty concluded at London on the 17th October, 1856, between the two Governments. It will be recollected that the treaty was rejected by the British Government because of its objection to the just and important amendment of the senate to the article relating to Tiutan and the other islands in the Bay of Honduras.

It must be a source of sincere satisfaction to all classes of our fellow citizens, and especially to those engaged in foreign commerce, that the claim, on the part of Great Britain, forcibly to visit and search American merchant vessels on the high seas in time of peace, has been abandoned. This was by far the most dangerous question to the peace of the two countries which has existed since the war of 1812. Whilst it remained open they might at any moment have been precipitated into war. This was rendered manifest by the exasperated state of public feeling throughout our entire country, produced by the forcible search of American merchant vessels by British cruisers on the coast of Cuba, in the spring of 1858. The American people hailed with general acclaim the orders of the Secretary of the Navy to our naval force in the Gulf of Mexico, "to protect all vessels of the United States on the high seas from search or detention by the vessels of war of any other nation. These orders might have produced an immediate collision between the naval forces of the two countries. This was most fortunately prevented by an appeal to the justice of Great Britain and to the law of nations as expounded by her own most eminent jurists.

The only question of any importance which still remains open, is the disputed title between the two Governments to the island of San Juan, in the vicinity of Washington Territory. As this question is still under negotiation, it is not deemed advisable at the present moment to make any other allusion to the subject.

The recent visit of the Prince of Wales, in a private character, to the people of this country, has proved to be in most auspicious event. In its consequences, it can not fail to increase the kindred and kindly feelings which I trust may ever actuate the Governments and people of the two countries.

FRANCE.

With France, our ancient and powerful ally, our relations continue to be of the most friendly character. A decision has recently been made by a French judicial tribunal, with the approbation of the Imperial Government, which can not fail to foster the sentiments of mutual regard that have so long existed between the two countries. Under the French law no person can serve in the armies of France unless he be a French citizen. The Court of France, exercising the natural right of expatriation, it follows as a necessary consequence that a Frenchman, by the fact of having become a citizen of the United States, has changed his allegiance and has lost his native character. He can not, therefore, be compelled to serve in the French armies in case he should return to his native country. These principles were announced in 1852 by the French Minister of War, and in two late cases have been confirmed by the French judiciary. In these, two natives of France have been discharged from the French army because they had become American citizens. To employ the language of our present Minister to France, who has rendered good service on this occasion, "I do not think our French naturalized fellow-citizens will hereafter experience much annoyance on this subject." I venture to predict that the time is not far distant when the other continental powers will adopt the same wise and just policy which has done so much honor to the enlightened Government of the Emperor. In any event, our Government is bound to protect the rights of our naturalized citizen everywhere to the same extent as though they had drawn their first breath in this country. We can recognize no distinction between our native and naturalized citizens.

RUSSIA.

Between the great empire of Russia and the United States the mutual friendship and regard which has so long existed still continues to prevail, and, if possible, to increase. Indeed our relations with that Empire are all that we could desire.

SPAIN.

Our relations with Spain are now of a more complicated though less dangerous character than they have been for many years. Our citizens have long held, and continue to hold, numerous claims against the Spanish Government. These had been ably urged for a series of years by our successive diplomatic representatives at Madrid, but without obtaining redress. The Spanish Government finally agreed to institute a joint commission for the adjustment of these claims, and on the 5th day of March, 1860, concluded a convention for this purpose with our present Minister at Madrid. Under this convention, what have been denominated "the Cuban claims," amounting to $128,635 and 54 cents, in which more than one hundred of our fellow-citizens are interested, were recognized, and the Spanish Government agreed to pay the amount in this account "within three months following the exchange of ratifications." The payment of the remaining $28,635 54 was to await the decision of the commissioners for or against "the Amistad claim; but in any event the balance was to be paid to the claimants either by Spain or the United States. These terms I have every reason to know are highly satisfactory to the holders of the Cuban claims. Indeed, they have made a formal offer authorizing the State Department to settle these claims, and to deduct the amount of the Amistad claim from the sums which they are entitled to receive from Spain. This offer, of course, can not be accepted.

All other claims of citizens of the United States against Spain, or of subjects of the Queen of Spain against the United States, including the "Amistad claim," were by the convention referred to a board of commissioners of a novel form. Neither the validity of the Amistad claim nor of any other claim against either party, with the single exception of the Cuban claims, was recognized by the convention. Indeed, the Spanish government did not insist that the validity of the Amistad claim should be thus recognized, notwithstanding its payment had been recommended to Congress by two of my predecessors as well as by myself, and an appropriation for that purpose had passed the Senate of the United States. They were content that it should be submitted to the board for examination and decision, like the other claims. Both governments were bound respectively to pay the amounts awarded to the several claimants "at such times and places as may be fixed by and according to the tenor of said awards."

I transmitted this convention to the Senate for their constitutional action on the 3d May, 1860, and on the 27th of the succeeding June they determined that they would "not advise and consent" to its ratification.

These proceedings place our relations with Spain in an awkward, odd embarrassing position. It is more than probable that the final adjustment of these claims will devolve upon my successor.

I reiterate the recommendation contained in my Annual Message of December, 1858, and repeated in that of December, 1859, in favor of the acquisition of Cuba from Spain by fair purchase. I firmly believe that such an acquisition would contribute essentially to the well-being and prosperity of both countries in all future time, as well as prove the certain means of immediately abolishing the African slave-trade throughout the world. I would not repeat this recommendation upon the present occasion, if I believed that the transfer of Cuba to the United States, upon conditions highly favorable to Spain, could justly tarnish the national honor of the proud and ancient Spanish Monarchy. Surely no person ever attributed to the first Napoleon a disregard of the national honor of France, for transferring Louisiana to the United States for a fair equivalent, both in money and commercial advantages.

AUSTRIA, ETC.

With the Emperor of Austria, and the remaining continental powers of Europe, including that of the Sultan, our relations continue to be of the most friendly character.

CHINA.

The friendly and peaceful policy pursued by the Government of the United States towards the empire of China has produced the most satisfactory results. The treaty of Tientsin of the 18th of June, 1858, has been faithfully observed by the Chinese authorities. The convention of the 8th of November, 1858, supplementary to this treaty, for the settlement and satisfaction of the claims of our citizens on China, referred to in my last Annual Message, has been already carried into effect, so far as this was practicable.

Under this convention the sum of 500,000 taels, equal to about $700,000, was stipulated to be paid in satisfaction of the claims of American citizens, out of the one-fifth of the receipts for tonnage, import and export duties on American vessels at the ports of Canton, Shanghae and Foochow; and it was "agreed that this amount shall be in full liquidation of all claims of American citizens at the various ports to this date." Debentures for this amount—to wit: 300,000 taels for Canton, 100,000 for Shanghae, and 100,000 for Foochow—were delivered according to the terms of the convention by the respective Chinese collectors of the customs of these ports to the agent selected by our minister to receive the same.

Since that time the claims of our citizens have been adjusted by the Board of Commissioners appointed for that purpose under the act of March 3, 1859, and their awards, which proved satisfactory to the claimants, have been approved by our Minister. In the aggregate they amount to the sum of $188,591 78. The claimants have already received a large proportion of the sums awarded to them out of the fund provided, and it is confidently expected that the remainder will ere long be entirely paid. After the awards shall have been satisfied, there will remain a surplus of more than $200,000 at the disposition of Congress. As this will in equity belong to the Chinese Government, would not justice require its appropriation to some benevolent object in which the Chinese may be specially interested?

Our Minister to China, in obedience to his instructions, has remained perfectly neutral in the war between Great Britain and France, and the Chinese empire; although, in conjunction with the Russian Minister, he was ever ready and willing, had the opportunity offered, to employ his good offices in restoring peace between the parties. It is but an act of simple justice, both to our present Minister and his predecessor, to state, that they have proved fully equal to the delicate, trying and responsible positions in which they have on different occasions been placed.

JAPAN.

The ratifications of the treaty with Japan, concluded at Yeddo on the 29th July, 1858, were exchanged at Washington on the 22d May last, and the treaty itself was proclaimed on the succeeding day. There is good reason to expect that, under its protection and influence, our trade and intercourse with that distant and interesting people will rapidly increase.

The ratifications of the treaty were exchanged with general solemnity. For this purpose the Tycoon had accredited three of his most distinguished subjects as envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, who were received and treated with marked distinction and kindness, both by the Government and people of the United States. There is every reason to believe that they have returned to their native land entirely satisfied with their visit, and inspired by the most friendly feelings for our country. Let us ardently hope, in the language of the treaty itself, that "there shall

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

SKETCH OF REV. GEORGE C. LIGHT, M. D.

BY REV. W. F. CAMP, M. D.

George C. Light was born in Westmoreland county, Virginia, on the 28th of February, 1785. In his seventh year his father removed from Virginia to Mason county, Kentucky, and settled at what is now called Maysville, then named Limestone, where he resided until the 1st of January, 1799, when the family removed to Clairmont county, Ohio, George being then in his fourteenth year. During his residence at Maysville, he enjoyed the advantages of the common school.

After removing to Ohio he remained with his father, and assisted him in the cultivation of his farm, and was noted for his industry and attention to the interests of his father; and although of a very lively disposition, fond of amusement, and lively sometimes to excess, he early learned a moral youth.

In his seventeenth year, his father was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. His mother had been trained in Presbyterian, and had been for years a member of the Presbyterian Church; his sister had joined the then persecuted Methodists about nine months previous to his father.

In the autumn of 1804, Rev. Burke, P. E., Wm. Patterson, and Philip Gatch, held a protracted meeting in his father's neighborhood, which was attended by the family. During the progress of the meeting young George was observed to be deeply affected. This was hailed with joy by his father, but he said nothing to him. At the close of the exercises of each meeting, he was seen to retire to the woods alone. At length, after a rather dull sermon one night, Wm. Patterson gave a moving exhortation, and George went forward when the invitation to penitents was given, and asked an interest in the prayers of God's people. Father Gatch knelt over him, and prayed with and for him; soon he was enabled to exercise that faith in Christ which bringeth salvation, and he arose rejoicing.

At the juncture of affairs, his mother, who had objected to the meeting on account of the noise, and who had ordered the horses to leave for home, but was deterred by the meek and Christian spirit manifested by her husband in getting the horses for her, came forward from a remote part of the house, over the benches, and went to Mr. Patterson, who had been most distressed to hear, took hold of him, and told him to make as much noise in future as he pleased; that for the first time in her life she had realized what true religion is; then turning to the son and father, she mingled her rejoicings with theirs, and them commenced a union of hearts never to be severed.

On his return from the protracted meeting, his father called upon him to lead in family prayer, which he did, and ever after the father prayed at night and the son at morning.

A few days after his return home, he attended a prayer-meeting, where he was called on to pray and exhort, which he did, and several were convicted, and afterwards converted.—From this time on he continued to hold prayer and classmeetings, exhibiting much zeal and usefulness, until the year 1804, when the Rev. Wm. Burke took him to a quarterly meeting, where he called upon him to exhort, then to take a text and preach. Many conversions were the fruit of this meeting. After its close Brother Burke gave him a letter of introduction to the Rev. Jacob Young, P. E., who sent the young itinerant to Marietta Circuit, where he labored with usefulness and great acceptability.

The next year (1805) he was employed by the Presiding Elder on Nolachucky Circuit in Tennessee. His name appears in the Minutes of the Conference for the first time in 1806. He was admitted on trial that year with ten others, into what was then called the Western Conference, and was sent to Clinch Circuit, Holston District, (now Tazewell Circuit,) as junior preacher, John McClure, senior, and Thomas Wilkerson, P. E. He had a successful year, and was returned to that circuit the next year, (1807.) He was ordained deacon by Bishop Asbury, in 1807, at Chillicothe, as his parchment shows.

In the year 1808, he was received into full connection, and was sent to New River Circuit, within the limits of the Greenbrier District, Jacob Gruber, P. E. This was an important year in his life—success attended his ministry, and many precious souls were added to the Church through his instrumentality, among them some wealthy and influential members. Mr. Wm. Carter was one, also his brother Charles Carter. But while God crowned his efforts with success, he also met with trials on the way. He had given offence to some persons by making a young man apologize for some misconduct at a camp-meeting. He was warned of danger, and on his way to Daniel Lockhart's, as he reached a lonely part of the road, he was met by a party of twenty men armed with sticks and cowhides, but as he approached them they parted, leaving him the middle of the road, simply saying, "Good morning! how do you do, Mr. Light?" and let him pass unmolested. When he looked back, they were mounting their horses to go home. Thus God disarms our enemies when in the discharge of duty, and maketh even the wrath of man to praise him.

During that year he became acquainted with Ann T. Campbell, to whom he was united in marriage on the 3d of July, 1808. She proved a helpmeet indeed, in all his subsequent pilgrimages, and still survives him to mourn his loss, and cherish his memory and history with a loving heart and astonishing vividness of memory. While I write this sketch, (September 13, 1860,) she dictates, and I am acting simply as her amanuensis. Although nearly blind and very deaf, her memory is remarkably tenacious, recalling many interesting passages in his life which would be both instructive and entertaining, but which would swell this sketch to too great a length.

As was the custom in the early days of Methodism, after this year he located, (marriage being synonymous with location,) and continued to labor faithfully as a preacher in his local relation, [illegible] Iron Works, and other places, forming wife and a babe three [illegible] connection. [illegible] with his father's house, in Clairmont county, Ohio. After [illegible] about one hundred miles (which they had made by stages of ten and twenty miles a day, in consequence of the ill health of Mrs. Light) he became discouraged, and wanted to return to Virginia, and one day turned his horses homeward, but his faithful companion insisted that they should pursue their journey, saying, "she had turned her face westward, and to the west she would go;" and this she did, riding the whole distance, four hundred and ninety miles, on horseback. This was accomplished in four weeks, stopping twice to attend camp-meetings, and paying a visit of a few days to an uncle of Mrs. Light's in Garrard county, Kentucky. On their journey he would take the babe and lay it on the grass, then lift his wife from the saddle and lay her on the same green couch of nature, to recuperate for the wearisome travel still before them.

After reaching Clairmont county, he lived one year with his father, and taught school, studying surveying at the same time under his father, and in 1810, his father resigning the surveyor's office, he was appointed in his place, and continued to hold this office in Clairmont county until he admitted into the Kentucky Conference, which event took place in 1822. As a surveyor he was very popular, and acquired money rapidly, investing it in lands. He also held during this period the office of Surveyor of the Virginia Military District in Ohio. But while he was diligent in business, he was also fervent in spirit; he did not forget his obligations as a minister of Christ, but had his regular appointments every Sabbath in the month but one, which he reserved to attend quarterly meetings. His labors during this period were crowned with abundant success, and many souls were given as seals to his ministry. At one time he baptised twenty persons belonging to Baptist families. He was no idler in the vineyard of the Master, though holding a local relation; he felt "Woe is unto me if I preach not the Gospel" as much there as when in the regular ranks. Would we had more like him in the present day!

During the year 1818 he was appointed Chaplain to the Fourth Brigade and Third Division of Militia, and in 1823 to the Third Brigade and Eighth Division.

He was ordained elder in the year 1815, by Bishop McKendree, at Lebanon.

Previous to this, in the year 1813, after Hull's defeat, a draft was made on Ohio for recruits, and Mr. Light was called on, among others, to address the people, which he did with great effect; and before the soldiers dispersed he was asked to pray, and so pathetic and powerful was the prayer, that few left the ground with dry eyes.

As was before intimated, he joined the Kentucky Conference in 1822, and was sent to Limestone Circuit. Peter Akins and Hezekiah Holland were associated with him on the circuit.—His family lived at this time in New Richmond, Ohio.

In 1823 and 1824 he was stationed in Lexington, Kentucky. These were pleasant years in his history; some young men were taken into the Church who afterward became ministers.

At the Conference of 1825, held in Louisville, he was appointed Conference missionary.

In 1826 and 1827 he was sent to Louisville, and doubtless contributed much toward building up Methodism by his eloquence and zeal in this place, which at that time was regarded as one of the hardest appointments within the bounds of the Conference. During his pastorate there the membership of the church was doubled, and a neat brick church was erected for the servants through his instrumentality, and called "Light's Chapel."

While at Louisville he conducted a camp-meeting, some distance from town, and during its progress a Mrs. M. was happily converted. She had gone to the meeting with the understanding that she was not to go to the altar. Her husband hearing of her conversion, came out in hot blood armed with a rifle, and with full purpose to kill Mr. Light. When he reached the camp-ground he proceeded at once to the preachers' seat. He was met by Mrs. Light, there being no room in the seat beside herself, an aged minister, and some little children, and such was her kind and Christian demeanor toward him, that he was entirely disarmed of his wicked purpose, listened to the story of his wife's conversion, and when Mr. Light came to the tent he made no attack upon him but seemed to be perfectly reconciled to his wife's joining the Church. Thus was he again mercifully preserved from harm through the power and goodness of God, and such is ever the protection God extends over his children when in the discharge of duty. God help us always to emulate his unshrinking discharge of duty.

At the Conference of 1828, he was sent to Shelbyville, and Brick Chapel; and in 1829, he was stationed in Frankfort;* in 1830 he was sent back to Shelbyville, and in 1831 he was once more stationed in Lexington, Kentucky.

His appointments evince his position in the Conference, and his popularity as a preacher among the people. He was at this period in the zenith of his glory as a minister, and was greatly esteemed as an eloquent and useful preacher. Probably no man of his day exerted a more powerful influence over the popular mind for good than George C. Light, and many precious souls will rise up and call him blessed.

At the Conference of 1832 he was appointed Agent for the American Colonization Society, and filled his position two years.

In 1834 he was stationed in Maysville, Kentucky. His family resided near Lexington, and suffered with cholera during a part of the year: he did much good, and rendered himself very useful in nursing the sick.

In 1835 he was transferred to the Missouri Conference, and was sent on the Palmyra Circuit. This was a hard year with him; the weather in winter was very severe, and his appointments were some distance from his home.

In 1836 he was re-appointed to Palmyra. During the year he purchased a farm in the country, nine miles distant from Palmyra, and removed his family to it.

In 1837 he was appointed Presiding Elder. He held this office but one year, and at the next Conference, which was held in St. Louis, September 13, 1837, he was sent to Hannibal Circuit, and had associated with him Nelson Henry. This was a successful year in his ministry, and many were added to the Lord.

In 1839 he was stationed in St. Louis, Missouri, and remained there one year. In consequence of the death of a daughter residing in Kentucky, together with his own unsettled business in Ohio, he obtained leave of absence for 1840, and went to Augusta, Kentucky, to settle the business pertaining to his daughter's estate. While there he had regular appointments to preach.

Early in the spring of 1841 he returned to St. Louis, and, having no work, assisted the Rev. Wm. Finley in his agency for the Colonization Society; and besides this he rented an old steamboat, had it fitted up, and preached regularly to the boatmen, and such as gather round the wharves on the Sabbath. The result was a great improvement in the observance of that holy day in that locality.

* While in Frankfort, he obtained permission to preach to the convicts in the Penitentiary, and was instrumental in the conversion of several of them.

In the autumn of 1841 he was again transfered to the Kentucky Conference, by Bishop Morris, and stationed at Louisville, in charge of the Fourth street Church.

He was stationed in Covington in the years 1842 and 1843, in each of which there was a revival of religion, and three hundred were added to the Church, which was left in a prosperous condition.

At the Conference of 1844, which met at Bowling Green, he was stationed at Maysville. This was the year of the separation of the Church into Northern and Southern divisions. The Church was much disturbed, and but little progress was made in spiritual things.

In the autumn of 1844 he was again transferred to the Missouri Conference, and was stationed at Booneville. This year his family resided on his farm, near Palmyra, one hundred miles distant, and he could only visit them at intervals of five and six weeks. This was a prosperous year in his ministry; many were converted and added to the Church.

The following year he was sent as Presiding Elder to Palmyra District, which permitted him to remain with his family.

At the Conference of 1847 he was sent to Hydesburg Circuit, (formerly called Palmyra,) and in 1848 was stationed at Hannibal; his family resided there a portion of the year, the remaining part on his farm. Hannibal was visited by cholera this year, and the prevented the accomplishment of as much good as might have otherwise been expected. He was also called to pass through affliction, in the death of his daughter Julia.

In the autumn of 1849 in consequence of Mrs. Light's ill health, and his own sufferings from rheumatism, he was transfered to the Mississippi Conference, which was holden at Natchez, and to which he was warmly welcomed. He was stationed at Woodville, two years in succession; these were successful years, and souls were added to his ministry.

In 1852 and 1853 he was stationed in Vicksburg. Here he had many warm friends, and he left the Church in a very prosperous condition.

In 1854 and 1855 he was stationed in Canton. Here he permanently located his family, and built him a neat little home in which to spend his declining years; not that he had any desire to lay aside the duties of an itinerant, or put off the gospel harness: his desire was to "cease to work and live." Nor did he cease to take regular work until forced to do so by the disease which finally terminated his active and useful life.

He was sent to Sharon Circuit, near Canton, in 1856 and 1857, and in 1858 and 1859 he was sent to Lexington and Richland. The last two years were very prosperous, and many were added to the Church.

At the Conference of 1859, held in Jackson, Mississippi, he reluctantly took a superannuated relation, but, as before mentioned, his age and increasing infirmities compelled him to retire from the ranks of the active ministry, but his active mind and zeal for the cause of his Divine Master would not let him remain idle. He filled one regular appointment every month on the plantation of Mr. Wm. Love, and had also offered to fill the pulpit of the writer of this sketch, as occasion might demand. The Sabbath before his death it was my privilege to hear him deliver a cogent and earnest discourse to the servants in the church at Canton, from Isa. lii. 10, 11, "Say ye to the righteous it shall be well with him," etc. He had little thought than in two short days he would go to reap the reward of the righteous, which he knew so well how to describe. The day following, (February 20th,) I went to Vicksburg in company with Dr. Light, and enjoyed the privilege of holding converse with him on the way. During our conversation he commented upon three texts of Scripture beautifully. The following are passages: "Hearken unto me, ye that follow after righteousness," etc. Isaiah li. 1. "I have seen an end of all perfection, but thy commandment is exceedingly broad." Psalm cxix. 96. "And thou, Solomon, my son, know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart." 1 Chron. xxviii 9. He remarked, after he had commented on these passages some time, that if he lived to see the next day he would be seventy-five years of age; and, so far as he was concerned, if he world were put up at auction, he would not be a higher bidder. His conversation seemed to be peculiarly in heaven. He repeated several beautiful couplets of poetry, one on procrastination, the other on man's free will and God's prescience, and also the hymn commencing, "Vain man, thy fond pursuits forbear," expressing a regret that this hymn had been left out of the new Hymn Book.

On reaching Vicksburg he complained greatly of a pain in his shoulder, and after taking him to the hotel I procured some liniment, with which I laved his shoulder. He then expressed himself better, and on taking my Bible to read, he requested me to read to him the first chapter of Colossians, upon which he commented beautifully for more than an hour, greatly to my edification.

He slept quietly, and seemed well as usual next morning, arose, dressed himself, and after kneeling in prayer, desired me to read the fifth chapter of second Corinthians, saying that it gave him comfort. He dwelt upon the passage, "For we know if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens;" and also with evident delight on the seventh verse, "For we walk by faith, not by sight;" also on, "Willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord;" "The love of Christ constraineth me;" "Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature;" and so on to the end of the chapter. His spoke of the kind of bodies we shall have in the resurrection, and the locality of heaven, remarking, that although it is true that where God is there is heaven, yet inasmuch as God has made us social beings, he believed there is a special place where the redeemed will be reunited, and dwell together for ever. Speaking of the body as the tabernacle, he said that when the body dies, the man does not die, and when we look upon the body, we do not see the man, only the outer vestment, remarking that, in reality, it is a very little matter for the Christian to die; it is only to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord.

After breakfast we went to the Book Depository, where he met and conversed cheerfully with some of his old friends. We parted at twelve o'clock, agreeing to meet in the evening at Brother Clinton's. After dining with Brother Huwe, he started to call on Dr. Marshall's at four o'clock in the afternoon, but before reaching there was taken with violent pain about the region of the stomach, which he met him at the door, exclaiming, "was almost dead." He was assisted in, and after being sealed, and taking a stimulant, felt somewhat revived, and commenced conversation with Brother M. in his usual cheerful manner; but in a few moments his head fell back on the chair, and without a groan or struggle his spirit passed away to God. Thus departed from earth one of God's faithful ministers, whose name for years was a tower of strength on the walls of Zion.

In many respects Dr. Light was a remarkable man. Possessing naturally a fine mind, with a wide grasp of thought, he used his mental capital to the very best advantage. Those who heard him in his palmier days will remember how completely error and false doctrine were routed, when he brought to bear his well-mounted battery of reason, truth, and eloquence. Perhaps no man in his day wielded a wider or more decided influence for good than did Dr. Light.

In person he was commanding, possessing a vigorous constitution, and an affable and courteous address, which made him a welcome guest wherever he went. Take him all in all, we shall not soon look upon his like again. But he is gone: his work was done, and calmly and peaceably he laid aside his shield and sword, and delivered up his parchment to the Shepherd and Bishop of souls, exchanged the cross for the crown.

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."
The voice at evening came;
He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame:
He fell; but felt no fear.

W. P. CASSADAY.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted at the fourth quarterly conference for the Sylvan Grove circuit, Ala. Conference:—

Whereas it has pleased our Heavenly Father to take to himself our worthy and esteemed friend and brother, William P. Cassaday, one of the stewards of our circuit—

Resolved, That in his death we sustain a great loss, which we much deplore.

2. That we sympathize sincerely with the bereaved family and friends.

3. That a copy of these resolutions, together with an obituary, to be written by the preacher in charge, be published in the N. O. Christian Advocate.

In compliance with the above the following is written:

Bro. Cassaday was born in Chesterfield District, S. C., Sept. 6, 1831. During the next year he was removed by his father to Henry county, Ala., where he grew up, lived, and died. After being sick several days, he recovered sufficiently to be taken to his father's, where, in a short time, he relapsed, and died on the 6th November, having been sick about five weeks. His disease was typhoid fever. Thus has been stricken down, in the very prime of life, and in the beginning of his usefulness, one of our best and most promising young men. He had been a member of the M. E. Church seven or eight years, but did not make an open profession of religion until about two years ago, during a meeting in Abbeville. Since that time his life has been, in the main, that of a christian. His course was such as to win the confidence and esteem of most who knew him. He was faithful in attending upon the ordinances of the Church; prayed to public when called upon; took an active part in our Sunday-schools; and, during a part of this year, acted as steward. It will be a very difficult matter to fill the place made vacant by his death. The deceased had been engaged for several years in the practice of law, and bid fair to occupy a high position in his profession. After a funeral sermon by Rev. G. P. Kiney, his remains were interred by the Oddfellows and a military company, of both which he was a member. Owing to the derangement of his mind during the latter part of his sickness, he was not permitted to give as clear testimony concerning his spiritual state and future prospects as we desired. But his consistent walk since his profession of religion, has been such as to assure us of his present happiness. Of a large family, nearly all grown, this is the first, except an infant, that has been removed by death. The bereaved ones deeply feel and greatly lament the loss they sustain.

W. A. MONTGOMERY.

T. W. HOOKS.

At a regular meeting of the Calliopean Society, held Nov. 10, 1860, the following preamble and resolutions were unanimously adopted, in memory of T. W. Hooks, who died in September, at his father's residence, in Washington county, Ala.

Society Hall, Summerville Institute,
Nov. 18th, 1860.

Whereas we have just heard of the decease of Thomas W. Hooks, formerly a student of this Institute, and a member of the Calliopean Society; and whereas we mourn deeply the loss of one to whom we were connected by so many pleasant ties of the past; therefore be it resolved—

1st. That this Society has been deprived of a faithful member, a cherished friend, and a noble representative in the person of the deceased.

2d. That the deceased, during his connection with the school and the Society, deported himself in such a manner as to win the lasting regard of both teachers and pupils.

3d. That, while we humbly submit to this dispensation of an overruling Providence, we cannot but lament the untimely end of one so young, and so favored for usefulness among his fellows.

4th. That we tender our heartfelt sympathy to the afflicted family thus bereaved of a dutiful son, an affectionate brother, and a bright ornament of the domestic circle.

JOHN HOPKINS died October 27, 1860, aged 33 years. He was born April 9, 1827. Being piously raised, in early life he became a member of the Methodist E. Church, and ever after maintained a christian character. Religion with him was a fixed principle, manifesting itself in his daily life. He was modest and unassuming, yet ever ready to do what he could in the cause of his Master. As a class-leader, he was faithful, teaching by precept and example; as a citizen, he was respected by all who knew him, his love of truth being proverbial. Death for him had no terrors. When informed by his physician that he must die, his only regret was that he had done so little in the Lord's vineyard. His confidence in God was firm and unshaken to the end.

Catahoula, La. K. T. PARISH.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAMES J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama., will Practice in Sumter and the adjoining counties. [an24]

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, BATON ROUGE.
REFERENCES—Henderson & Gaines and Chinn & Bollen, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Matta, Baton Rouge.

DUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Clinton, Louisiana, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana, and East Baton Rouge.
References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., W. and C. Leichford and Co., Broadwell & Haynes, and Pritchard & Flower, New Orleans. mar 7-1y

W. F. WINANS. J. T. HEATH.
WINANS & HEATH, ATTORNEYS AND COUNsellors at Law, Shreveport, La. (Office—Market street.
Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Harrisonburg, La., will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Caldwell and Franklin Parishes.

J. C. & T. H. LEWIS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, will practice in the Parishes of Catahoula, Caldwell, Franklin, Ouachita and Morehouse.
Office at Harrisonburg, La.
Oct. 3, 1860. 1y.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

A. H. MAY & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No 94 Gravier street, New Orleans. an21y

J. U. PAYNE. J. P. HARRISON.
D. W. ROWINGTON. WM. H. DARRISON
PAYNE & HARRISON, COMMISSION MERCHANTS No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

LEONARD FASH. F. S. LAURANS.
LEONARD FASH & CO COMMISSION MERchants, and Dealers in Western Produce, 51 Magazine street, New Orleans. Oct 24.

JOHN F. WYCHE & CO., COTTON FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No 114 Common street, New Orleans.

JOS. W. CARROLL. W. H. KIDDELL.
JOS. NOY. J. N. NIXEN.
CARROLL, NOY and Co., Cotton Factors, No. 38 Perdido-street, "Factors Row," New Orleans. 12 m'a

MOORE & BROWDELL, Successors to Moore and Vanculin. COMMISSION MERCHANTS, and COTTON FACTORS, No. 44 Carondelet-street, New Orleans. July 16, 1860.

LANE, SALTER & Co., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS, No. 128 COMMON-ST. Oct. 17, 1860.

ST. JAMES' HOTEL, MAGAZINE-ST., between GRAVIER & NATCHEZ, NEW ORLEANS. This new and elegant establishment will be opened for the reception of guests, on MONDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1860.

It is one of the largest and most elegant Hotels in the South; all modern improvements have been introduced. The entire house, including the chambers, is lighted with gas; the rooms are finely ventilated; the bathing arrangements are very superior, and, indeed, everything has been done which could in the least contribute to the comfort of travelers. The furniture and bedding, which is of the most costly and superior kind was manufactured expressly for the house, under the supervision of Mr. R. S. Morse.

The location is one of the most desirable and pleasant in New Orleans, being in the centre of business. The city railroad, now being constructed, passes directly in front of the house, and in addition it is within two blocks of the great central omnibus station on Canal-street.

The proprietors, who will also continue to conduct the City hotel, "so long and favorably, known," thankful for the patronage which has been so liberally extended to them, take great pleasure in assuring their old friends and the public generally, that no exertion will be spared to make them comfortable during their sojourn at either house.

MORSE & MOORE, Proprietors.
Oct. 10, 1860. 6m.

PHILIP RAHM, EAGLE MACHINE WORKS—Richmond, Va., manufactures Stationary and Portable Steam Engines of any required power and superior design and workmanship combining several improvements with simplicity and durability best adapting them for plantation use.

Circular Saw Mills, Grist Mills, Shafting for Gin Houses, Draining Pumps, and Machinery generally. My Machinery will be fully guaranteed to perform as represented, and an experienced mechanic sent to erect it when desired. An illustrated Catalogue, with prices, sent by mail when requested.

Samples of Machinery on exhibition at my office, No. 61 St. Charles street, New Orleans.

P. HENRY TAYLOR, Agent.

BENTHUYSEN, LEWIS & CO., 116 CANAL Street (adjacent to the CLAY Statue), would call attention to their large Stock of

PLANTATION, HOUSEKEEPING, AND FANCY DRY GOODS,

Comprising all qualities and descriptions, in any quantity to suit An examination of our Stock is requested.
Country Orders promptly filled.

BENTHUYSEN, LEWIS & Co.,
116 Canal-street,
April 24, 1860. 1y

A PERFECTLY RELIABLE SEWING MACHINE, for THIRTY-FIVE DOLLARS!
The WILLCOX & GIBBS' Sewing Machine has now become an established favorite with this community, large numbers having been sold, and to the perfect satisfaction of the purchasers, to whom we take pleasure in referring. We claim it to be the simplest, fastest, most thorough, and altogether the best adapted Machine for family and plantation use that there is now made, and shall take pleasure in convincing any one of the fact if they will call and examine for themselves.

DAVIS BROTHERS, Agents,
May 15, 1860. 93, Camp street.

BIBLE AND TESTAMENTS.—The Largest and most Varied Supply, South. BIBLES from 30 Cents each to $27 50 each.
Rich Family Bibles in costly bindings, also smaller Bibles in Velvet and fancy bindings.
London, Oxford and Cambridge Bibles; Eyre and Spottiswoodes, Bagsters, on hand, and ordered.
Hebrew, Greek, Latin, Syriac, and Arabic Scriptures for Ministers and Students.
For Sunday Schools in Louisiana and Southern Mississippi; Testaments at reduced prices, and Pocket Testaments at half price.
Address,—Agent, S. W. Bible Society, Bible House, 163 Camp street, New Orleans.

SOUTHERN CLOTHING ESTABLISHMENT.—No. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner of Common, Clothing and Furnishing Goods at Wholesale and Retail.
Just received, per late steamers, one of the largest and most magnificent Stocks of FASHIONABLE FALL AND WINTER CLOTHING ever brought to the South, which, for Style, Material, Workmanship and Cheapness, is not surpassed. Goods are divided into Three Departments, but all under one general view:
Store No. 26 St. Charles street, for Boys' Clothing;
Store No. 28 St. Charles street, for Men's Clothing;
Store No. 30 St. Charles street, for Furnishing Goods and Shirts.
L. W. LYONS, & Co.
Nos 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles st., corner Commonst.
Salesmen speak French, Spanish German and English

BOYS' CLOTHING EMPORIUM, 26 St. Charles-st. between Canal and Common.
This Store is exclusively for YOUTHS', BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S CLOTHING; SHIRTS AND FURNISHING GOODS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL.
Just opened a large and excellent stock of FALL and WINTER BOYS' and SCHOOL CLOTHING, embracing every style and quality, all of which will be sold at VERY REASONABLE PRICES
Salesmen speak French, Spanish, German and English
L. W. LYONS, & Co.
oc12 Nos 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

SHIRTS! SHIRTS!! SHIRTS!!!—Just received, by late steamers, a large assortment of SHIRTS OF THE LATEST FASHION, of all the various qualities and sizes, White and Colored. Manufactured EXPRESSLY FOR THE NEW ORLEANS CITY TRADE, to fit Men, Youths, Boys and Children.
L. W. LYONS, & Co.
oc12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles street, corner Common st.

TRUNKS, TRAVELING-BAGS AND VALISES, UMBRELLAS, and WATER-PROOF CLOTHING of the best styles and qualities, made to order and warranted.
L. W. LYONS, & Co.
oc 12 Nos. 26, 28 and 30 St. Charles St., corner Common-st.

TO ALL PLANTERS WHO ARE NOW ARRANGING for their supplies of PLANTATION BOOTS AND SHOES for the coming Fall and Winter, the stock of
C. E. CATE & Co.,
Dealers at Wholesale and Retail, No. 18 and 19 Camp-street has advantages worthy of their particular attention. Having, at of their Negro Goods are made under their own supervision; selecting none but the best material, and paying none but the best workmen, they avoid poor stock, and sell all their work with a guaranty that none better is made.
Because, they are progressive, as make all improvements in their goods experience suggests, and they point to their MENS' MUSSET LONG BOOTS, MENS and WOMENS RUSSET HALF BOOTS, and MENS' EXTRA HEAVY THREE SOLES RUSSET and BLACK BROGANS, introduced at their last season and improved this, as having advantages in swampy and wet lands, over any style of goods made.
Because, they sell not only at wholesale, but have a house exclusively for the retail business, supplied with first class goods, made at their own manufactory in Philadelphia, which they warrant in style and quality, equal to any made to measure. Thus they are able not only to supply the Planter with any styles or sizes of the best Negro work, but can give him in the same bill the very best Custom made work for his Family. And
Because they do a close business, avoiding long time, and never pay customers, they sell their goods at a fair remunerative profit, and adopt the policy of, "short credits, long friends."
They take the liberty of soliciting your orders upon the condition that if the goods they send you are not satisfactory, you can return them.
Circulars descriptive of styles of goods and prices will be sent, on forwarding addresses.
WHOLESALE, No. 19, } Camp street.
RETAIL, No. 18, }
Aug. 4, 1860. C. E. CATE & Co.

THE BROOKS HOUSE, 128 Camp-street, beautifully situated opposite Lafayette Square, has been greatly improved. Two stories added to it; is now five stories, with wide and airy Verandahs to each story; it has about 60 rooms, and is now ready for Boarders and Travellers.
December 4, 1860.

STONE'S INFIRMARY—Corner of Canal and Claiborne streets, New Orleans. This well known Institution is fully provided with every thing necessary for the comfort and convenience of patients.
Separate Buildings have been erected for the accommodation of Negroes.
TERMS, including Medical attention, Nursing, Medicines, &c., $3 to $5 per day for Whites; $1 to $2 per day for Negroes.
Extra charges for Surgical cases and operations.
T. G. RICHARDSON, M D.,
Attending Physician and Surgeon,
WARREN STONE, M D.,
Consulting Physician and Surgeon.
P.S.—Special accommodations for females affected with Uterovaginal Fistula, Prolapsus and other diseases peculiar to the sex. Also for patients with diseases of the eye.

EDUCATIONAL.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE—Corner St. CHARLES and COMMON-STREETS, Entrance, 26 St. Charles street. (Established in 1856)
OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.
Book keeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, the French and English Languages, practically taught. Catalogues, containing full information, sent free to all who wish.
Nov. 20, 1860. 6m

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.—THE next term of this Institution will open on Monday, the first of OCTOBER, 1860.
FACULTY.
REV. JOHN C. MILLER, M. A., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
REV. W. H. SCALES, M. A., Professor of Mathematics.
REV. JOHN J. WHEAT, M. A., Professor of Greek.
GEORGE H. WILEY, M. A., Professor of Latin.
A. H. HOLCOMBE, M. A., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. J. E. SUNDSTROM, M. A., Professor of Modern Languages.
REV. A. G. MILLER, M. A. } Principals of Preparatory Department.
R. D. NORWORTHY, M. A., }
LEWIS FITZHUGH, Tutor.
Tuition per Session of five months, payable in advance.
In Preparatory Department..... $21 50
In College Department..... 36 50
Matriculation Fee on entering College Department..... 5 00
Music, extra.
Board can be obtained at the Steward's Hall, or in private families at prices varying from ten to fifteen dollars per month. This institution having an able Faculty, extensive buildings, large library, cabinet and apparatus, commends itself to all desiring a thorough classical or scient fic education.
Centenary College is located at Jackson, La., twelve miles East of Bayou Sara.
For information apply to Rev. O. C. Gillespie, No. 112 Camp street, Dr. John O. Keener, New Orleans, or to the undersigned, Jackson, La.
JOHN C. MILLER President.
Aug. 5, 1860. 1y

COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE.—COLUMBUS, MISS. The Fifteenth Annual Session of this Institution will open on MONDAY, the 1st day of OCTOBER, 1860.
THIS IS NOT A SECTARIAN SCHOOL.
Tuition and Board not higher than at other Southern Female Colleges. The Teachers are all experienced in their profession. The location is remarkably healthy, and the society moral and refined.
Columbus is accessible from various directions by daily Stage Lines, and by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, a branch of which terminates only a few Squares from the College buildings. Pupils should endeavor to be present at the opening of the Session.
MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY:
Rev. B. F. LARRABEE, M.A., President.
J. W. M. SHATTUCK, M.D., Secretary.
Rev. W. T. H. SCOTT, M.A.; Professor A. POTEMAN, M.A.; Mrs. L. E. FAHAR; Mrs. A. POTEMAN; Miss C. H. SHARPEY; Miss E. S. KENATHY; Miss L. STREET; Miss M. A. WITTER; Miss R. E. TUCKER, Miss K. H. SOUTHALL.
BOARDING DEPARTMENT.—Mr. Larrabee and family, and Dr Shattuck and family, reside with the boarders, and have charge of that Department.
For further particulars apply for a Catalogue.
Sept 20th, 1860.

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE, Located Seven Miles east of CANTON, has recently received a new and elegant Public-spirited Appropriation, and is prepared to give young Ladies a thorough Course in Natural Sciences, Languages and Mathematics; also in Music, French and Embroidery, and the various primary and Collegiate branches of English education. Lessons in Vocal Music, gratis.
Board, $12 per month; Washing and Lights, extra. Tuition, from $12 to $22 per Session, of five months. Payments due in advance.
Nov. 7, 1860. W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, President. 8t

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, BROOKHAVEN, Lawrence county, Mississippi. Rev. J. P. LEE, A.M., President, assisted by competent teachers.
The Exercises of the second Collegiate Year will begin September 12th, 1860, and end June 19th, 1861. Friday, June 14th, Annual Examination begins.
Sunday, June 16th, Commencement Sermon.—17th and 18th, Examination continued, Night Concert.—Wednesday, June 19th, Commencement Day.
For further particulars apply to
Rev. J. P. LEE President and Secretary.
Rev. M. J. WHITWORTH, Proprietor.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.—The Exercises of the Institute will be resumed on WEDNESDAY, 10th October. As the number of Pupils is necessarily limited, those who wish to secure places will do well to apply as early as practicable.
Aug. 5, 1860. W. H. S. MAGRUDER.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE.—The Twenty Third annual Session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, OCTOBER 1st, under the superintendence of the following corps of Instructors:
Rev. J. M. Bonnell, President, and Professor of Modern Science, Rhetoric, &c.
Rev. C. W. Smith, Professor of Mathematics.
Rev. F. H. Forster, Professor of Ancient Languages.
Rev. W. C. Ross Professor of Natural Sciences.
C. Schwartz, Professor of Modern Languages and Painting.
Miss M. E. Carlton, Assistant in Academical Department.
Miss C. M. Semple, Assistant in Primary Department.
P. G. Gattenberger, Senior Professor of Music.
W. S. H Matthews, Junior ditto.
Miss L. Gattenberger, and Miss M. A. Matthews, Assistants in Music.
Mrs. S. Schwartz Teacher of Ornamental Branches.
$130 will meet the annual expenses of a Student for board and Tuition, in the ordinary studies to be taken. The expense of furnishing a room varies from $5 to $12.
In addition to the regular College classes, there will be henceforth an Academic and a Primary Department, all under the charge of the same general faculty.
Letters on Financial business should be directed to Professor C. Macon, Georgia, Aug. 21, 1860. [illegible] all other matters, either

BASCOM FEMALE SEMINARY, Grenada, Miss This Institution, with a neat Boarding Department, and superior educational facilities, will commence its next Session, Sept. 24th 1860.
Aug. 28, 1860. Rev. S. D. OGBURN, President

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy for Young Ladies will open its thirty-second annual session on the 1st Monday in October. Number of pupils last session, 100. A new building now in course of erection will be ready for occupancy early in October, with accommodations for thirty additional boarders. A room has been erected for Calisthenics, with implements for scientific physical training, which gives beauty, grace and health.
The College is furnished with Maps, Charts, Globes, a Cabinet of Minerals, Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, a full corps of efficient and faithful teachers, and we offer to young ladies desiring an education a high order of advantages.
Terms per session of forty weeks, board and tuition in English branches, from $100 to $210. Music, Languages and ornamental branches at moderate extra charges.
Catalogues, with full information, can be had by addressing
sept2 REV. B. JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

GREENSHORO' (ALA.) HIGH SCHOOL—A Select School for Boys.—Rev. J. W. N. MEARS, A. M., M. D., Principal and Proprietor

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH---C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 51.
WHOLE NUMBER 511.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1860.

$3.00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE
OFFICE.—113 CAMP ST.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE REPORTS.

REPORT ON EDUCATION.

The political attitude of the nation places Southern institutions of learning in a more conspicuous light than they have hitherto enjoyed. Hereafter they must be the nurseries of the youth of the South. To make colleges what they should be—of such a grade as to command the attention of the people—concentration, and not expansion of effort is necessary. We have attempted to build more colleges than our means would admit. Some have ceased to exist; others languish, and only one is out of debt. We think it not safe to encourage any new college enterprises, until those already projected are built up, out of debt, and endowed. The special reports herein embodied give the condition of each institution under our control.

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA is owned and patronized jointly by the Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences. It is located within the State of Louisiana, but in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference. In the capacity and architecture of the college edifice, it is hardly surpassed in the South. It is well situated to command the patronage of the wealthiest portion of the Gulf States. Six Professorships are now actively filled, besides the two Principalships and two Tutorships, in the Preparatory Department. About two hundred and twenty five students are now in attendance, even at this early stage of the session—over one hundred of them are in the college proper. Two hundred and sixty three were enrolled last session, and more still are expected during the present one. The religious condition of the college is excellent. Two special seasons of "refreshing from the presence of the Lord" have been enjoyed during the year. Many of the students have been converted. And we wish to call the especial attention of the Church to the grateful and hopeful fact, that quite a number of the most promising students who belong to the Methodist Church, have entered the the itinerant ministry, and the tendency in this direction is constantly increasing. Our Christian colleges are becoming the nurseries of our ministry. The financial condition of the college, owing to the pressure of the times, and other causes, is somewhat stringent. The debt on the college building is about $25,000, and the means for its payment ought to be provided as speedily as possible, as the Board of Trustees is pressed and embarrassed by it. The Endowment Fund has been raised to about $50,000—$20,000 of it raised during the present year. Professor Scales has been acting as agent part of the time during the summer and autumn, and his success has inspired new hope as to the completion of the endowment. At the present time, the prospect of raising money is not flattering; but we trust for better times, and recommend that the endowment of Centenary College be steadily pushed forward. With an adequate endowment, Centenary would occupy a place in the highest rank of Southern Colleges; and it can and must be accomplished. We are not willing that our sister Conference of Mississippi shall outstrip us in support of this noble institution.

HOMER COLLEGE is situated in the town of Homer, Claiborne Parish, La, in the midst of an intelligent, enterprizing and prosperous community, about midway between Onachita and Red rivers, fifteen miles north of the Vicksburg and Shreveport railroad. An excellent college edifice has been completed and paid for. One hundred and sixteen students were in attendance during the year. President Clegg has resigned, after faithfully discharging his duty, and Rev W. D. Shea has been elected in his stead. We respectfully request the Bishop to appoint him to that post. We also repeat the appointment of an Agent for the Endowment Fund. We also recommend the Conference to elect M. O. Cheatham and W. B. Gill to the Board of Trustees in place of W. B. Eggart and A. H. Cunningham, resigned. Homer College is worthy of the support of the Conference and the Church. The successful management of its financial affairs is worthy of all praise. The Church is deeply indebted to Rev. Richmond Randle for his faithful and indefatigable labors in this behalf.

PIERCE AND PAINE COLLEGE, at Pleasant Hill, on the line between De Soto and Sabine Parishes, La., conveniently contiguous to Red river, endowment fund has been raised to about $50,000, the interest of which is being devoted to building purposes. The financial management of the enterprize has been very good. There is no debt and not likely to be any. Owing to the drought, and the monetary pressure, but little has been done in the way of raising money during the year. But the basis is a good and sure one. Rev C. P. Cooper of Georgia has been contingently elected President, and it is proposed to open the college next autumn. The enterprize is a promising one, and every way worthy of confidence and support. Revs. B. F. Alexander and John Pipes have done a good work, and deserve the thanks of the Conference for their faithful and successful labors as its Agents. We recommend the appointment of an agent for the present year. Two vacancies have occurred in the Board of Trustees during the past year. We recommend the appointment of W. D. Bouch, and W. C. Redding to fill said vacancies.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE, located in the town of Mansfield, De Soto parish, has been in successful operation for more than six years, and deserves an earnest and cordial support on the part of the Church. It is situated in an important and healthy section of the State, in the midst of an intelligent and refined community, and is supplied with the buildings, fixtures and apparatus necessary to the purposes of its establishment. The institution, from its foundation, has commanded a large patronage. During the past scholastic year, there were 142 pupils in attendance; the present session has opened with 95, and there is every prospect of a large increase. The failure of the crops in the region of country from which it mainly derives its patronage, has, no doubt, to some extent, lessened the number of pupils, yet there is good reason to believe that the present year, even amid the unpropitious circumstances of a short crop and a pecuniary crisis, will almost, if not altogether, equal the past in prosperity. We regret to state that upon examination of the affairs of the institution, it is found to be involved in considerable pecuniary difficulties. Thirty five thousand dollars have been expended in its construction, and of this about eight thousand remain to be raised. And unless this be speedily done, there is great danger that the institution will pass from the control and management of the Conference, and become permanently private property. This result would be most unfortunate, and we must labor promptly to avoid it. The institution, in its past history, has accomplished great good, and its future as in many respects most promising. We cherish the hope that the friends of female education and religion will rally to the rescue, and that ere another Conference year shall roll round, it will be relieved from all embarrassment, and allowed to continue uninterrupted its career of usefulness to the Church and the State. With a choice and efficient faculty, an extensive and thorough course of study, with mild and wholesome discipline, Mansfield College claims the respect and patronage of the public. Annually this institution makes, in her accomplished and refined graduates, a noble christian contribution to society. Whilst we deeply regret the resignation of the esteemed and worthy President, Dr. Thweatt, an acquaint of ill health, we are happy to announce the election, by the Board, of Rev. Charles B. Stuart to the Presidency—a gentleman peculiarly adapted to the position, of finished scholarship, with experience and reputation as an educator of young ladies, that fully guaranties the future prosperity and success of the institution. We most cordially congratulate the Board on their success in procuring such a man, and respectfully request the appointment of Dr. Thweatt as Agent, in connection with some pastoral work. Two vacancies have occurred in the Board of Trustees of Mansfield College this year, which we recommend to be filled by Rev. H. P. Thweatt and Rev. S. B. Spratt.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE, Baton Rouge. This popular institution is under the superintendency of Prof. W. H. N. Magruder, who enjoys the well-known reputation of being an experienced and successful educator. Already it contains more than 100 pupils, and twice that number could be as readily obtained if they could be accommodated. We are happy to say, without hesitation, that the discipline and advancement of the pupils of this institution are unsurpassed. We heartily recommend it to the patronage of the Church and public.

FEMALE SEMINARY, Baton Rouge. This institution was founded more than twenty years ago. Its success has long been a fixed fact. Mrs. Read, the gifted and talented Principal, assisted by a corps of able teachers, gives general and entire satisfaction to its numerous patrons, who are from all parts of the State. Ninety-two pupils were in attendance last year, and the present number is steadily increasing. Young ladies here receive a finished education. It merits a large patronage. We cheerfully recommend it.

THE NEW IBERIA FEMALE INSTITUTE is located in the town of New Iberia, La. It is a good location for a female high school, being in a wealthy and populous part of the State. By the generosity of a few friends, a suitable house and lot have been purchased, and a title made to a body of Trustees, who hold it for the M. E. Church, South. The school is now in charge of Mrs. Mary A. Davis and her daughter, Miss Ella Davis,—teachers who are qualified to make it a thorough school in every department. The following brethren are the Trustees who hold the property—T. D. Richardson, J. Gall, J. B. Reynolds, E. T. Mount, David Riggs, A. M. Hayes, and Dr. J. Schreiner.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON CHURCH PUBLICATIONS.

SOUTHERN METHODIST PUBLISHING HOUSE.—From the exhibit which we published in this paper a few weeks since it will be seen that the Southern Methodist Publishing House is not only resting at present on a safe financial basis, but the present extent and activity of the business which it is doing, promises much and brightens the star of hope that it will soon be more permanently planted, and its business and usefulness greatly enlarged. The business capacity and energy of the present agent is in every way worthy of the work and end to be attained, and give additional strength to hope, by heightening the prospect of that consecrated enterprize of a Southern Methodist Publishing House. Therefore, Resolved, That the members of the Louisiana Annual Conference severally, will give the Southern Methodist Publishing House such aid and comfort as may be found: 1st—In buying such books as are required to supply our people on our several works; and 2d—By endeavoring to settle, punctually, all just claims which the said Publishing House may have severally against us.

SUNDAY SCHOOL VISITOR.—This is a work worthy of its name. Wherever it goes, it is a welcome visitor. And coming once, it is not only expected to come again, but it is wished for. Our wives and children hail its coming, and the Sunday School is made glad by its presence. Therefore, Resolved, That we will continue to sustain it by making our part of the effort to enlarge its circulation to one hundred thousand subscribers.

THE CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.—This paper speaks for itself, where ever it goes, and your Committee are of opinion that the best report they can make on this work is to circulate it. For it seems to be healthy and strong, and only needs to be seen to make its own and most favorable report. Therefore, Resolved, That we will stand by it and help it on its way to a more extended circulation, and greater usefulness.

HOME CIRCLE.—This work is a good one, and is worthy of its circle; and conducted, as it is, that circle should compass every home. Therefore, Resolved, That we will endeavor to enlarge and make the circle of its circulation as wide as possible.

QUARTERLY REVIEW.—This ably edited periodical is still alive, and from the report of the general agent, it is evidently breathing more freely than it did one year ago. But it has not fully recovered, so as to go abroad in the fullness of such financial health and strength as is needful for a work of this sort. Therefore, Resolved, That we will continue our efforts to circulate and sustain it.

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.—The following exhibit of the joint Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will show the financial condition of that paper, for the year ending Nov. 1st, 1860:

Expenses of publishing the Advocate for the year,		$14,985 17
Receipts from subscribers,	$11,581 75
" Advertising,	3,393 08	14,977 83
Assets, exclusive of amounts due by subscribers—
Cash,	324 61
Press, engine, paper, etc.,	3,961 91
Debts due by advertising,	3,290 82	7,577 40
Liabilities—
Owed for borrowed money,	2,008 11
Sundry small debts,	342 58	2,350 69
Excess of assets,		1,226 71

The Committee also report 5,000 subscribers, and 500 agents and exchanges; making 8,500 copies of the Advocate that go out weekly from the city of New Orleans. This Organ, standing as a sentinel for the Church at one of the most important points in the world, and giving the signal to more than eight thousand subscribers every week, ought to be ably conducted and cordially sustained. We have every confidence in the Advocate a religious journal in the highest sense of the term. Our Conference is deeply interested in the success of the Advocate, as a powerful auxiliary in defending the doctrines of the Bible as held by us; in promoting morality and education, and in sustaining all the interests of truth and Methodism within our bounds. Therefore, Resolved, That we cordially recommend the New Orleans Christian Advocate to our people as an able religious journal, worthy of their patronage; and that we will labor diligently to extend its circulation and collect its dues.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE BIBLE CAUSE.

Your Committe to whom was referred the matter of the Bible Cause beg leave to report:

Whereas, the ever blessed word of God, the Bible, which contains the only and sufficient rule for a correct life and practice, is now being printed and published in nearly two hundred languages and tongues of the babbling earth;

And whereas, by and through the efficiency of the American Bible Society, together with our own South-Western Bible Society, located at New Orleans, nearly one million copies of Bibles and Testaments were put into circulation during the year 1859;

And whereas, within our own bounds there are reliable instrumentalities at work, under the judicious management of the South-Western Bible Society, which promises at an early day to supply every destitute family among us with a copy of the Holy Scriptures, Therefore,

Resolved, That we will co-operate with the American Bible Society, in the distribution of the Bible, in the several fields of labor assigned us.

Resolved, That we will recommend to our people, in our several charges, the adoption of the plan of the Board of the South-Western Bible Society for the distribution of the Holy Scriptures, and endeavor to enlist as many as we can in the good work.

Report of monies collected for the Bible Cause during the year 1860:—Carondelet Street, by Rev. J. B. Walker, $30; Thibodeaux, by Rev. R. A. New, $30; Columbia Circuit, by Rev. R. Porvin, $18; Lake Bistineau, by Rev. J. H. Bault, $11 50; Waterproof, by Rev. W. J. McFarlane, $100; St. Joseph, by Rev. D. Adams, $1350; Centreville Circuit, by Rev. R. T. Parish, $4 50; Richmond, by Rev. Reynolds Trippett, $35. Whole amount, $1,599.

REYNOLDS TRIPPETT, Chairman.

EUROPEAN CORRESPONDENCE.

PARIS, Nov. 15, 1860.

MR. EDITOR: Having crossed the Channel that rolls its troubled waters between the coasts of England and France, and located myself temporarily in this magnificent city, it affords me pleasure to sit down once more to present my offering to the readers of your excellent journal.

From the salubrity of its climate, the grandeur of its buildings, its superb and extensive collections of ancient and modern art, the liberality with which its treasures of art and industry are thrown open for the use of strangers, and other reasons, Paris is fast becoming the general rendezvous for travellers from all parts of the globe. It is computed that there are at all seasons at least fifty thousand strangers here, to add by their presence and their expenditures to the liveliness of the gay metropolis. It was stated to me a few days ago, by an intelligent French gentleman that twenty thousand of these strangers at present in Paris are from the United States of America; and I have heard it remarked before that Americans do not like to stay in London; it is too cold, too much obscured by fogs and smoke; and therefore, after a rapid glance at a few of the principal points of interest in the British metropolis, they are off for Paris-and far other splendid cities of Continental Europe. The other day, as we were passing through the Place Vendome, and viewing with admiration the lofty column on which the statue of Napoleon the Great is elevated, we heard a lady who was gaily tripping by exclaim, "O, I shall weep when I leave Paris!" Happy will it be for those who do not have to have to weep at the recollection of their conduct while surrounded by the seductive influences of this voluptuous city, and well will it be for our country if it should be able to withstand the influences brought to bear upon it by this great arbitress of the fashionable world.

THE FRENCH GOVERNMENT.

This is generally regarded as a military despotism, although the claims of Louis Napoleon were decided by universal suffrage, and he was elected Emperor by an overwhelming majority of the people. The theory of the government is that the Emperor governs constitutionally, conjointly with a Senate, a Legislative body, and a Council of State. But every one conversant with history knows that this is not the first time that the shadow of liberty has been preserved long after the substance has been lost. The Senators are appointed by the Emperor for life; the number of them is about 170, including the Princes—who become members at the age of eighteen,—the Cardinals, the Marshals, and the Admirals of France. Each of these senators is entitled to an annual dotation of 30,000 francs. This body is the guardian and interpreter of the constitution, with power to regulate all matters not therein provided for. It may refuse its sanction to laws which violate the constitution, and propose modifications of it which do not conflict with its fundamental principles. The final settlement of all contested questions of the kind is left to the universal suffrage of the people.

The Legislative Body consists of 262 members, elected by universal suffrage for a term of six years, in the proportion of one member for every 35,000 electors. Its annual session continues three months, and the members are paid nearly five hundred dollars each per month during the session. No petition can be addressed to this legislative assembly. Its sittings are public, but no report of its debates is allowed to be published, except a mere abstract, which is made by the President for that purpose. Both the President and Vice President are appointed nominally by the Emperor.

The Council of State consists of thirty-nine members, who are named by the Emperor and removable by him, each of whom has a salary of nearly five thousand dollars per annum. The duties of this body are to frame bills for presentation to the Legislative Council, to regulate the public administration, to solve all difficult questions that may arise therein, and to support the bills that may be presented by the government to the senate and legislative body. This council is divided into six sections, viz.: 1. Legislation, Justice, and Foreign Affairs. 2. Ostensible Affairs. 3. The Interior, Public Instruction, and Worship. 4. Public Works, Agriculture, and Commerce. 5. War, and the Marine. 6. Finance. Each section is presided over by a Councillor appointed by the Emperor.

The civil list of the Emperor, as fixed by a Senatus Consultum, amounts to $4,700,000, and all the palaces, museums, libraries, and jewels belonging to the State, which he cannot alienate without the sanction of a law. Each of the princes and princesses of the Imperial family is entitled to an annual dotation of nearly three hundred thousand dollars. A standing army of nearly half a million and as many more liable to serve if needed, a navy of 269 vessels, manned by 40,000 seamen, which could in case of emergency be increased to a hundred thousand, are ready to sustain the Emperor of the French and to enforce his commands. From the above brief statement, which we have abridged from a work recently published in Paris, the reader will judge of the amount of liberty enjoyed by the French people. An intelligent French gentleman, of whom we made some inquiries with regard to the legislature of France, replied with a significant smile, "We have no legislature in fact; the Emperor is everything. Like Louis XIV, he says, "L'etat c'est moi," "I am the State." In an address recently delivered in Liverpool, Lord Brougham characterized it as "an absolute government without the shadow of control." We think that his lordship forgot the influence that public opinion in this and all other countries exerts upon governments. A government, whether republican, aristocratical, or mixed, may possess powers which a prudent regard for its own safety would prevent it from using.

The estimated public expenditure for 1861, is nearly 316 millions of dollars. The national debt is $1,400,000,000, about a fourth as much as that of Great Britain. The people of France must, of course, submit to be heavily taxed to support their magnificent government, to carry on their public works, and to keep up their great standing army. What an expensive thing it is to govern a single nation! How much better it would be, to say nothing of nobler considerations, in an economical point of view, if nations and individuals would be persuaded to live in peace and to regulate their conduct by the divine laws as they are laid down in the Holy Scriptures!

With regard to the Emperor of France there are, of course, different opinions, but as far as we have been able to learn, the present government is the best that can be obtained under present circumstances. A despotic government, with a lettered man of genius, able to feed the national pride and to keep the people sufficiently employed to afford them the means of living in comfort and to keep them out of mischief. The stranger in Paris looks with mingled surprise and admiration not only on the great works of utility and magnificence constructed in past ages, but also upon those that are in progress now; and he will not be long here without coming to the conclusion that while Napoleon III is determined to be fully prepared for war, he has both the will and the power to cultivate the arts of peace. Under the influence of the same ambition which prompted his uncle to prodigious efforts for the purpose of making France the greatest of nations and Paris the capital of the civilized world, he professes to labor for the same end, not by the victories obtained in war, if war can be avoided with honor, but by the more glorious achievements of industry, and science, and the beneficent arts of peace. We know not what disposition God in his providence may make of the nations of the earth, nor how far he may please to use the present monarchs who reign over them, but at present we can see no good reasons for believing that the darling project of Napoleon Bonaparte will ever be completed by his nephew. There are two other Great Powers: one a despotism in the North of Europe, and the other a confederation of republics in North America, rapidly progressing in wealth and power, which must inevitably, as far as human appearances go, become superior to France or any of the ancient despotisms and over-populated nations of the earth. Within the immense empire of Russia or the rising republics of America will, in our opinion, the greatest cities of the earth yet be found. However this may be, if the Emperor of France should be true to his pledges, he may retain his position on the throne of France, and do much to promote the happiness of a people whose almost idolatrous attachment to his house is known throughout the civilized world; but otherwise, there will be another terrible and bloody struggle among the European nations, and the true civilization of France, yet in the future, will be wrought out by other hands. While there is a necessity for the existence of such an immense standing army and police, while the majority of the people of the country are in great poverty, and more than two millions of them have to be supported at the public expense, all the wealth and magnificence of the metropolis will not prove to us that that the true end of government has been attained.

THE INFALLIBILITY OF THE POPE PROVED AT LAST.

It is known, no doubt, to many of your readers, that the Emperor of France has been for some time under the displeasure of the Roman Pontiff, on account of the favor which he has shown to the schemes of the Italian revolutionists. It is generally believed here that the Emperor was included in the bull of excommunication fulminated from the Vatican against Victor Immanuel and his adherents. L'Univers, the only paper in France that ventured to publish the bull, was suppressed on that account, a striking commentary on the freedom of the press in this country. An amusing story is in circulation in Paris, with regard to the judgment expressed by the Pope of the character of the Emperor. It is said that a gentleman belonging to the Opposition stepped up to a friend, and shaking hands cordially with him, exclaimed, "You know, I never felt vid in the infallibility of the Pope, but now I am converted!" "You me! Monsieur," replied the other; "what has converted you?" "O," responded the gentleman, "the Pope has declared Louis Napoleon to be a hypocrite, and now I begin to believe that he is infallible." This reminds me of an anecdote which took place at a late meeting of the Social Science Association in Liverpool. Baron Gudin, the celebrated French marine painter, delivered a speech in English, against the probability of a war between France and England, in which he expressed his decided belief that the Emperor was the most anxious to preserve the entente cordiale. He spoke also of an apparatus which he (Baron Gudin) had invented, in connection with gas and water, which would, he hoped, be of great benefit to the public. "The Emperor," he said, "is my friend, and I know the very bottom of his heart." Lord Brougham, who was in the chair, smiled and shook his head, when he heard these words, and at the conclusion of the baron's speech, after eulogising his talents as an artist, he added, "But with reference to his great discovery—I do not mean that of the bottom of the Emperor's heart, but of the gas and water apparatus—I hope we shall soon hear more." These remarks of Lord Brougham, delivered in his dryest manner, excited roars of laughter, which seemed greatly to puzzle the Emperor's friend.

THE REVOLUTION IN ITALY.

Le Siecle of to-day contains some severe criticisms on the Papal Government and on General Lamoriciere, who was so completely defeated, and taken prisoner by the King of Sardinia. The report of the General, published in the same paper, in which he endeavors to explain the causes of his defeat, is by no means creditable to the temporal power of the Pope. After all the efforts that were made by the supporters of the Papal sovereignty, it appears from that report, that the army of the Pope was badly supplied with arms, provisions and the munitions of war. This shows either that the repeated and urgent appeals that had been made to the Catholic world for pecuniary aid had most signally failed, or that the funds collected had not been applied to the purpose for which they were designed. By the way, we have heard it asserted on good authority that this abortive attempt to sustain the worn-out Italian despotisms derived much of its support from the Legitimist party in France, many of whom flocked to the standard of Gen. Lamoriciere, and now share in the disgrace of his defeat. Does this explain the policy of the French Emperor, in remaining apparently neutral, while he still occupies Rome with his forces? Monsieur Edmond About, one of the literati of Paris, author of a work on the Italian question, which is regarded as one of the causes of the revolution, has recently published a large pamphlet, entitled "Rome Contemporaine," in which he contends strongly against the temporal power of the Pope, and intimates that if the Papacy continues to claim it, it will not be long before its spiritual power will be questioned. The first work of this author, to which we have alluded, was not allowed to be sold in Paris, but this circulates freely, and we meet with advertisements of it in all the principal book-stores of the city. There is much ground for hope, in the present aspect of this question, and of affairs in Europe generally, that God is opening the way for the entrance of the Gospel of his Son. Great changes are taking place; the seeds of divine truth will yet produce much fruit, and the kingdom of God will be established among these nations, so long oppressed by the dominion of Antichrist.

Many are speculating as to what will be the course of the Emperor in religious matters now that he is under the ban of the Pope. The Catholic religion is, numerically, at least, the religion of the Imperial family, and of the masses of the people. Prayers are publicly offered in the churches for him, and he exercises no small power over all the churches in France. Some are calling to mind the case of Henry IV, one of the ancient Bourbon kings, whose claim to the throne was contested on account of his connection with the Protestants. Thinking less of his religious consistency than of the prerogatives and pleasures of royalty, he abjured Protestantism, observing, "Paris is well worth a mass." We may soon see a similar change, though we do not suppose that for the present the plain and simple rites of Protestantism will suit the genius of the French people. Some modifications of Romanism may be made similar to the changes introduced into the English churches by Henry VIII, and this only lead to the gradual introduction of the unadulterated truth as it is in Jesus.

JOHN BAYLEY.

THE CHURCH AND THE WORLD—HUMANITARIANISM.

What this Humanitarianism is, will appear as we consider what sceptics are pleased to call the defects of Christianity. "What does the Church do," say such men, "for the masses of humanity in their daily toil?" "It divorces religion from labor," says the Freethinker; "keeps it confined to Sundays, and shuts it up in churches and books." It does not teach the "inherent dignity of temperate labor," nor "elevate the occupation itself. On the contrary, it speaks of labor as a curse, offers man no method of relief here upon earth, but points to a Mohammedan paradise in a future world."

It would be insulting the intelligence of our readers to make any lengthened reply to such assertions. Who, we ask, "divorces religion from labor?" It is not the Church. Who regards labor as the great curse of humanity? It is not the Church. Sin is the great curse from which the Church groans to be delivered, and which is the fruitful source of all the misery that exists in the world. We would ask all who entertain these views to step to some heathen land, where there is no Church but that of man's own "freedom of thought and action," and tell us how the dignity of labor is "how highgarded?" Will they tell us that how elevated the occupation itself? What but the despised Church makes the contrast between civilized and savage lands? What else impels the steamship across the ocean—drives the printing press—thrills along the nerves of the telegraph, and moves in every department of cheerful toil? Strike out to-day the influence of the Church on the daily work of man, and what to-morrow would be the condition of the world? We may be told that all these results are due, not to the Church, but to the liberal ideas and freedom of thought that prevails among us. But whence came these liberal ideas and all this freedom of thought? Whence came progress in the Arts, the Natural Sciences and civil freedom? How is it that we find nothing of these where the Church does not exist, and where her sanctifying influences do not extend?

Let the Church do what she may, in any department of moral reform, and she is subjected to ungenerous criticism. At the present moment she is making an effort to restore to our land the better observance of the Sabbath, and is therefore accused of confining religion to Sundays, and cramping it up in puritanical straight jackets. She is organizing Christian Associations, Mission Schools, and Juvenile Reformatories, and multiplying religious publications through the Tract and Bible Societies, and is for this accused of shutting up religion in schools and books. At the present day, when men are yearning for better treasures than those secured by daily toil, and more satisfying enjoyment than this world affords, we are told that the Church offers no relief but a Mohammedan paradise in a future world! All this sounds more like the trembling confessions of alarm at the rapid progress of Christianity than anything else. We are referred to "Religious Poetry," and told of what that "has done to cheer the heart and nerve the arm of toiling man," and whence, we ask, came that same religious poetry? Why not honestly admit the influence of the Bible, and direct men to that for relief, instead of to human compositions, however excellent. It is vain to dream of a Church yet to arise, which shall do more for the world's toil, than that Church which is founded and built upon the Word of God. If that is a failure, what can take its place? Alas, it is like the expectation of the Jews for a Saviour yet to come.

Our attention is next directed to the domain of intellectual life, and here we are told that the mission of the Church is exceedingly disastrous. Building up their own vagaries, they style them "the Church," against it they direct their assaults, overthrow it by trifling effort, and then flourish in triumph. In illustration of this statement, Humanitarianism is represented as "a sincere Child of Light," who, desiring information respecting Astronomy, asks, "Did the sun stand still at the command of Joshua?" Now, apart from the consideration that the Church was not organized to teach men Astronomy, the principle here involved, that nothing should be believed which is not understood, is false in theory and impossible in fact. Religion, by its very nature, must contain mysteries; and in the examination of the Bible we find that there are depths which man cannot fathom, heights to which he cannot soar. But let it be carefully noted, that the most mysterious parts of revelation are not opposed to, but only above our reason. Reason and Faith are not enemies, but twin sisters. Where a deep chasm appears, which Reason cannot overleap, and which makes her dizzy as she looks, Faith bears her aloft on angel's wing as she exclaims, "O the depth!"

Our own existence—yea, a grain of sand has—unfathomable mysteries. And it ought never to be forgotten that there are higher sources of information than mere induction. Reason can do no more with the Bible, than to judge by the evidences that it is the Word of God.—Satisfied with these, we are bound to believe and receive whatever that says, whether we comprehend it all or not. If that reveals God as existing three persons in one Being, we must believe it. If that says that the sun stood still at the word of Joshua, we must believe it. To doubt is to doubt the declaration which all the evidence shows is of God. And while Faith transcends Reason, faith in God's Word is not unreasonable.

Very similar is the mode of attack in the department of Geology. It is assumed that the Church is bound to instruct men in this science, and is severely rebuked because it does not. But let it be remembered that geologists are not agreed among themselves, and the Church has no controlling voice. Yet, if these objectors will carefully examine the subject, they will ascertain, that all the great advances that have ever been made in science, have been made by sons of the Church. Hugh Miller could read the Scriptures with more profit than the pages of the earth's stony record. Newton could go from the stars to the Bible, and feel that he had made no descent. And judging from experience, all the progress the world will yet make in science will be due chiefly to the influence of a Scriptural Church. The Church has nothing to fear from any natural law or mode of being. There is a perfect correspondence between her faith and the "elder Scripture," lettered by God's own hand among the lofty stars, or graven by His finger on the stony tablets of the earth. The Word of God is an aid to piety, not a substitute for science.—When the Almighty reveals the world's past, he does so on the same plan as when he makes known his future, and according to the design he had in view. It is by these standards that the Word must be judged; the narrative does not contain the whole truth, but it contains as much as these standards require.

Here it is worthy of remark, that while the assault is at first made upon the Church, the whole ground in dispute changes, and the question really becomes, What does the Bible do for man in his intellectual life? The mission of the Church is so identified with that of the Bible, that attacks on the one are necessarily attacks on the other, and hence it is demonstrated that this hostility to the Church is hostility to the Word of God. If any doubt should remain upon this point, it is completely removed, as we hear these objectors represented by this "sincere Child of Light" ask, "May I walk in the fields on Sunday? May I pull the sweet flowers, to deck the brow of childhood, and tell it as I crown it, of Him who has made everything beautiful in its season?" "Nu, my son," the Church is represented as replying, "that would be breaking my Sabbath." And we ask, would it not be breaking God's Sabbath, too? For what kind of a God will you tell childhood of, in the fields, on the Sabbath? Is it anything, more than the God of Nature? Is it a God who has said, "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy?" Is it a God who is angry with the wicked every day, and who will by no means clear the guilty? Is it a God of Moral Attributes, and whose mercy tones sweetly speak of pardon and salvation through the blood of Christ? Ah, no! The Sunday newspaper and works of fiction of questionable morality, not the Bible, are the usual companions of these Sunday strollers, while their conversation, instead of being "always with grace, seasoned with salt," is almost always "earthly, sensual, devilish." And therefore we claim that it is presumption to say that the Church does nothing for man intellectually, when the teachings of the Church, or rather of the Bible which it holds, are set aside.

COTTON MANUFACTURE IN SCOTLAND.

The cotton manufacture in Scotland is only of comparatively recent introduction, the first steam engine for a cotton factory having been constructed so late as 1792. Its principal seats are in the counties of Lanark and Renfrew. Some of the fabrics made at Glasgow and Paisley are of almost unrivalled beauty and fineness.—The number of cotton mills in 1837, was 177; all those of considerable size, with only a few exceptions, being situated in Glasgow, or within twenty or thirty miles of it, and all of them without exception being connected with Glasgow houses, or the Glasgow trade, at least as far as the raw material was concerned. In 1850 the number of cotton factories was 168, with 1,683,093 spindles and 23,564 power looms, employing 36,325 hands. In 1847, there were 152 cotton factories, with 2,041,129 spindles and 21,624 power looms, driven by 9,961 horse power, of which 7,641 was steam, and employing 34,698 hands, of whom 7,609 were males and 27,089 females. The entire manufacture of Scotland may be said to center in, or be dependent on, Glasgow.

The above progress, when explained in the language of practical life, represents an increase of consumption in the above period at the rate of 70,000 bales a year, or 1,350 bales per week.

In the next place, let us have our attention directed to the amount of increase which has been going on in our spindles. In the year 1850, according to a Parliamentary return, there were in Great Britain (exclusive of Ireland) 20,858,662 spindles employed upon cotton; and having reference to the annual consumption at that period, of 629,798,400 pounds, it amounts to 30 pounds per spindle. Therefore, if we apply this fact to the cotton consumption of last year, viz:—937,800,800 pounds, we shall find that the manufacturing power we now possess is that of 32,460,026 spindles, showing an increase in the ten years of 11,601,964, or an average [illegible] progress of 20,718 [illegible] cotton. Meanwhile, during the ten years in question, the principal increase in growth has been in the United States; and large, as it may appear, it has barely kept pace with the increase of demand, and the supplies held in the market have been gradually diminishing, and often reduced to a very scanty amount.

The machinists of this country have, perhaps, never before found themselves so fully employed; and, according to information derived from them, there is now going on a greatly accelerated increase in the erection of mills and in the extent of spinning machinery in course of preparation, not only in Great Britain, but also in all parts of Europe, as well as in the United States.

The new machinery now constructing for British account has been put down at 45,000 spindles per week, which is more than a two-fold rate of increase as compared with the period before referred to. These will require to be supplied with their 30 pounds of cotton per annum for each spindle; and at no distant day the increase of consumption for the new spindles will amount to not less than 160,000 bales a year, as against a rate of 70,000 bales in the last ten years; or a future supply of 3,000 bales per week, as against the former rate 1,350 bales.

Let it also be borne in mind that the cotton manufacture of Great Britain constitutes only one-half of the consumption under our immediate notice, while the other half is carried on in various manufacturing districts of Europe and in the United States. Now, should the like rapidity of progress in manufacture be going on in these other countries, it must be obvious that an extension of growth will very soon be required of more than 300,000 bales a year.—Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

THE FALL OF TABLE ROCK.

BY THE LAST MAN WHO STOOD ON IT.

George Wilkes writes from Niagara to the Spirit of the Times: "I said that I had something to do with the falling of Table Rock, that broad shell on the Canada side, which in 1850 jutted over the very cauldron of the seething waters, but which tumbled into it on a certain day in the month of June of that, by me, well remembered year. About noon on that day, I accompanied a lady from the Clifton house to the Falls. Arriving at Table Rock, we left our carriage; as we approached the projecting platform I pointed out to my companion a vast crack or fissure, which traversed the entire base of the rock, remarking that it had never appeared to me before. The lady almost shuddered as she looked at it, and shrinking back, declared she did not care about going to the edge. 'Ah,' said I, taking her hand, 'you might as well come on, now that you are here. I hardly think the rock will take a notion to fall merely because we are on it.'

The platform jutted out from the mainland some sixty feet, but to give the visitor a still more fearful projection over the raging waters a wooden bridge, or staging, had been thrust beyond the extreme edge for some ten feet. This terminated in a small box for visitors to stand in, and was kept in its position by a ponderous load of stones heaped upon its inner end. The day was very bright and hot, and it being almost lunch time at the hotels, but few visitors were out, so we occupied the dizzy perch alone. We gazed fearfully out upon the awful waters, we stretched our heads timidly over the frightful depth below and we felt our natures quelled in every fibre by the deafening roar that seemed to saturate us, as it were, with an indefinable dread.

'This is a terrible place!' said I. 'Look under there and see on what a mere shell we stand. For years and years the teeth of the torrent, in that jetting, angry stream, have been gnawing out that hollow, and some day this plank must fall.' My companion shuddered, and drew herself together in alarm. Our eyes swept the roaring circle of the waters once again; we gazed upon it in fearful fascination, when suddenly, turning our looks upon each other, each recognised a corresponding fear. 'I do not like the place!' exclaimed I, quickly. 'The whole base of the rock is probably disintegrated, and perhaps sits poised in a succession of steps or notches, ready to fall out and topple down at any unusual perturbation. That fissure there seems to be unusually wide to-day! I think we had better leave, for I do not fancy such a finish; and besides, my paper must be published next week.'

With these very words—the latter uttered half jocosely, though not without alarm—I seized my companion's hand, and in absolute panic, we fled as fast as our feet could carry us, toward what might be called the shore. We burst into a laugh when we regained the land, and jumping into our carriage, felt actually as if we had made a fortunate escape. We rolled backward toward the Clifton, but before we had proceeded two minutes on our way, a thundering report, like the explosion of an earthquake, burst upon us, and with a long roar, the ground trembled beneath our wheels. We turned to find that Table Rock had fallen. We were the last upon it, and it was, doubtless, the unusual perturbation caused by our flying footsteps that disturbed the exactitude of its equilibrium and thrilled it from its final poise. In a minute more the road was filled with hurrying people, and during the following half hour we were told a hundred times in the [illegible] of the next morning journals, that some down the Falls, who were on Table Rock, had dog would shake old Lon[illegible] Bridge from end to end, are told that the trot of a when it would not be disturbed by the rolling of heavily loaded wains. Table Rock had not begun on [illegible] fore whenever I hear it spoken of, I always s[illegible] and therefeel as if I had something to do with its fall."

GARIBALDI'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The following is the Farewell address of Garibaldi:—

NAPLES, November 8, 1860.—To my Companions in Arms: We must now consider the period which is just finishing as the last stage but one to our national resurrection, and prepare ourselves to finish, worthily, the marvellous design of the elect of twenty generations, the completion of which Providence has reserved for this fortunate age of ours.

Yes, young men, Italy owes to you an undertaking which has been marked by the applause of the Universe. To this wonderful account in your country's history, another more glorious still will be added, and the slave shall show at least to his free brethren a sharpened sword forged from the links of his fetters. To arms, then, all of you, and the oppressors and the mighty will disappear like the dust.

You, too, women, cast away all cowards from your arms, that will only give you cowards for children, and you who are the daughters of the land of duty must have children who are noble and brave. Let timid doctrines be cast out from among us. Providence has presented Italy with Victor Emanuel, and by the side of Victor Emanuel every quarrel should be forgotten.

Once more I repeat my battle cry, "To ar

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$3 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1860.

PREACHERS' POST-OFFICES AND THE ADVOCATE.

We hope all our preachers who may desire to have the Advocate changed to other post-offices, will write us immediately. Give us the names of both the old and the new post-offices. And as soon as you can learn them, send us a list of all the post-offices in your respective charges. Presiding Elders who receive an appointment from the Bishop and those who are employed by presiding elders, are expected to act as agents, and will receive the paper gratis. No paper will be sent, or changed, unless it is ordered.

We ask the brethren to remember the resolution passed by the Mississippi Conference, calling upon the other patronising Conferences to unite with her in raising the subscription list to 10,000 subscribers this year, in order that the paper may be enlarged and improved. We wish to enlarge just as soon as possible—at the beginning of the year, if we are sufficiently encouraged.

NEW ORLEANS DEPOSITORY.

The public is informed that a full supply of all the books published by the Agent of the Southern Methodist Publishing House at Nashville, will be kept on hand at the Depository, 112 Camp-street, New Orleans. They will be sold on the same terms, wholesale and retail, as sold at Nashville, and as published in our General Catalogue. The business will be conducted in the name of JOHN F. EARLY, Agent.

It is not intended that this Depository shall come in conflict with the interests of Conference Depositories; but all who find it convenient will do well to send their orders to New Orleans.

It is not our purpose to keep a stock of miscellaneous works; but persons wishing the standard works of the Methodist Episcopal Church not published at Nashville, will be accommodated as far as possible; and the Agent will furnish any standard theological and literary works generally in demand. It will also be the pleasure of the Agent to furnish any books that may be needed, on reasonable terms, when said publications can be procured in the city.

It is understood that a full supply of Sunday-School books will be kept on hand.

J. B. M'FERRIN, Agent.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE.

The Conference met in Baton Rouge, Wednesday, Dec. 5, and closed on Tuesday following. Bishop Early presided. Though in good general health, yet he had taken cold, and showed weariness. It is not a matter of surprise, after his long episcopal tour. Notwithstanding, he abated none of his usual vigorous executive ability in the chair. Nor did he abate any of the fervor which he habitually throws into the religious services of his Conferences. It seems to us that Bishop Early devotes his whole time, and mind, and life to his episcopal work, both when on duty, and when off. The blessing of God be upon him, and upon all our Bishops.

We believe we have never attended a Conference where the presence of the "unction of the Holy One" was more manifestly prevalent. The Conference Sermon was by Rev. Dr. Walker, and on the first day of Conference, by Lord's Supper was administered. "The communion of Saints" as felt and illustrated in a Conference Sacrament, was full of "the beauty of the Lord," and of His saving grace. Every day and every night, the gospel was preached, and the word was with power. A gracious revival began, and is yet in progress. Great numbers of people came forward as penitents to the altar of prayer, quite a number were converted—thirty or forty; and over fifty persons joined the Church. There is good prospect that as many more will be brought into the fold of Christ before the meeting closes. God grant it. The good cause is more hopeful in Baton Rouge than ever before. A Conference love-feast was held on Sunday morning at 9 o'clock. It was a precious season—as happy a time as we have ever witnessed in an annual Conference. It is, we believe, to become a settled usage in this Conference, that the Lord's Supper is to be administered at the close of the Conference Sermon, and a love-feast to be held on Sunday morning. The practice ought to be adopted, we respectfully suggest, in all our Conferences. Good men among the laity, as well as ministers, have long felt that our Conferences were in danger of degenerating into mere business meetings.—This should be avoided, if possible.

We have said that the work of God is prosperous in Baton Rouge. The pastor, Rev. W. E. M. Linfield, has done a noble work during the past year. Under his energetic administration, one of the most elegant and commodious churches in the State has been erected. It is a model of beauty and taste. It was dedicated on the Sabbath preceding Conference. Rev. O. K. Marshall, D. D., preached the Sermon. We were not present, but we learn that it was one of the Doctor's best efforts, and that is sufficient praise, if such things should be praised. At the close of the discourse, between $4,000 and $5,000 were raised to pay the debt on the church. Considering the circumstances, and the pressure of the times, this was a noble offering. About $1,500 remain to be paid. We trust it may soon be done, especially as brother Linfield is returned to the same charge for the present year.

The citizens of Baton Rouge, and the Presbyterian and "Christian" Churches, treated us with a generous and cordial hospitality. The writer and his "better half" found a pleasant home in the family of Mr. LaFayette Caldwell.

Dr. M'Ferrin was with us, and preached, and spoke at the Missionary anniversary, with much acceptability and success. The Doctor's visit to the Southwestern Conferences will be followed, we trust, with good results.

Dr. McTyeire, of the Nashville Christian Advocate, was at home among his brethren in his own Conference once more, and was cordially welcomed. His paper gives general satisfaction, and he preached with great unction and good results.

The brethren of the Conference were much pleased to have among them the venerable and Rev. Heman Bangs, of New York, who, with his wife, were on a visit South to their daughters and sons-in-law, Professor and Mrs. Magruder, and Rev. and Mrs. Benjamin Jones, of the Mississippi Conference. At the Missionary anniversary both were made life-members of the Parent Missionary Society of the M. E. Church, South.

Two of the members of the Conference had died during the year, Rev. B. C. Steagall, and Rev. Samuel Hawes. Appropriate memoirs were read, and addresses made.—That of Dr. Keener in memory of brother Hawes was one of the most beautiful and touching tributes of the kind we have ever heard.

We have no time to write more, being en route to the Alabama Conference. The Conference documents will give fuller information. Let it suffice to say that, considering the size of the Conference, it is remarkably strong in talent and character, and the Church in its bounds is prosperous. May God make the coming year more prosperous still.

THE APPOINTMENTS.

NEW ORLEANS DIST.—New Orleans District, John C Keener, P E; Carondelet Street, Joseph B Walker; Felicity Street, Linus Parker; Moreau Street, James E Bradley; First German Mission, to be supplied; Second German Mission, John A Early; Third German Mission, Frederick W Traeger; Fourth German Mission, August Arnold; Jefferson City, Joseph H Stone; Algiers, to be supplied; Laurel Street and Greths, to be supplied; Carrollton, Henry Avery; Wesley, Soule and Wilson's Chapels, to be supplied; Baton Rouge, William F M Linfield; Plaquemine, Arthur W Smith; Bayou Sara, John F De Witt; Editor of the New Orleans Christian Advocate, Clayton C Gillespie; Editor of Nashville Christian Advocate, Holland N McTyeire; Professor at Centenary College, Almerin H Miller.

OPELOUSAS DIST.—Opelousas District, Robert J Harp, P E; Opelousas Circuit and Colored Mission, Daniel S Watkins, Alanson W Moore; Washington, Benjamin F White; New Iberia, Robert R B Alexander; Calcot Pass, John P Wynn; Abbeville, John S Davis; Franklin, Alexander E Goodwyn; Teche Colored Mission, James T Fontaine; Pattersonville and Brashear City, Fisher T Rawson; Grand Lake Circuit, to be supplied; Thibodaux and Napoleonville, Stephen J Davis and Robert A New; Caleasieu, Joel Saunders; Grand Chenière, Seaborn J Graves; Bonna and Tigerville, William McBeath; Bayou Rouge and Big Cane, P Goodwyn; Simsport, Frederick White.

MONROE DIST.—Monroe District, James A Ivy, P E; Monroe, Samuel Armstrong; Bastrop, William C Young; Jefferson, James L Wright; Island and Wright Chapel, John A Miller; Bartholomew, William J McFarland; Ion, John C Pitts; Carroll, Thomas J Upton and John C Faulk; Bethl, Anthony Cannon and Wade H Frost; Columbia, Robert Parvin; Alexandria, Nehemiah A Cravens; Cotile, Joshua F Scarlock; North Rapides, Robert T Parish; North Rapides Mission, Uriah Whatley; Evergreen, Uriah Riley. William H Scales, Agent of Centenary College.

BOMBAY DIST.—Homer District, Richmond Randle, P E; Homer, Philip L Henderson; Minden, Samuel S Scott; Farmerville, Thomas H McClendon; Ouachita, Richard M Crowson; Vernon, Charles W Hodge; Dugdemona, to be supplied; Winfield Mission, Dabney P Catlett; Montgomery Mission, John W Hearn; Sparta, Whitmel P Kimball; North Bossier, Jeptha Landrum; South Bossier, Baxter Clegg. William D Shea, President of Homer College.

SHREVEPORT DIST.—Shreveport District, Henry C Thwentt, P E; Shreveport, Samuel H Suratt; Caddo, Samuel J Hawkins and Wm F Alexander; Grand Cane, Thomas B Baldwin; Mansfield, James L Chapman; Pleasant Hill, John Pipes; Natchitoches, William D Stayton; Sabine, Henry O White; Red River, John C Reid; Lake Bisteneau, Jesse Fulton.

LAKE PROVIDENCE DIST.—Lake Providence District, Anderson B Fly, P E; Providence and Bunch's Bend, Benjamin F. Alexander; Pecan Grove and Willow Bayou, Charles J. Halberg; Richmond, R Trippett; Wesley Chapel Circuit, J D Adams; St Joseph, Henry B Frazee; Waterproof, Thomas B White; Tensas and Elizabeth Chapels, William G McCaulley; Phillip H Diefenwerth, supernumerary; Vidalia, Fighting Bell; Trinity, Moses Davis; Sicily Island and Harrisonburg, Lewis A Reed; Sicily Island Mission, to be supplied; Winsboro, Thomas J Lacey; Centerville, John H Bunn. George J Canoon transferred to Virginia Conference. Charles W Conrsey, transferred to Arkansas Conference.

THE BALTIMORE CONFERENCE LAY CONVENTION.

This Convention assembled at Baltimore on the 5th inst. On the second day of the session, the Committee on Business made the following report:

TO THE BALTIMORE ANNUAL CONFERENCE, AT STAUNTON ASSEMBLED:

Fathers and Brethren—At a Convention of the Laity representing a large majority of circuits and stations within the bounds of your Conference, held on the 11th day of December, 1860, to take into consideration the state of the Church within the territory of the Conference, the difficulties which meet us and the calamities which threaten us were duly considered, and the Convention resolved to express to you by memorial their conclusions respecting the present condition of the Church in Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia.

The great object had in view in the call of the Convention was peace, an ardent wish pervaded the whole Convention to free our preachers from the obligation of perpetually defending our Church polity respecting slavery, and to leave them at liberty to preach the Gospel to which they were called.

For a long series of years, from 1814, the date of the unfortunate great division of the Church, till now, (our Conference by that separation having been rendered a border Conference), we have had over a large portion of our territory an incessant contest with brethren of the Southern Conferences and others on the subject of discipline respecting slavery. Like all contests touching ecclesiastical matters the controversy has been conducted with general Christian bitterness. Our preachers, convened in preaching the Gospel, until at last all allow, of any material increase of membership has been abandoned. Our preachers and laity have been happy indeed if they have been able to maintain the Church as she is without expecting to increase her strength by any important addition to her membership.

At this juncture assembled the late General Conference, a body which little understood and seemingly little cared for the interests or condition of our Church in the bounds of your Conference, and which, instead of ameliorating our condition, has rendered it infinitely worse, by substituting an entirely new chapter on the subject of slaveholding, making non-slaveholding a test of membership, and utterly closing all doors of entrance to the people against the preachers of your Conference, if they endorse or submit to it.

Your whole duty, in the opinion of the Convention, is to preach the Gospel, and that to as many of the people within the bounds of your Conference as is possible. It is useless to state to you, for your body must be aware that if, after the incessant efforts you have made under the late discipline, you have lost in the Baltimore Annual Conference territory and population represented by some twenty-one circuits and station appointments in the Methodist Episcopal Church South. With the new chapter on slavery, you are utterly precluded in the whole slaveholding territory of the Conference from preaching with any success, because the people will not willingly listen to those placed under solemn obligation to maintain and administer a church discipline contrary to the sentiments of our people, and even obnoxious to civil censure.

Along the whole border you are brought face to face with the preachers, your brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and the only substantial difference existing between you in point of church economy, creed or discipline, is in this vexed slavery question. In the minds of the masses the only reason for your antagonistic relation to that Church is your implied obligation under the discipline to inculcate a doctrine on that subject which constitutes the distinction between our Church and that.

Your silence upon the chapter, your varied explanation of it and your repudiation of it avail nothing. The hearts of the people are closed to you. The Church is in perpetual agitation. All Church enterprise is retarded. The building of Churches and parsonages has almost entirely ceased and missionary collections are called for in vain. The pulpit ceases in great measure to address the ungodly and is of necessity compelled to fight for the very existence of the Church itself. It was more than the Church could do prior to the late General Conference to maintain herself among us. With the new chapter on slavery it is impossible. Under these circumstances, dear brethren, we look to you to provide some measures of peace and quiet to our denomination here, which shall preserve our unity.

Sixteen years of perpetual strife has passed and our people refuse longer to stay with us if quiet is not restored, and our preachers be allowed, as we know you desire to be, to preach a Gospel not of contention, but peace.

In the opinion of this Convention your connection with the Northern Conferences implies the prolonging of strife and bitter controversy, which must result in disastrous consequences. From that connection you derive no strength or support. Every periodical published by our Church is imbued with controversy on this subject; some of them, indeed, it would be penal to circulate in Maryland and Virginia.

No good reason can be given for the maintenance of the connection, which we are of opinion is not desired by a large majority of our Northern brethren, except upon terms which would prove our ruin.

The Baltimore Conference, by unanimous vote, have again and again assured our people, in the midst of strife engendered by this agitation, that they would not hold connection with any ecclesiastical body which made non-slaveholding a test of membership. The people now demand a fulfilment of those pledges.

We do not pretend to conceal that whatever course you may take to allay the strife and excitement among us will be involved in some difficulty. It is certain that unless it is distinctly understood by our people, after your present session, that you acknowledge no connection with or authority of the late General Conference, and refuse to administer the discipline it made, our Church in Virginia and much of Maryland is gone forever.

After due deliberation, therefore, we have determined to ask our preachers of the Baltimore Conference that, for the sake of quiet in our borders, for the sake of the preaching of the Gospel, that it may find ready entrance among us, for the endings of contraversy and to promote the best interests of Methodism and religion, they redeem the pledges given time after time to our people and sunder a connection now merely nominal, which is full of strife and positively death to all hopes of peace or the advancement of Christianity in our midst.

Having settled the question of dissolution of our Church connection, we do not deem it necessary, nor do we desire to point out the specific mode of subsequent Conference action as to the form or character of our future organization. We have discussed the well known state of the Church, suggested the source of relief, and only desire to add that whatever mode you may adopt for its accomplishment, you may confidently expect the hearty support of the laity of the Conference.

We desire to submit to the Conference the opinion of the Convention more specifically embodied in the following resolutions:

1st. Resolved, That the Baltimore Annual Conference should at its next session declare that by its recent unconstitutional and violent action the Buffalo General Conference has shattered the ecclesiastical connection which has hitherto held us together as one Church, and that the Baltimore Conference does not and cannot longer remain under its jurisdiction or submit to its authority or those representing that authority.

2d. Resolved, That the Baltimore Annual Conference should also assert and claim that the said General Conference has by its said action separated the several Annual Conferences represented therein and concurring in said action, from the Baltimore and other non-concurring Conferences, and that the Baltimore and other non-concurring Conferences constitute the Methodist Episcopal Church proper, and may exercise all the rights, duties and powers appertaining properly to their position as such.

3d. Resolved, That the position we shall occupy after such action as has been indicated has been taken—whether it shall be that of independence or union with some other branch of the Methodist family, upon such terms as might be mutually satisfactory, is a question which this Convention is willing to leave to the sound discretion of the said Annual Conference, in the light of all the facts and circumstances surrounding it.

4th. Resolved, That a Committee be appointed by this Convention to present the proceedings of the same to the next session of the Baltimore Annual Conference, through such members of Conference as they may elect, and that they be instructed so to do at the earliest practicable moment.

Mr. Allen arose and stated that he heard the report with a sense of gratification, and it left no room for debate; he therefore moved that it be adopted at once.

A minority report was read by Mr. Fowler, agreeing with the majority report in relation to the cause of present troubles, but differing therefrom as to the means proposed for relief.

Mr. Carter moved that the majority report be adopted. He alluded to the misapprehension which prevailed in regard to the object of the Convention. He contended that one object was to quiet the great Methodist public mind upon the subject of slavery, and not to excite it.—Since his arrival in Baltimore, and previously thereto, he had heard that the object of the body was to excite the great Methodist public mind. There never was a profounder mistake. It had been supposed that the Laymen's Convention had some great scheme in hand to destroy the Baltimore Conference, and especially the Methodist Episcopal Church of the city of Baltimore, but this idea was repugnant to the feelings of the members of the Convention. He contended for the right of petition; and justified it by historic reference. He disclaimed any feeling of hostility to those brethren who differed from him upon the exciting subject. The great idea of the report of the majority was a separation of the Baltimore Conference from the Church; not a partial separation, but a separation in toto. Not that they had any feelings of hostility to others of the connection, but that they were driven to the position through sheer necessity. He had taken great pains to ascertain the sentiments of the people of Virginia, and come to the conclusion that a separation was inevitable. If it did not take place, they would lose the people. They were already going off, and would continue to do so, and if a remedy was not adopted there would not be enough of the living left to bury the dead. The next question was, if there was to be a separation, where should they go? He was opposed to the Methodists of Virginia leaving the great Methodist family of Baltimore. [A Voice—"And the District of Columbia."] Yes, he would gladly include the District of Columbia; for when he spoke of the Methodists of Baltimore he always included those of the District. And what God hath joined together let no man, let no set of men, let no set of ecclesiastics, put asunder. He contended that if separation took place it would be an unnatural separation. True it was that they were bound to forgive their enemies, yet they were not bound to surrender and give up those rights and heritages bequeathed them by their fathers and their fathers' God. He discussed the action of the Buffalo Conference at length; commended the speech of his dear brother Moffat Griffith; spoke of brother Moody's action in that ists. He assured the members of the Anti-Abolition when the petition was sent to the General Conference in 1864 there would be no representative left behind in Virginia. There would no longer be open hearts or open houses for such of those who had offended the Church by their abolition tendencies. The speaker essayed to show the aggressive character of their legislation, alluding in particular to the removal of Rev. Dr. Stevens as editor of the New York Christian Advocate.

Mr. John M. Beck, of the Baltimore City Station, arose and made a vehement speech, declaring that if a speedy separation did not take place, Methodism would die. He condemned the aggressive and insolent action of the members of the North, and declared that no redress could be expected from the next General Conference.

Mr. M. Walton, of Woodstock, Va., followed in support of the report, and was succeeded by Mr. A. M. Arlett, of Centreville Circuit. This gentleman fully declared his approval of all that Mr. Carter had stated as the opinion of those whom he represented. If the dissolution did not speedily take place, Methodism would be dead in four years in the Eastern Shore of Maryland.

Dr. Hand, Summerfield Circuit, demurred to the proposition in relation to the proper question involved, and discussed that subject at some length. It was not to his mind a question merely of dollars and cents, but one which involved a mighty principle. He was opposed to giving up the property, and with that exception he agreed with all his brethren. He loved the good old Church on account of its endearing reminiscences, and his heart would always cling to them.

Judge Bond replied to the Doctor, and was quite facetious as well as felicitous. He agreed with the general sentiment, that Methodism would soon be dead within the bounds of the Baltimore Conference if the anti-slavery chapter in the Discipline was to be enforced in that Conference. He disagreed with Dr. Hand, and said that his speech reminded him very forcibly of the young man spoken of in Matthew, who, after an interview with the Saviour, went away sorrowful because he had great possessions. He showed the loss which the Church had sustained on account of the aggressive legislation of the Methodists of the North.

A committee of brethren from New York city, representing the Ministers and Laymen's Convention of that city, were present, and were invited to take seats in the Convention.

Dr. Bond arose and addressed the Conference, making a definite allusion to parties in the Church who had not only impugned his motives but maligned his personal character. He alluded to the property question and contended that the whole question was that of property or Christ. He was willing to give up the churches and go back to the sail-loft or garret where he had once refreshed his soul. He declared emphatically that the very moment the General Conference developed its hostility to the true interests of the Great Church, the Baltimore Conference should have seceded. He essayed to prove also that in case of secession he did not believe they would lose a single church. The self-respect which every Christian ought to have, impelled the duty of secession. If they wished to be respected and honored by the community and the religious public, they should stand up for their rights, and if necessity compelled them to worship in a tent yonder, instead of a great church, they would be much more honored and respected, a pure gospel would be preached and many more sinners be converted. He gave an amusing account of his experience whilst at Buffalo, during the Conference.

Dr. Henry M. Wilson, of the Charles Street Church, stated that as the Convention had heard from all parts of the work, he thought that the time had come for a secession, and he hoped that the main question would be taken up. He moved that a vote be taken upon the question.

Mr. H. B. Pitzer, of Berkely, opposed immediate action. He said Dr. Bond had raised all the fuss, and said Virginia was in the highest state of excitement. It was false, for the State was as calm as the summer breeze, but terrible as an army with banners. He preferred to await the action of the next General Conference.

Mr. W. R. Woodward, of Wesley Chapel, spoke with considerable feeling, declaring that although he loved the Church, yet he preferred dismion. He regarded the slavery chapter as the first overt act committed, and he regarded the chapter as a test of membership and decidedly unconstitutional. In conclusion he stated that when the time came, he and his constituents would be ready to meet it, and denounced the anti-slavery taint of the publications of the Book Concern.

Mr. James M. Lester, of the Strawbridge Church, succeeded. He opposed secession.

Mr. J. C. Harkness, of McKendree Chapel, Washington, also spoke at length, and urged secession with considerable warmth.

The previous question was called, whereupon the vote occurring on the adoption of the report of the majority, it was adopted. Dr. George S. Merryman, of Exeter Church, suggested that the report be amended so as to include the East Baltimore Conference, but Dr. Bond suggested that that could be effected by a separate resolution, and the Doctor accepted the proposition.

The house adopted a resolution authorizing the Committee to forward copies of the report and accompanying resolutions to the East Baltimore Conference and the Western Virginia Conference, after which the Convention adjourned.

From an account of the proceedings of the Convention published in the Baltimore American, we learn that the majority report was adopted by a unanimous vote. We presume it was nearly so, at least.

DEMORALIZATION OF SYRIA.

Famine and suffering (says the N.Y. World) have so demoralized Syria, that nothing will save the country but a hand strong enough to lift it bodily from the slough into which it has fallen. Important as relief is, it is only palliative. It should by no means be withheld on that account, but we cannot shut our eyes against the prospect of the demoralization and even extinction of the nominally christian population of Syria. A few months ago they were a sober, industrious, and self-supporting people; now they are without the means of roofing their houses, cultivating their fields, or obtaining a morsel of food or rag of clothing, except from the hand of charity. The measures of Fuad Pacha have been totally inadequate, and were probably taken only to satisfy the expectation of the Christian powers, and to avert their interference. If it had not been for the attitude of France and England, and especially the former, probably nothing of a remedial or punitive character would have been undertaken by the Porte. In Damascus, Fuad Pacha announces his work to be done; and murder, which hid its head for a time, now stalks abroad. The same is true in other parts of Syria. The Druses, undisturbed and unpunished, are tilling their fields, almost in sight of the blackened villages of their victims. At the same time an oppressive and peculiarly Turkish measure comes to light. Urged, no doubt, by his needy master, Fuad Pacha is exacting fines from the people in lieu of military services for six years past. In vain they offer to perform the service—that is exactly what is not desired, for then there would be more soldiers to be paid, whereas the government is deeply in debt already. A significant political feature appears hereupon—the people talk about annexation to France!

What is going on at Constantinople? A loan has been negotiated with the Rothschilds and others, at Paris, for 400,000,000 francs, on terms which make the bankruptcy of Turkey as sure as the expiration of the credit. The total avails of this loan—about $40,000,000—will scarcely suffice to pay the present arrears requires no prophetic eye to find out what more? It emperor in this significant but simply mercantile transaction. Turkey needs money, is willing to pay for it, will mortgage herself to get it. She will fall into the hands of France by unavoidable, honest foreclosure. The world will look on, and cannot guinsay the conclusion.

When we turn again to Syria, who will regret the prospect? The Christian population, certainly a minority, but having the warm sympathy of the civilized nations, would hail the domination of France with frantic joy. The Christian world must add its assent. Will Alexander fight for balance of power? The Black Sea and the Danube, and—more a barrier than they—his inclement climate, lie between him and the mortgaged lands of the Turk. Francis Joseph cannot spare his legions. England will scarcely interfere against the immediate interests of the Christian population of Syria, and against clear mercantile right for fear of French proximity to her Indian possessions. She loves a fair bargain, and has great self confidence. Truly, events ripen fast in the East. Prophecy becomes history, leaf by leaf, turned by the Divine hand, but not often according to man's interpretation or expectation. The Ottoman empire is about to be contributed to that wonderful scroll, and not less Napoleon, far-seeing as he is, takes his place thus blindly, his part in the great design to be discerned hereafter.

A NEW MOVEMENT.

We have spoken (says the N. Y. Methodist) of the lamentable internal discords of the Protestant Episcopal Church. The denomination inflated with the whimsicalities of Puseyism and High Church absurdities, has disabled for any general good its best capacities and best men. Last week it gave a melancholy, but, as we think, necessary example of its own distractions in New York. An independent missionary organization was celebrated at Dr. Tyng's Church. Bishop Eastburn, Dr. Tyng, and distinguished clergymen from all points of the compass, made speeches. They declare that while the Low Church, or Evangelical party of the denomination, gives most of the money for missions, the High Church party claims to control the missionary operations. Hence the "evangelicals" must have their own missionary society, or be the mere supporters and instruments of the Papalizing party. What a sad fact is this, if even it be a necessary one! The fact is, the Protestant Episcopal Church needs spiritual regeneration. God is chastising it for its vanity and unchoritableness. Until it repents, and corrects these glaring and characteristic vices, it will have no peace and no success. An important duty devolves upon its evangelical party. They may be right in this painful example, but they must meet the corruptors of their communion on other grounds also. They must more practically protest against the uncharitable isolation of their Church from the fraternity of Christ's people in this land. They must become more completely one with the common Christianity of the country in all those growing relations of catholicity which are recognized by other denominations. Repelled by their own dominant High Churchmen, and yet standing aloof from evangelical bodies without their pale, they refrigerate and die. We hope there is a better fate for them; they should prayerfully resolve to seek it.

ABOLITIONISTS ALTERING THE BIBLE.—The Tennessee Baptist regrets to be compelled to record its verdict "against the American Bible Union's revision of Paul's letter to Philemon, as also against the revised version of Matthew. In both versions 'doulos' is translated 'servant' instead of slave—its only primary and proper signification. It signifies a 'bond slave,' 'chattel,' strictly, one born so. Wherever it is used in the New Testament it requires this signification; and any other destroys the sense."

AUTHORS AND BOOKS.

NEW YORK, Dec. 11, 1860.

Mr. William Brotherhead, of Philadelphia, known to book and autograph lovers as one of the most judicious of "Old Book" sellers in this country, has just published a literary curiosity of more than common interest, namely: "The Book of the Signers: Containing Fac-simile letters of the Signers of the Declaration of Independence. Illustrated, also, with sixty-one Engravings, from original photographs and drawings of their Residences, Portraits &c. From the Collections of an Association of American Antiquaries."

Autographs of the signers of the Declaration are, among the most rare of more modern objects of that kind. Of complete collections there are but two known: Dr. Sprague of Albany, (who is the most successful collector in this country) has one; and Dr. Rallies, of Liverpool, England, has another. Queen Victoria's collection, in the private Library at Windsor Castle, is nearly complete, wanting only the handwriting of three of the signers. Fac-similes of the Declaration and its signatures are not rare. But Mr. Brotherhead does much more and better than this in his quarto volume. He gives not only fac-simile letters of the fifty-six Signers, but sixty-one, neatly engraved illustrations, consisting of portraits, residences, &c., from original drawings, or from photographs executed expressly for this work. Most of the autograph letters here given are now first published to the world, and some contain curious and interesting items of Revolutionary views and intelligence. Thus Abraham Clarke writes to a friend, Col. Elias Dayton, on the very day on which the Declaration was signed:—"At the time our Forces in Canada were retreating before a victorious army, while General Howe, with a large armament, is advancing towards New York, our Congress resolved to declare the United Colonies Free and Independent States. A Declaration of this Purpose, I expect, will this day pass Congress; it is nearly gone through, after which it will be proclaimed with all the State and Solemnity circumstances will admit. It is gone so far that we must now be a free and independent State, or a Conquered Country."

Again, the actual circumstances under which the Declaration of Independence was signed are related in a letter from Governor Thomas McKean, written at Philadelphia, in 1813. He says: "In the printed public Journal for Congress for 1776, vol. 2, it would appear that the Declaration of Independence was signed on the 4th of July by the members whose names are there inserted, but the fact is not so, for no persons signed it on that day nor for many days after; and among the names subscribed, one was against it—Mr. Read—and seven were not in Congress on that day—namely: Messrs. Morris, Rush, Clymer, Smith, Taylor, and Ross, of Pennsylvania; and Mr. Thornton, of New Hampshire: nor were the six gentlemen last named at that time members: the five for P. were appointed Delegates by the Convention of that State on the 26th of July, and Mr. Thornton entered Congress for the first time on the 4th of November following: when the names of Henry Wisner, of New York, and Thos. McKean, of Delaware, are not printed as subscribers, though both were present and voted for Independence. Here false colors are certainly hung out: there is culpability somewhere. What I can offer as an explanation or apology is this; that on the 4th of July, 1776, the Declaration of Independence was ordered to be ingrossed on parchment and then to be signed, and I have been told that a resolve had passed a few days after, and was entered on the secret journal, that no person should have a seat in Congress, during that year, until he should have signed the Declaration, in order (as I have been given to understand) to prevent traitors or spies from warming themselves amongst us. I was not in Congress after the 4th, for some months, having marched with my regiment of associators of this city, as Colonel, to support General [illegible] at camp of ten thousand men I returned to Philadelphia, took my seat in Congress, and then signed the Declaration on parchment. [In October, 1776.] Two days after I went to Newcastle, joined the Convention for forming a Constitution for the future State of Delaware, (having been elected a member for Newcastle county,) which I wrote in a tavern, without book or any assistance."

John Hancock here informs General Washington, in March, 1776, that he sends him $250,000 for the use of the army under his command. Dr. Franklin, in April, 1788, near the close of his career, writes to a friend in Paris, mentioning that he had the project, when his three years of service would expire, in the October following, to retire to his grandson's villa and complete his Memoirs, but that he had resolved to proceed in that work to-morrow, and "continue at it daily till finished, which, if my Health permit, may be in the ensuing summer." He alludes to the approaching election of the first President, and thinks, with his correspondent, "that the two Chambers [to the National Legislature] were not necessary."

Take it altogether, it is a most interesting work, and will find ready acceptance among those who are fond of real instead of sham, and of useful instead of useless literary curiosities.

Mr. Brotherhead announces, as in preparation and to appear in 1861, The Book of the Generals of the Revolution, being Biographical sketches of each, with fac-simile letters and eighty-eight portraits, views, &c.

Mr. Dickens' new story of "Great Expectations," which is being printed in Harper's Weekly, opens in a style which gives promise of his very best style. There are not any of those extreme mannerisms which have in his late works, offended against good taste; and there is a genuine interest, and a splendid picturesqueness of representation of which only he is master. One of the London literary journals says "the story opens with a striking scene of the escape of a prisoner from the hulks—his wanderings without food in the country, and the search of the military for the fugitive. The work promises to be one of the most effective of that wonderful series of fictions for which the public are indebted to its author. It is curious that both Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Dickens appear to have finally abandoned their original mode of presenting themselves to their readers. Is it that there is something agreeable to an author's feelings in addressing a hundred thousand purchasers, and as many readers as that number implies? or is it that the monthly slice of pure fiction—itself a mighty innovation in its day—was but a step in an inevitable progress towards universal magazine writing? Certain it is that no work of fiction, however popular, ever attained the circulation which may be reached by publication in a periodical. Nor is this dependent on difference of price. The fact is, we suspect, that while a large class will buy a magazine published monthly or weekly, containing pleasant interchange of amusement and instruction, it is not customary for readers to buy but rather to hire a work of fiction, except in its cheapest possible form. Mr. Dickens did indeed, in the instance of Master Humphrey's Clock, try the plan of threepenny numbers, which, with their original engravings, were remarkably cheap; but the experiment was never repeated. The French have already reached the goal to which we seem tending. All popular French novels for many years have appeared in the feuilleton of the newspaper, generally in daily portions; and it is we believe extremely rare to republish them at what may be called a hiring price."

It is very noticeable how also in this country the best talent is now drawn to the magazines and papers. But this is a subject I have already had my say on in a former letter; and though Mr. Thackeray may repeat his old stories and old sneers and old figures of speech ad libitum and ad nauseam, (for proof compare the Roundabout Papers in the Cornhill Magazine, with Vanity Fair, Pendennis and the Miscellanies,) you readers and yourself, oh most patient of Editors, would doubtless resent that kind of thing from your correspondent.

The Americans are so thin-skinned, and so resentful to remember any particularly sharp thing that is said about us in Europe, that doubtless we shall never forgive nor forgive Sidney Smith's question, "Who reads an American Book?" The saucy question has just received a very effective answer in London, where, at the Annual Trade Sales, the book of which the greatest number of copies were sold was actually an American Book, namely, Mr. J. Lothrop Motley's History of the Rise of the Netherlands. Of this work, which is in three volumes octavo, which is a history, and which treats of a country in which John Bull has no particular interest, more than three thousand copies were sold, which is an immense number for England, while of the next most popular work only fourteen hundred copies were sold. "Who reads an American book?"

The London Athenæum gives the following information about several noticeable historical works about to appear in England, and to which I have made some allusions before: "Bacon, Pope and Pitt,—not to speak of such lesser lights as Lord Colchester and General Sir Robert Wilson,—are to come out of the Albemarle Street press new men. William Pitt is to be illustrated by documents never before published; and we trust that Lord Stanhope will, in due time, be able to overcome that family resistance which has, so far, kept from the reading world any exact knowledge of the circumstances which prevented the marriage of Pitt to the lady who afterwards became Lady Buckinghamshire. Pitt's letters on the subject are in existence; they are not more curious and romantic than credible to the great statesman, and to the young lady who was the object of his attachment. In the 'Personal History of Lord Bacon' we shall have more than a hundred new letters,—most of them relating to the domestic and personal history of the Father of Modern Science; including letters from Lady Bacon to her son, letters from Francis Bacon to his mother and his brother Anthony, letters from Lord Essex and Sir Robert Cecil, and various grants from Queen Elizabeth. Of Alexander Pope, Mr. Murray is to give us upwards of three hundred new letters, together with an explanation which will give the existing Pope Correspondence a meaning wholly new and surprising. Pope will come out of this scrutiny to his life and literary exercises, a perfectly different picture from that under which the satirist has heretofore masked and hidden himself."

Darwin's "Origin of Species" is to receive a new and forcible reply in a volume forthcoming in England, by John Phillips, Professor of Geology in the University of Oxford, called "Life on the Earth; its Origin and Succession." It is remarkable that Geologists, generally, have ranged themselves on the side of Mr. Darwin's opponents, and that his warmest supporters are among the students of vegetable and the lower forms of animal life. While the English Oxford thus goes against Darwin, our American Cambridge is divided. Professor Gray, after some shilly shallying in the Atlantic Monthly, has at last come out on Darwin's side, while Professor Agassiz will devote a large space in his next volume of contributions to Natural History to a refutation of what he believes to be Darwin's scientific error. Darwin maintains the gradual and progressive development of life on the Earth, tracing all creatures back virtually to one primary creature, and believing that the creative hand of God had been exercised only in the first instance, and that having set the ball a rolling, He withholds His hand, so to speak. Agassiz, in his celebrated Essay on Classification, maintains on the contrary that genus in Natural History represents a Divine idea which is varied more or less in the species which are long to that genus—but always in such manner that the idea which is involved and represented in that creation is presumed and is more or less superior. This is as fairly put as I can put it to be [illegible] English Cambridge, Professor Sedgwick, one of the venerable teachers of that venerable institution, in commencing his forty-second course of lectures, promises to occupy a portion of his time during the present session what he characterizes as 'the reviewed heresy of what is known as Darwin's Theory.' In Switzerland, Pictet, the eminent Geologist, opposes the new opinion in a way which the Darwinians themselves style the most moderate and temperate review of Darwin yet published.

The current number of the North British Review presents a list of contributors, that would make the fortune of any periodical. Sir David Brewster furnishes an article on 'Galileo,' Mr. Isaac Taylor, one on 'Modern Thought, its tendencies, &c.,' 'American Humorists' are treated by Mr. Gerald Massey, 'Lord Bacon' by Professor Frazer, the successor to Sir William Hamilton's chair, and 'Syria and the Druse Question' by the Rev. Mr. Porter, whose mastery of the subject has been proved by the authorship of 'The Hand Book of Syria and Palestine,' in Mr. Murray's series.

LETTER FROM BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 7, 1860.

MR. EDITOR: The Convention of Laymen of the Baltimore Conference, which met in this city on the 5th inst., closed its session last night about 12 o'clock. The Convention was composed of intelligent and highly respectable lay members of the Church from every part of the Conference. It was declared, almost unanimously, that a longer connection with the Church, North, would be suicidal—would ruin the Church forever. The heaviest denunciations were pronounced against the Church North; and the present political crisis of our country was attributed to the preaching of politics from Northern pulpits instead of the pure gospel of Christ. This is a move in the right direction, and no doubt the Baltimore Conference will soon take the position it ought to have assumed in 1844.

The whole North is becoming greatly alarmed at the present threatening aspect of political affairs. In the city of New York alone between twenty and thirty thousand laborers have been thrown out of employment. In New York the tide of popular sympathy and feeling has turned in favor of the South. I believe an army of fifty thousand men could be raised there in a day, to march to the assistance of the South, in case coercion be attempted by the Government. A few nights since, I met, in the cars, an ultra

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

DECEMBER 19, 1860.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

METHODIST.

CHANGED AGAIN.—Rev. C. B. Parsons, who recently withdrew from the Methodist and connected himself with the Episcopal church, in Louisville, has now reconsidered the step, and on the 3d, made formal application for readmission into the Methodist church.

CHOIRS.—The President of the Maryland Methodist Protestant Annual Conference, in his executive paper, says: "Have long considered choirs, as usually conducted, a decided injury. They are generally so exacting and sensitive as to control the church instead of being controlled by it."

ENGLISH WESLEYANS.—At a recent meeting a Methodist mission to Naples was more than hinted. At the close of a speech in which a Mr. Smith was referred to by Mr. Arthur, the report says: A warm response was given to Mr. Arthur's hope, that Mr. Smith might live to see a Wesleyan mission station in Naples." We suspect Mr. Arthur himself with been a missionary to Italy before long. Mr. Farmer dwelt on the importance of enlisting the services of the young, and on the healthy influence of the widely-spreading doctrine of proportionate giving.

WESLEYAN LIBERALITY.—The Methodist children of England contributed last year no less than $100,000 for the Wesleyan schools—day and Sunday. This is an example that tells the real story of Wesleyan liberality. The children are trained to it—it becomes the edicted habit of the denomination.

The Methodist Episcopal conference of Georgia, just adjourned after some days' session to be held at Savannah. A committee of seven has also been appointed to inquire into the expediency of dividing the conference, to report at its next annual session.

EXCOMMUNICATED FOR VOTING FOR DOUGLAS.—Considerable excitement has been caused at Canghlenoy, Oswego county, N.Y., says the Utica Observer, by a most extraordinary action on the part of the Methodist Episcopal Church in that village. It appears that Elder Salsbury, pastor of the society there, who has been a worthy and eloquent preacher of the gospel for some forty-five years, and a presiding elder for some sixteen years, residing at Central Square, in said county, having voted for Douglas at the late election, was excommunicated by his church. On Thursday, succeeding the election, a meeting was called to take the pastor's case into consideration. The question of his "pro slavery voting" was discussed and severely denounced. A brother arose to speak on the impropriety of the church meddling in politics, and the malice done in proscribing the elder for his political views, when the speaker was hissed and stamped down. The question of excommunication was put, and the elder's head rolled from under the church's guillotine. Several valuable members have signified their intention to withdraw from the church, and great excitement and bitterness prevail in the community.

BAPTIST.

BAPTISTS IN FRANCE.—The Paris correspondent of the Edinburgh News of the Churches, has the following interesting notice of the Baptist churches in Northern France. Our Baptist brethren in the Aisne and the Oise have still their principal places of worship closed. At Lafere their church is open to their 130 converts, at Verberie and at Deneia they have no official difficulties; 200 meet at the latter place, and 30 at the former; but at Chauny, where there are about 150 baptized members, and about as many adherents, the church has remained closed ever since 1853. The municipality acknowledges that no complaint can be made against any one of them. The Emperor assured the pastor, who appealed to him some years ago, at Compiegne, that no hindrance should stand in the way of their public worship.

BAPTISTS IN THE NORTH-WEST.—The Michigan State Convention reports the labors of 11 missionaries in connexion with 16 churches; 14 conversions; 47 baptisms; expenses about $1,900. The Iowa Convention reports missionaries; 67 conversions; 59 additions to churches; receipts $3,156 73 cents. The Illinois Convention reports 10 missionaries, supplying 13 stations; 87 additions to churches; receipts $2,500. This is not a very satisfactory showing for domestic Missions under Home Mission auspices. Surely 55,000 Baptists should accomplish far more through their State organizations.

GROWTH IN THREE YEARS.—At the recent Baptist Triennial Conference in Germany, it was stated that within the past three years, within the bounds of the Conference, 3,077 persons have been baptized. Net increase, 2,277. The churches within the same period, have advanced from sixty to sixty-five; the out-stations, from 671 to 756. Total number of members, 7,905.

The New Jersey Baptist State Convention held its thirty first anniversary recently at Paterson. The annual report showed but little increase during the year in the number baptized, but an unusual time of building new houses of worship, and the prospect of enlarged usefulness in the future. The history of the convention during its thirty years presents some items of interest worthy of note. At the time at its beginning there were fifty-five churches, generally poor, with between three and four thousand members; now there are one hundred and twenty churches, many of them large and strong, and upwards of 17,000 members.

DEATH OF ELDER DAWSON.—The Southwestern Baptist comes to us draped in mourning for its late editor, Elder John E. Dawson. He died in Tuskegee, Alabama, on Monday the 15th inst., in the fifty-sixth year of his age.

EPISCOPAL.

The Western Churchman publishes from the Journal the following statistics to show what it calls the backward advance of the Church in Illinois:

	1859.	1860.
No. of Families	2,490	2,430
No. of Souls	12,523	10,612
Baptisms	854	741
Confirmations	325	359
Communicants	3,009	3,059
Contributions	72,350	58,688
No. of Clergy	60	57

SALARIES.—The Scottish Episcopal Bishops receive only £127 a year. The clergy in general are paid from £70 to £80 a year. For the purpose of increasing the stipends of the clergy, the Endowment Fund has been commenced.

The Diocese of Virginia gives the following statistics: Communicants, 7,870; Sunday Schools, 83; teachers, 933; scholars, 6,079; contributions, $113,510 57. The small attendance of the colored population of the State upon the services of the Episcopal Church, has been a subject of frequent remark.

EPISCOPAL STRENGTH IN SOUTH CAROLINA.—The published statistics furnish the following figures: Communicants, 3,166 white and 2,960 colored; baptized, 188 whites and 1,156 colored; confirmed, 215 white and 173 colored; marriages, 165 white and 203 colored; funerals, 251 white and 148 colored.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE BIBLE CAUSE IN NEW JERSEY.—The Somerset County Bible Society, New Jersey, met at Harlengen on the 25th. The year has been unusually prosperous; not a co-operating church having failed to send its contribution; $1,750 in cash were laid on the treasurer's table during the meeting. It was resolved to raise $2,500 the next year. On the 21st ult., the Hunterdon County Society met at Bloomsbury. During the year, the receipts of the society have been $1,100, and it was resolved to raise $1,500 the coming year.

TOLERATION IN SWEDEN.—The Swedish Government has just taken an important step in the path of civilization and reform. Up to the present time no Jew has been permitted to set up any business or exercise any profession in Sweden without a special license from the government; which license could only be obtained after much vexatious delay and considerable expense.—To put an end to this grievance, the King, in accordance with the Legislative Chambers, has just decreed that every Jew, who has not been condemned for any criminal action, has permission to establish himself in Sweden without any restriction, and to follow any calling, or to acquire property of any kind, under the same circumstances as the Christians in that country. There are still illiberal restrictions upon Catholics in Sweden.

THE POPE.—A Paris letter says the resources of Pius IX. are exhausted, the collection of Peter's pence has been a miserable failure, the revenue from the provinces which have placed themselves under the Government of Victor Emanuel is suddenly cut off, the Pontifical army has no longer an existence, and the temporal rule of the Papacy is drawing to a close.

The Espana, of Madrid, complains that the circulation of Protestant Bibles is allowed to continue.

DOMESTIC.

From the latest telegraphic dispatches to this city, we are in possession of the following intelligence:—

The Politteal Crisis.—A dispatch, recommending immediate action by the Southern States was sent off from Washington on the 13th inst. It declares that there is no longer any prospect of reconciliation there. This dispatch is signed by Reagan, of Texas; Landrum, of Louisiana, all the Mississippi members, all the Alabama members except Houston and Cobb; all the Georgia members except Hill and Hardeman, all the South Carolina members now here, Rullin, of North Carolina, and Hindman, of Arkansas. The committee of Thirty-Three, on hearing this fact, immediately adopted resolutions recognizing existing difficulties, and promising early action for the purpose of providing all constitutional remedies. The Southern men held another meeting on the 13th inst., at the rooms of Gen. Reuben Davis. They denounced the resolutions adopted by the committee of Thirty-Three as a fraud upon the South. In Georgia large secession meetings have been held during the past week, at Savannah, Columbus, and Atlanta. Great enthusiasm prevailed. On the 14th inst., the Legislature of South Carolina appropriated half a million of dollars for secession exigencies. The Louisiana Legislature has appropriated a like sum for a like purpose. It is stated in a dispatch from Washington that Senator Douglas affirms he will not deliver a speech advocating or countenancing secession. Senator Fitch, of Indiana, is said to be preparing a speech, in which he will strongly urge coercion. The Washington correspondent of the N. Y. Times asserts that Senator Contenden says he can perceive no evidence of compromise or concession on the part of the Republican leaders; and that unless some immediate guarantee is given, Kentucky will go with the South. A letter from Gov. Houston denies his having consented to convene the Texas Legislature in extra session, but urges a convention of the Southern States. A dispatch from Richmond, dated 17th inst., says: "It is the prevailing sentiment here that disunion can not be avoided, and that Virginia must go with the South. Attorney General Black has been appointed Secretary of State, vice Secretary Cass resigned; and Mr. Black is to be succeeded as Attorney General by Mr. Edward Stanton, formerly of Pennsylvania. We also learn that Secretary Thompson has gone to North Carolina, and that he says: "I am in favor of the resumption of friendly relations between the North and South, when the Free States shall give satisfactory constitutional guarantees." We further learn that it is apprehended at Washington that bloodshed must of a necessity ensue, if South Carolina demands the surrender of Fort Moultrie. Hon. Caleb Cushing has been summoned to Washington at the President's request.

Congressional.—The Senate has confirmed the appointment of ex-Governor Thomas, of Maryland, as Secretary of the U. S. Treasury. Mr. Clark's resolution of inquiry concerning Forts Moultrie and Sumter, and the Charleston arsenal, has been laid over. Senator Slidell, of this State, in a speech in the Senate on the 17th inst., charged President Buchanan with imbecility, imputing to him the cause of the present troubles, and the authorship of the present crisis. In the House, on the 17th inst., a motion recommending the repeal of all State laws that conflict with the Constitution and laws of Congress, passed by a vote of fifty-one against 14. Mr. John Cockrane, of New York, presented a resolution to the effect that neither Congress nor a Territorial Legislature, shall have the power to annul or impair the right of property in the Territories. A bill was introduced by Mr. Adams, of Kentucky, providing for the punishment of those who may attempt to obstruct the working of the Fugitive Slave law, and giving damages for the loss in double the amount of the value of the rescued slave. The committee of Thirty-Three makes but meager progress, the Chairman, Mr Cotwin, of Ohio, reported a series of resolutions, which have met with the approval of a majority of the Committee. The following is a synopsis of the resolutions: 1st. Pledging the faith of Congress against any attempt to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia; 2d. Against any interference with the inter-slave trade between the States; 3d. The abolition of slavery in the dock-yards and arsenals of the slave States; 4th. Favoring any amendment or amendments which will render the Fugitive Slave acts effective and satisfactory to the South; 5th, against the discrimination of Congress in the case of slave States asking for admission into the Union; 6th, the protection of the property of the people of the territories, when non-intervention by Congress shall be the law.

The following we gather from our exchanges:—

LOUISIANA.

STABLE AND SUGAR HOUSE BURNT.—A few nights ago the stable on the South Town plantation of Wm. J. Minor was entirely consumed by fire. It was the largest and finest stable in the parish, and contained all the provender of the plantation, which was lost. Last week the Sugar House on Col. Robinson's Little Caillou plantation was also consumed by fire, with about eighty hogsheads of sugar.

A large meeting was held in Franklin, St. Mary parish, last week, at which was almost unanimously adopted the resolutions of the Southern Rights Association.

The Catahoula Independent of the 5th has the following:—The Ouachita is now navigable for the largest class of boats to Camden, and its tributaries are traversed by those of smaller calibre to their fountain heads. This causes a tumbling about of matters and things in general, and, whether in or out of the Union, we appear to be getting along pretty much after the same old fashion. Navigation has doubtless opened for the season, and a fleet of line boats have taken their position in the Ouachita, Bayou Bartholomew, Boeuf, Tensas, Macon and Little river trades.

ALABAMA.

MONETARY PRESSURE IN MOBILE.—A petition has been circulated among the merchants of Mobile, and numerously signed, asking the city banks to suspend specie payments.

ALABAMA COMMISSIONERS TO SOUTHERN STATES.—Governor Moore, of Ala., has appointed ex-Gov. John A. Winston commissioner to represent that State in conference with the State of Louisiana upon the subject of the present condition of public affairs. The Hon. A. F. Hopkins has been sent in similar capacity to Virginia, and Hon. R. H. Smith to North Carolina.—We have intelligence also of the appointment of Hon. E. W. Pettus to Mississippi, L. Pope Walker to Tennessee, Stephen F. Hale to Kentucky, and J. A. Elmore to South Carolina. Gov. Winston is also to be commissioner to Arkansas.

The Demopolis Gazette remarks the rapid progress of the work on the railroad, and predicts that in a year's time the connection between that place and Selma will be complete.

MISSISSIPPI.

COMMISSIONERS TO THE SOUTHERN STATES.—The following is the list of commissioners from Mississippi to the other Southern States, appointed by the Governor to solicit their cooperation in resisting the encroachments of Black Republicanism. Some of them have already been announced: Virginia, Chief-Justice C. P. Smith, of the High Court; Maryland, Judge A. H. Hardy, of the High Court; North Carolina, Hon. Jacob Thompson, present Secretary of the Interior; South Carolina, Hon. T. J. Booker, of Jackson; Georgia, Judge Wm. L. Harris, of the High Court; Alabama, Ex-Governor Joseph W. Matthews, of Marshall; Louisiana, Hon. Wirt Adams, of Jackson; Texas, Hon. Edward M. Yerger, of Jackson; Arkansas, Col. George R. Fall, of Washington; Tennessee, Attorney-General T. A. Wharton, of Jackson; Kentucky, Hon. W. S. Featherston, of Holly Springs; Missouri, Delaware and Florida, Unappointed.

GULF AND SHIP ISLAND R. R.—The Brandon Republican says: The Directors of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, at their late meeting in this place, adopted the late survey through the town of Brandon. We learn that the President of the road is now locating the lands, and the probability is that work will shortly be commenced unless the unsettled state of political affairs continue. The road being located here will make Brandon one of the most desirable inland towns in the State.

MURDER BY A SLAVE.—On Friday week last, a horrible murder was committed near Grenada, Miss., Mr. Robert Williams, the wealthiest man in Yallabusha county, gave one of his negro men a task in splitting rails which he failed to perform, and his master promised him a whipping. While he was counting the rails, the negro stepped up behind him and killed him with the axe, striking him seven blows after he was down.

POPULATION.—A table published in the Mississippian, embracing returns from all the counties in the State except Hancock, Tallahatchie and Winston, shows the increase in the population of the State, since 1850, to be 187,189.

Hon. T. Posey, United States District Attorney for the Wilkinson district, Miss., has sent his resignation to the President.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COLUMBIA CONVENTION.—The State Convention assembled at Columbia on the 17th inst. Mr. Jamison was elected Chairman. On taking the Chair he addressed him, than of presiding officer over a convention with such objects, and affixing his signature to its proceedings. The considered the convention as engaged in the performance of the most important duty which ever devolved on the State of South Carolina, the result of which was with that Supreme Being, whose assistance he would now humbly implore for their beloved State. A resolution was then offered, that when the convention adjourn, it should be to meet at 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon in Charleston. This gave rise to a lengthy debate, Mr. Miles appealing to the convention not to adjourn to Charleston, but to remain in Columbia, regardless of small-pox or other physical or moral causes, and discharge the duties required of them by South Carolina. He urged that other States would jeer at our timidity in such a crisis, and the want of moral power in the present movement would be affected in other sympathizing States, if the convention should adjourn to Charleston. Mr. Cobran, of Abbeville, said he would never consent to leave Columbia until an ordinance of secession was passed, and urged his fellow members to stand up to all the responsibilities of their position—to remain and perfect their work. Mr. Keitt remarked that he was as ardently devoted to secession as any man, and determined to remain with the convention until he action was complete, and, in recommending immediate adjournment to Charleston said, that he would never consent to hurry through the proceedings of the convention, giving notice that no ordinance should be passed with his consent, until every point was duly considered in all its bearings, after a full investigation and fair discussion. He said, we were engaged in a high, patriotic duty, and demanded that members should be in a location where their minds would fairly grapple with the important issues involved, and not be agitated with the prevalence of a tearful and loathsome pestilence, when no pressing necessity required it. Others took part in the discussion pro and con, when a motion to adjourn to Charleston finally prevailed. A resolution was adopted inviting the commissioners from Alabama and Mississippi to seats on the floor; also, an amendment that they be requested to address the convention at 7 o'clock. On motion, an invitation was also extended to Hon. Howell Cobb to a seat on the floor. Some member, however, objected, at the same time expressing in complimentary terms to Mr. Cobb that he was not an accredited commissioner.

SMALL POX AT COLUMBIA.—A dispatch from Columbia, dated 17th inst., says there were seventeen cases of small-pox on Sunday last, and seven to day. Only such cases are reported, the symptoms and development of which clearly indicate the disease.

INAUGURATION OF GOV. PICKENS.—The inauguration of the new Governor took place on the 17th inst. Gov. Pickens read his inaugural, the sentiments of which were decidedly firm for secession.

HOME INDUSTRY.—The Charleston Mercury says: It is not generally known, perhaps, that we have, within the borders of our State, every convenience and facility for producing an excellent and exquisite article of porcelain ware. At Keoha, the Southern Porcelain Company have been established on a firm basis for some years, and now produces upwards of $50,000 worth of ware yearly. This Company is also manufacturing porcelain water pipes, and have now contracts on hand for $50,000 worth of these; a large portion of which is for the water works of the city of Augusta.

RICE MILL BURNT.—The Charleston Mercury reports the destruction by fire, on Tuesday night, of the West Point Rice Mill. It was said to be one of the finest mills in the country.—The rice burnt was 28,000 bushels, and the total loss about $75,000. The friction of some of the machinery caused the fire.

RESOURCES OF S. C.—Real and personal estate, capital employed in manufacturing, banking, railroads, etc., amounts to $312,526,578. Annual productions, including cotton, rice, corn, wheat, oats, naval stores, etc., $72,724,152

VIRGINIA.

THE "LAST" MANUFACTORY AT RICHMOND.—The manufactory of last and boot-trees has lately been put in operation in Richmond, Va., being the first of the kind ever established there. The proprietors, Worthan & Co., get their persimmon logs from the Chickahominy swamps, and some of them are of such a size as to yield six pairs of lasts.

Major Thompson, of the U. S. A., while walking near the railroad at Lydechburg, Va., on Monday night, accidentally stepped over a wall, and fell a distance of about twenty feet into the river, or rather into the mud. He, however, escaped injury beyond a few bruises.

THE ELECTORAL COLLEGE.—The Electoral College of Virginia, which assembled at the Capital of the State on Wednesday last, cast the full vote of that State for Bell and Everett—the Breckinridge Electors having refused to avail themselves of the technicalities by virtue of which they had been declared legally chosen.

The report of the treasurer of the commonwealth is published by the Enquirer. The amount received into the treasury for the fiscal year ending September 30, was $5,971,624 29, and the disbursements were $5,720,315 68.

GEORGIA.

DEATH OF JUDGE HILL.—The LaGrange (Ga.) Reporter announces the death of Hon. Edward Y. Hill, for many years a prominent citizen of Georgia. He was stricken with paralysis while delivering a public speech in LaGrange, on the 17th inst., and died on the 20th. He was a brother of Hon. Joshua Hill, member of Congress from Georgia.

GEORGIA GUESS IN HOMESPUN.—The Atlanta (Ga.) American, reporting the State Fair, says: "Not the least attractive feature of the day was the appearance on the ground of a party of twenty-seven ladies, teachers and pupils of the Spring Hill School, attired in a substantial check homespun dress, made fashionably, full and flowing. Twenty-seven blooming, bright-eyed southern lasses, in cloth of Southern manufacture, of which the staple was peculiar to their homes, was indeed a sight worth seeing on a Southern fair ground.

TENNESSEE.

HORSE CHOLERA.—A disease called the horse cholera is prevailing in Bradley county, Tennessee, and the citizens have lost near a hundred head within the last three weeks by this fatal disease. Very few survive an attack of it. No remedy has been found for its cure yet. The hog cholera is also prevailing there, and killing a large number of hogs. One man lost about $400 worth.

NORTH CAROLINA.

THE GOVERNOR'S MESSAGE.—From the message of the Governor of North Carolina, recently delivered, it appears that on the 1st of October the State debt amounted to $8,123,500, in addition to which the public faith is pledged to several railroad companies to the extent of $4,500,000, the whole of which will probably be required in a few years. The receipts into the treasury for the past two years amounted to $1,330,881, and the estimated receipts for the next two years are $1,416,125. The railroads of the State, in which the government is largely interested, are reported to be in a flourishing condition. To show how railroads have increased the value of real estate, the Governor states that from 1815 to 1850, a period of twenty years, the value of real estate actually decreased, while there was only an increase of $2,103,000 from 1815 to 1850, a period of thirty years; but from 1850 to 1860, ten years, the increase has been $70,4000,000. Most of the works of public improvement have been constructed since 1850. The number of miles of railway now in operation in the State is 834. The Governor recommends the encouragement of agriculture and schools. In 1840 there were 18,681 pupils in school and at colleges. In 1860 there were 177,106. Most of the colleges and schools have been closed lately, and are now under the control of the several denominations of Christians, which, the Governor says, is a fact not to be regretted, since the natural friends of education are to be found among those who are engaged in the advancement of religion and morals.

It is said that the sounds, inlets, bays and rivers of eastern North Carolina are alive with ducks, geese and swans, particularly the geese and swans. It is asserted by those who have passed their lives among the wild fowl hunters of North Carolina, that so many swans were never seen in one season before.

FLORIDA.

ACCIDENT.—The Pensacola Observer, of the 10th, records the following sad accident: The horses ran away with the stage on the 7th inst., near Garland depot, on the Montgomery and Pensacola road, breaking up the coach into fragments and injuring severely several of the passengers. Mr. and Mrs. McNeil, of Lowndesborough, were badly hurt. Miss Bagely, at Milton, received severe injuries and her face considerably disfigured. One lady, whose name is not given, had her head so badly cut as to expose the skull for several inches.

TEXAS.

RAISE TEXAS LANDS.—The Sabine Pass Times, of the 14th, in a reply to numerous letters says: Lands in Eastern Texas can be had at almost any price, depending alone upon its location as to the Eastern Texas Railroad, rivers or towns. Lands of the best quality, that will make a bale and a half of cotton to the acre, or one and a half or two hogsheads of sugar, will command from $1 to $6 per acre, while lands near the line of the railroad will command $10 per acre.

It is estimated that on the 1st of January, 1861, there will be four hundred miles of railroad in Texas, and still the work has but just fairly commenced.

MISCELLANEOUS.

POPULATION OF THE COTTON STATES.—The white and colored population of the five Cotton States, according to the census of 1850, was as follows: Alabama, 426 514 white and 342,844 colored; Florida, 47,203 white and 39,310 colored; Georgia, 521,572 white and 381,682 colored; Mississippi, 295,718 white and 309,878 colored; South Carolina, 278,718 white and 384,984 colored. Total white, 1,565,570; do. colored, 1,458,698.

CAPTURE OF A SLAVER.—A late arrival at New York reports the capture on the Coast of Africa, by the U. S. ship Constellation, of the slaver bark Cora, with 701 negroes on board. The Cora is said to be owned in New York.

STEAMER FLYING CLOUD BURNED.—The steamer Flying Cloud, Capt. Brady, bound from St. Louis to New Orleans, with a full cargo of freight, caught fire on Sunday night, the 11th, when about twenty miles below Memphis, and burned to the water's edge. No lives were lost.

THE SOUTHWEST MISSOURI EXPEDITION.—The St. Louis papers have one week's later intelligence from the military expedition to the southwest Missouri border. Gen. Frost had returned from Fort Scott, where he had had an interview with Gen. Harney, now commanding in Kansas. From him he received "positive information that Montgomery was intrenched at Mound City, with three hundred men, determined to fight." Gen. Harney desired the support of Gen. Frost, and it was thought that their combined forces would be sufficient to capture Montgomery. Gen. Harney, however, had taken Fort Scott without resistance, and therewith five prisoners, belonging to Montgomery's band. At last accounts it was thought that Gen. Frost's command would meet that of Gen. Harney on the 6th, near Walnut Creek, and that the engagement with Montgomery would take place the next night.

EXPENSION OF THE PACIFIC TELEGRAPH.—The Mesilla Valley Times, of the 7th ult., says that the Pacific telegraph, for some time now in operation from San Francisco to Los Angeles, is being rapidly pushed forward eastward to the Colorado. As it progresses, also, the people along the route are gradually gaining interest in it, and contributing money and labor for its construction. One citizen of Mesilla had subscribed $10,000, and had promised to duplicate or even triplicate no amount if necessary.

THE CITIES OF MASSACHUSETTS.—The thirteen largest towns in Massachusetts are reported in the census just taken to have the following population: Boston, 177,902; Lowell, 36,848; Cambridge, 26,074; Roxbury, 25,138; Charleston, 25,075; Worcester, 24,963; New Bidford, 22,393; Salem, 22,256; Lynn, 19,086; Lawrence, 17,639; Taunton, 15,578; Springfield, 15,260; Fall River, 14,026.

BUSINESS TROUBLE AT THE NORTH.—The cotton and woolen manufacturers of Philadelphia have resolved to work only three-quarters time, and one mill will close entirely. Forty looms in the factory at the New York Mills, near Utica, have been stopped, and the hands discharged. The Schenectady (N. Y.) News says that one of the largest foundries in that city has partially suspended, for lack of orders, in consequence of Lincoln's election. The Paterson (N. J.) Register says one or two Republican proprietors of factories in that place, have been going around, endeavoring to get the majority of the mill owners to work half time. They say that this is the only expedient that can defer a speedy and entire stoppage. In Bridgeport Conn., upwards of one thousand employees are now out of work. In New Haven, Conn., nearly two thousand workmen in the Tradesman Company and the Southern Carriage Company, at Winsted, have lately had large Southern orders countermanded. The iron and steel works at Birmingham have stopped. Forty carpenters have been discharged from the Norfolk Navy Yard, and the ship builders of Greenport (L. I.) are lying idle.

THE NEW ENGLAND SHOE BUSINESS.—The Boston Traveller, of the 4th, says: Our Natick correspondent writes that business was never known to be so dull in that town as now. Two of the shoe manufactures have recently failed, whose liabilities together are estimated at about $125,000. The remaining manufacturers are believed to be a firm foundation, but they are doing but very little business. Two or three hundred shoemakers are out of employment, of the prospect is that they will experience a very severe time. The following is from our Haverhill correspondent: The shoe interest is entirely flat here, with no prospect of improvement for some time to come. A large number of mechanics are out of employment, and those who are at work receive only a small compensation. With winter before us, the prospect is a very dark one to many, and cannot possibly be passed trough without much suffering."

JEFFERSON TERRITORY.—The Louisville Courier, of the 12th, says: The census report will show the population to exceed 50,000. Denver City alone has 5,061 inhabitants. The miners are generally making money, at some of them fortunes. There are over two hundred and fifty quartz mills in the territory, costing from $12,000 to $4,000 each. It is estimated that $3,000,000 will be raised the present year. What the inhabitants most want is a able government of some kind.—There is no law except a prisional government law, which does not amount to much. Lynch law reigns supreme, and thieves as well as murderers are hung.

SINGULAR CAUTION OF AGE.—On Thursday week, a huge black bear attempted to cross the Pennsylvania Railroad, in the vicinity of Mullin, where was struck by the cow-catcher and several wheels passed over him, amputating his left fore-leg at the shoulder, and cutting of a portion off his left hind-leg. Notwithstanding bruin's disabled condition, he fled into a ravine, and upon being pursued and cornered by the engineer of the train, who was armed with an ax, made such desperate resistance that the latter thought it the safest policy to beat a retreat. The pursuit was gained the succeeding day, and bruin finally despatched. He weighed 280 pounds after being dressed.

A NEW GUN.—The Cartighal gun was exhibited in Boston last week. It is claimed by the inventor, Mr. Dickenson, that his gun will throw 300 lbs per minute at a long rifle range, without powder or cap, only by turning a crank like a coffee-mill. The balls are fed to a tunnel with a shovel, from which the gun feeds itself. Throws its shot singly, but continuously, at a rate equal to the ceaseless fire of 10,000 men.

DEATH OF AN ASTRONOMER.—Charles W. Eglesman, who for forty-three years past ranked the principal calculations for the almanacs printed the United States, died at his residence in Reading, Pa., last wk, at the ripe age of nearly 78 years.

COMMERCE OF THE SOUTHERN STATES.—The cotton States alone, as exhibited in United States reports of commerce and navigation in 1857 employed 1,873 vessels, embracing 1,070,000 tons, manned by 31,061 sailors. And, taking both cotton and border States together, the vessels cleared in that year embraced a total of neriean and foreign vessels of 2,326, of a united tonnage of 2,58,738, manned by 37,42 sailors.

COLLISION AT SEA.—On Saturday week last, a schooner, name unknown, supsed to be of about 120 tons, ran into the steamship James Ar, on her way from New-York to Charleston, striking her jubboard of the wheel-house, breaking up one wheel and damage the sailing around the wheel house.—The schooner showed no lights, and was not seen by any one aboard of the Adgerth she was quite close to her. The Adger lay to five hours as nothing was seen of the wrecked schooner, it is supsed she sank immediately with all on board.

SINGULAR COMPLAINT.—Last Saturday week Mrs. Collins, an old lady living at Brooklyn, N. Y., while emptying a pail of water from third story window, lost her balance and fell to the ground, dying, it is supposed, fatal injuries. Her husband was killed out three years ago by a fall from the same window, while emptying a pail of water from it.

BUSINESS FAILURES.—More than 2000 men and women have been discharged from employment in New Haven since the election.

THE FIRST U. S. MAIL FOR JAPAN.—The ship Zenas Coffin, Capt. Benj. F. Bell, of Nantucket, Mass., is soon to take the first U. S. mailer despatched from this country to Japan, the contract having been secured by Charles B. Pindwick, of Nantucket, who has interest in the permanent contract for the transportation the Japan mail.

SLAVE INCREASE.—The new census will probably show the number of slaves the United States to be over 4,000,000.—This is on the contation that the rate of increase will be not less than it was it 1850 to 1850. The addition to the numbers within that pid was 716,756, the rate of increase nearly 29 per cent; more cisely 28.80 per cent. At this rate of increase, which is likely to be less, computations have been made of the future numbers of the slave population, within a few years. It is y certain that within the first quarter of the next century it will at least fifty millions.

CENSUS OF NEJERSEY.—The population of the State of New Jersey, acding to the census just taken, is a fraction over 660,000. Twill enable the State to retain her present delegation in Cress, even though the ratio should be fixed as high as 132,000 inhabitants to each Representative. The increase of popula in ten years is about 170,000 more than half of which have gained in Essex and Hudson counties.

President Buchan is having his homestead "Wheatland," near Lancaster, thin order for his future residence.

The value of ses who have escaped from Bourbon and Fayette counties, Kentucky, within the past month is estimated at $15,000.

Some idea of commerce of London may be formed from the fact that a hundred and forty-eight vessels (a total of more than 52,000 tons) arrived there on Monday, November 5th.

The county of Cumberland, State of Maine, is a fertile spot for divorces. Ty-two suits were on the docket for a recent term of the Cou Of these, thirty were brought by wives and twelve by husbds.

The official p of Arkansas is as follows; Breckenridge 28,732; Bell, 24; Douglas, 5,227.

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

MERCANTILE WRECKS.—The monthly summary of wrecks, published by the London Shipping Gazette, shows that during the month of October the number of wrecks reported was 276. In the month of January there were 229; in February, 151; in March, 153; in April, 133; in May, 124; in June, 105; in July, 80; in August, 87; and in September, 103; making a total during the present year of 1187.

The British parliament has voted $10,000 (the largest sum ever voted for such a purpose) to build a monument in Trafalgar square, near the Nelson column, to the memory of the late Sir John Franklin.

FRANCE.

Count Palmni has been appointed French ambassador to London, vice Count Persigny. Admiral Pelissier has received the appointment of Governor of Algeria, and Mr. Combat, minister of the marine. Admiral Hendin is grand chancellor of the legion of honor. Other changes in the French cabinet are anticipated.

M. Peletet, the Perpetual Secretary of the French Academy, says that the enterprise proposed by Lieut. Maury, of a Meteorological Congress, will be accomplished on a large scale. Very distinguished men are to attend. The General Congress of Vienna has charged him with the duty of making up a general programme for meteorological observations all over the globe.

Specimens of the new paper for printing, invented in Austria, and made entirely from maize straw, have reached Paris. Some of the specimens are very fine. The advantage in cheapness is more than one-half.

RUSSIA AND AUSTRIA.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT IN VENETIA.—An address from the Venetians to the Neapolitans—the occasion of Victor Emanuel's entry into Naples—is now in circulation throughout Italy. It is as follows: When you receive the fraternal salute of poor Venetia, the King of Italy will be among you, and you will salute him with joy and bless him with tears. Rejoice, brethren, and do not trouble your thoughts with the remembrance of unfortunate Venetia and her sadness. Venetia to-day rejoices with you; she knows that to-day you rejoice with her. Venetia suffers all the shame of hostile domination, but she is indomitable and strong. Austria may destroy, but can never lend her. Venetia does not complain, but waits her opportunity; she does not groan because she believes and hopes; she believes and hopes in you, in herself, and our King, in the valor of the army, in the enthusiasm of the people. She knows that she has given her blood for you, and she knows that you will give yours for her—for her liberty. She knows that you rejoice not only for Naples, but because Italy has been constituted from this day forth. It is Italy that advances; it is the King of Italy that is coming to Venice by way of Naples, that we have opened to him by the blood of our volunteers. The impulsuous energy of twenty-three millions of Italians alone can break the chains of those who are bound. We know that to-day all Italy will remember Venetia. Tell the King of Italy in our name, tell Garibaldi, tell the army, tell the volunteers, tell all the free Italians, that the thoughts and hearts of Venetia are with you; that their victories are ours, their joy our joy, their celebration our celebration, because we know that the plans, the sufferings, the fortunes of Venice are those of Italy also.

The Paris correspondent of the London Herald says negotiations for the cession of Venetia had commenced. A long conference on the subject took place in Paris on the 21st between M. Thouvenel, Prince Metternich and M. Kisseleff.

Russian military discipline recently reduced Prince Gortschakoff from a lieutenancy to the ranks for lighting a duel. A captain, the prince's second, suffered a similar degradation.

The census population of Russia is put down at 79,000,000 souls.

ITALY.

Advices per the North Britain, to the 30th ult., state that it was reported that King Francis II had died from Gaeta. Veteleri, in the Roman States, was occupied by French troops, in compliance with the request of the Roman Government. Apendenta has been invaded by volunteers from the Duchy of Castro. They disarmed the Papal soldiers, and hoisted the flag of Savoy. The Papal Governor escaped to Constantinople. The Bishop of Corneto had communicated the clergy of Santa Clara for receiving Victor Emanuel as King. The Paris Patrie, of the 1st inst., says that the revolutionary movements were increasing in the Abruzzis delle of Mount Vellino, occupied by Sardinian troops. In Naples, the reactionary demonstration by the priests and Lazzaroni had been suppressed and several arrests made.

AUSTRIAN TROOPS IN ITALY.—The exact number of Austrian troops on the strategetic line of the Po and Mincio is 130,000 men, divided into four corps. The cavalry is to be increased to 10,000 sabres. Austria possesses another army of 150,000 men, whose position could be readily changed so as to concentrate an effective force of 300,000 men for the defence of her positions in Upper Italy, on the Adriatic. In the meantime the Austrian Government has adopted a new measure of rigor in Venetia. A decree orders all fathers of families to recall their sons from abroad, even if absent for their education.

King Victor Emanuel arrived at Palermo on the 1st, where he was enthusiastically received.

The Bohemian brings intelligence that the siege of Gaeta was being continued with great vigor. Four batteries had already opened fire.

TURKEY.

The foreign ambassadors at Constantinople were about to submit to the Porte a scheme of financial and provincial reform.

News from Syria is to the 4th of November. Ismail Pacha had resigned his command on account of having been reproached by Fuad Pacha with partiality for the Christians.

Advices from Circassia report the signal failure of Baristinski's expedition against Baghestan. Great losses were suffered among the Russians.

The Porte had refused the proposition of the Bulgarian community to secede and form a separate patriarchate.

GREECE.

The Cretan insurrection is assuming serious proportions. The following insurgent bands are now in the field: Sphakia, 1,500 strong. In advancing on the Cretans upon the allies, were completely routed, losing 2,000 killed. The Times' correspondent says, canud Parker and three others were carried prisoners to Pekin, and well treated. The head-quarters of the allied forces was eighty miles from Pekin. The emperor's brother had been appointed chief commissioner to make peace. Affairs at Shanghai were in a quiet condition.

FLIGHT OF THE EMPEROR.—We have news from China to the 8th of October. The allied fleet was anchored within sight of Pekin. The Emperor had made a precipitate flight. Three hundred thousand Chinese had been killed. The latter statement, however, lacks confirmation.

MARRIAGES.

"It is not good for man to be alone."

On the 4th inst., at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. John P. Dickinson, REV. JOHN A. PACE to MISS ELIZA FRAZER, all of Russell county, Ala.

At the residence of the bride's father, on the 22d ult., by the Rev. B. Elliott, MR. WM. S. LAMBERTH to MISS SUSAN A. HENDRIX, all of Tallapoosa county, Ala.

By the Rev. J. Pipes, at P. Hill, La., Nov. 22, 1860, MR. W. H. JORDAN to MISS E. A. CHAPMAN.

On the 13th inst., at the residence of the bride's father, by Rev. John C. Miller, MR. ARTHUR M. RECORD, of Vicksburg, Miss., to MISS THERESA A. NORSWORTHY, of East Feliciana, La.

On the 15th of November, at the residence of the bride's father, by the Children's Column.

THE QUEEN OF THE RYE-FAIRIES.

FROM THE GERMAN.

"Franz," said a mother to her boy, who was lazily walking into the garden, to pick a handful of berries, "I have something for you to do. Just see how high the peas are. You will find some rods in the summer-house; take them and stick them for the vines to grow upon. They will then become a great deal larger, and our garden will look much more handsome."

"But, can't I get some one else to do that for me?" asked the idle boy.

"Shame on you, Franz! you seem to shirk the very slightest labor."

"But mother tells me that we are compelled to work for our bread! Why are all the poor people for? You could be giving them work. One moment you make me hoe and sting, and the next I must dn another. The sun is hot to-day, too, and I would rather go and sit under our shady elm."

"If man," she answered, "would neither labor with his mind nor hands, he would then be no better than the dumb beast." She would have instructed him further, but just at this moment she was called into the house. Franz went reluctantly to his assigned task, for he disliked to put his hands to any work. His sister Emma had heard all that was said, though some distance off, and she came with her work-basket and sat down on the grass near where he began to stick the rods along the rows of peas. She took her knitting-work from her basket, though she liked labor about as little as her brother. Things did not continue long in this way; and Franz came and sat down beside Emma to rest out, as he said, and wipe the perspiration from his face. Meanwhile, his sister let a number of stitches drop, and did not take the slightest interest in her knitting.

"O mother," she said, "had not appeared so serious, I would have asked her permission for us to take a walk along the meadow."

Franz answered: "Oh I would it not be more quiet and shady ont yonder, in the rye-field? We can not get a moment's rest here in the garden. I would like to sleep here a little while, but the birds would go to singing around me, and the bees would be buzzing round about my ears. Only think, those troublesome bees are the same little animals that mother said are a useful example to us of industry. Now, you will find one of these pests in the tall rye. Indeed, I never saw or heard of one there. Let us go ont there a little while. Fortunately for us, the garden-gate is not locked."

"Oh I that would be fine. I would be in the greatest glee in the rye-field; for there I could catch the glistening beetles and pluck the bright flowers."

"And I could have a little while to lie sleep," said Franz. "Come on; mother will not be here again till the afternoon, and we will be back long before that. Any time of day is good enough to attend to pea-vines. Ha! ha! no body can ever make me believe there is enjoyment in work, for I invariably get tired of it as soon as I get at it."

"Do you know what I would rather be, above every thing else? I would love to be a fairy, for it is about the fairies that our mother has told us so many nice stories. They always live like queens, in the greatest happiness, and they dwell in splendid castles, built of gold and diamonds, and surrounded by gardens, where spring never ends. That would be the right kind of life for me. Then I would have no stockings to knit, or dictionary lessons to learn."

While this conversation was passing, the two children were going ont of the garden-gate into the meadow. Emma skipped about after the great dragon-flies, and plucked many flowers of the loveliest hue and sweetest fragrance But Franz, after an hour or more, climbed over the fence into the rye-field, and, when he had found a cool place in the high grain, he lay down, without troubling himself as to whether or not he was breaking some fine stalks. Although it was only midday, he was soon fast asleep.

By and by, after Emma was tired of her exercise, she went into the rye-field, and sat, resting her head upon her hand, near her sleeping brother. All at once, she saw a beautiful lilin figure, hardly as long as her finger. It wore a dress of a bright-red poppy blossom, which had a belt around it of a single blade of ribbon-grass. The hat that it wore was a snow-white flower, which, on closer inspection, proved to be a lily of the valley. Such a fascinating object, Emma had never beheld before; and although she had a good many little porcelain people on her table at home, the best of them could not compare with this living figure. She rubbed her eyes very hard, for she thought it must be a dream. But the little form did not vanish; and she pulled away the grass, so that she could see all its motions. Then she touched her brother very softly, who took it very hard to be disturbed in such refreshing slumber. But when he saw the [illegible] which his sister quietly pointed at, he was just stretched out her diminutive [illegible]. How quickly she those little feet, that were clad in the slippers of the smallest mussel-shells! Now she took her rake of a rose-twig, whose thorns served for teeth, and pulled all the weeds into a pile. Then she laid her rake down and directed her wagon up through the high stalks of rye to where the weeds were. And such a wagon as it was! It was drawn by two stage-beetles, the reins and halters made of nobweb, and the driver so small that his blouse was a blue-bell. A host of such little figures, men and women they were, surrounded the wagon. They were all dressed in flour-clothing, and it was a glorious scene to behold them casting the weeds into it, to be hauled away. Soon the wagon was loaded, and the horses began to pull; and they struggled manfully without even so much as injuring a single stalk of grain. The people who remained behind did not lie down to sleep, but divided their time between playing hide-and-seek behind a pebble and a grain of sand. I would give any thing if you could have seen how happy they were while at play. They never lost their temper—a lesson to us never to get angry with a playmate.

The little woman in the red dress now appeared among them, and took off her hat to make a speech to them. They immediately collected around her, to hear what she might say. She pointed toward the wagon, and informed them that in crossing a furrow, it became so deeply buried in the sand that it was impossible for the horses to draw it ont. Thereupon they all started off to the scene of difficulty, and, after great exertion, succeeded in laying a bridge over the chasm. The trouble overcome, the wagon passed safely over, and all the workers joined hands and had a joyful dance; just as happy were they as if they had never worked a moment in all their life. They danced and played until the wagon came back empty again, which they soon loaded with more weeds. When it returned the third time, a singular circumstance took place. Two little children came, with a bucket of water for the tired laborers. Did I say a bucket of water? Yes; a dew-drop on a clover-leaf! They were all very glad to get such a refreshing drink, and, after every body had drank, the two children took the dishes out of a half nut-shell, which served for their cupboard, and niter spreading the table-cloth—it was a white rose-leaf—on the ground they made the dinner ready. The Queen of the company—for the little lady in the red dress was the Queen—together with all the fairies, who were her subjects, ate heartily after their labor, their soup-dish was an acorn-shell; and how sweetly did the food smell in them; sweeter still was the eating of it. I know you would have been delighted to see that repast. Not a dish was left untouched. Every body had a sharp appetite, and no food was dropped on the table-cloth. It was just as clean when they finished as when they commenced. And no one took up any unnecessary room at the table, or infringed upon his neighbor's rights, or talked too loud, or too fast, or too much. The Queen sat on a sprig of moss that the fairies had taken from an old beach-tree. It was the size of a canary-bird's bill, and all persons called it the Queen's throne. No other fairy had such a seat as this: they all sat on the ground.

Emma touched her brother's hand and said: "These must certainly be the fairies that live in the rye-field, and that loveliest of little beings is Roggenmuhme, Queen of the Rye Fairies. Mother has frequently told us about them, you know; but I never thought they were so beautiful and industrious as they really are."

"I supposed mother was only in jest when she spoke of them. But it is a fact; these little people with their good Queen, work just as earnestly as the very poorest peasants. And after all their hard labor, they are as happy as mortals can be. Such a thing as that I had never dreamed of."

What beautiful games they played, and not one of the fairies got angry! Neither did I see any of their clothing soiled or torn when they came to the table. They all looked as if they had just sprung out of a bandbox. Their food was so sweet to them too, though there was but very little of it.

"It can not be possible that labor makes a good appetite."

"Well, let us try it, Franz, when we get home."

Dinner was all over, the dishes washed, and put away in the cupboard. Then the fairies started off to their work, and, on the way, sang the most beautiful song that I ever heard. It was not so loud as birds sing, but then it was far sweeter music. Emma and Franz did not follow them to their labor, but were anxious, by this time, to return home. As they arose, the fairies saw them, and they all ran away. They did not know that there had been any spectators at their lusiness duties and dinner and play. Suddenly a storm arose, and Franz declared it would catch them before they could get home. The lightning flashed so much that they were very much frightened, and from the bottom of their hearts did they regret that they had left the garden. The storm came on violently, and almost an hour passed by before they reached home. They were wet through, and stood at the door trembling with cold. Their mother, all pale from anxiety, met them. She did not reprove them when she saw their ill condition, but, lest they should be sick, directed them to go to bed at once.

That same night Franz became very sick, and a long severe fever came on, in consequence of the cold he had caught from being wet. Many weeks he had to lie in his bed, and often he was heard to say: "Oh if I were only well again! It is so tedious to lie in a sick bed. I do wish I could go out and do some little work, for as often as I think of the labors of the little fairies, and that they were not compelled to do it, I must think there is real pleasure in activity and toil. Now I can lie here and sleep the whole day, but I don't enjoy it in the least; and just as soon as I am well again, I will be as industrious and happy as the Fairies of the Rye-Field.

Emma had told her mother all that happened to Franz and herself, and promised to take the fairies for an example of industry and contentment. From that day forth, she could sit quietly and attend to whatever duties her mother assigned her; and never had she been so happy in all her former life.

When Franz had recovered and went out into the garden for the first time, he found the peas had been bearing, and he sorrowfully reflected that they had been cared for by other hands than his. Afterwards he labored every day in the garden, and took the greatest pleasure in training the vines, beautifying the flower-beds, and keeping the walks free from grass. In the evening he would sit, in company with his mother and Emma, and read aloud to them, instead of sleeping on the sofa, as he used to do. No body would have taken him or his sister for the same children that were once so discontented and idle. It was a lovely scene to see them at their work; and, would you believe it, they never forgot a word of the song the fairies sang after dinner, and often sang it themselves. They lived to be of great age. Emma became a distinguished authoress, and Franz an honored senator.

A THRILLING NARRATIVE.

The details of the loss of the propeller Jersey City on 24th of November, have been received. The annals of lake disasters present few incidents that can compare in intensity of horror with the simple narrative of the survivors of the wreck. Rarely have there been scenes of suffering and acts of true heroism that could equal the tragedy enacted on Long Point beach. The story, as narrated by the survivors, is substantially as follows:

The propeller Jersey City, Capt. Monroe, from Toledo, bound for Buffalo, was out in the great gale of the 23d and 24th of November. Finding it impossible to reach Buffalo in the storm, Capt. Monroe headed the steamer for Long Point, Canada, intending to take shelter behind it. Every one in this latitude will remember the terrible morning of Saturday, the 24th of November. The wind blew with resistless force, and the snow swept through the air with such violence that it cut like sharp hail, and was so thick that objects at a short distance were invisible. About 11 o'clock in the morning, during a momentary rift in the snow cloud, Long Point was seen ahead, and Capt. Monroe discovered that he had been driven too far in to the weather the point without great difficulty. The steamer's course was changed, and an attempt made to get around the Point. The ordinary fires were found unequal to getting up the great pressure of steam necessary, and kegs of lard and butter were rapidly thrown in to feed the flames. But every effort was vain. A sudden shock—a dull grating sound that, was "felt" above the howling of the tempest, and the Jersey City was a hopeless wreck. She had grounded on the shoal, about two miles distant from the Point.

Capt. Monroe immediately ordered every one to the hurricane deck as the only chance of safety. A number, heedless of his warnings, jumped into the life-boat, and made for the shore. They were all last seen among the breakers that hissed across the intervening waste of water.

Soon after grounding, the propeller heeled over broadside to the seas, and with her deck exposed to the action of the waves. Her deck-load was at once washed off, and the repeated blows of the huge wave stove in her decks and dashed her sides into pieces. The hurricane-deck, with its load of half frozen sufferers, floated toward the shore. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon the hurricane deck grounded within a short distance from the shore in shallow water. At this moment a boy, who was on the wreck, was washed off by the waves, but was rescued by Capt. Monroe. After this the boy became frightened, for the first time, and clung eagerly to his preserver. Captain Monroe fastened a plank life-preserver to his body, and taking the boy in his arms, leaped into the water and made ashore. As the boy was landed, his suspenders broke and his pantaloons fell about his ankles, where they froze in a solid mass, chaining him to the spot where he stood. In a few moments the half-naked boy was dead.

Captain Monroe walked back to the piece of wreck, and directed his comrades where to leap so as to strike in the shallowest water. One by one the leap was made in safety, until but one was left on board, and that one was Mr. A. H. Derby, the clerk of the propeller. He was seen sitting on the wreck, with his head bent down as if in despair. Capt. Monroe called him by name, but he did not answer, although his mouth opened. To a second hail he again opened his mouth without giving an articulate sound. Captain Monroe and Engineers Manchester and Cummings went to the helpless man. Captain Monroe took Derby on his back, while the two engineers steadied his legs so as to prevent the waves washing him off. In this way the party waded through the water, ice making on them at every step, the surf dashing around them, the bitter wind freezing their hands and faces, and the blinding snow obscuring their view.

On reaching the shore, Captain Monroe attempted to lower Derby to his feet, but found it impossible to let him go. The living burden had frozen fast to his dead partner.

The Captain's arms were frozen stiff, and clasped around the arms of the dead man. The two engineers were also so frozen about the hands that they could ren [illegible]. Finding it impossible to rid himself of flung himself on the ground, [illegible] "spilled" the dead man from his shoulders. But he had escaped from one fearful, horrible dilemma, only to find himself in another. His trowsers were frozen so stiff up to his hips, that he was as much unable to rise as if his legs had been encased in lengths of stove pipe, and his companions could render him no assistance. At a short distance was the body of a man, frozen in a sitting position. Captain Monroe managed to roll himself to the body, and by it climbed to his feet.

The little party of survivors now set out on their painful march toward the light-house, which was at no great distance. They had got safely along until within about three hundred yards of the house, when a small creek impeded their progress. First Engineer Manchester attempted to cross the creek, but abandoned it and returned to the shore, where he sat down exhausted and despairing. Second Engineer Cummings came up, and endeavored to encourage him to further efforts, but in vain. Captain Monroe begged Manchester to rise and make an attempt to get around the creek, telling him the light-house was close by. "It's of no use, Captain," said the unfortunate man, "I can't go any further." Cummings placed his arms around the body of his comrade in order to lift him to his feet, but at that moment the icy hand of Death was laid on both, and, clasped in each other's arms, face almost touching face, with words of friendly cheer frozen in the utterance, these two brave men—Manchester and Cummings—perished within a few minutes walk of safety.

In this position they were afterwards found by the party sent in search. Captain Monroe was badly frozen.—Out of the twenty-two who had formed the crew and passengers of the ill-fated Jersey City, but five survived, being Captain Monroe, two firemen, the wheelsman and one passenger. The others either perished in the cruel waves or were frozen to death in that awful death watch. Six of the bodies have been recovered, some being returned to their former homes, and others buried on the Point.

We are glad to learn that the brave Captain Monroe will not suffer so severely by his exposure as was at first feared. Such heroes cannot be spared. His deeds of daring and tender care during the fatal wreck and march of death on Long Point, adds a brighter halo to the fame won by his gallant rescue of the frozen crew of the Omar Pasha, at the risk of his own life, at the month of Cleveland Harbor some years since.

A LITTLE HERO.

In the city of Hertford, Conn., lives the hero of the true history I am about to relate, but no longer "little," as the perilous adventure, which made him for a time famous in his native town, happened several years ago. Our hero was then a bright, active boy of fourteen, the son of a mechanic. In the severe winter of 18—the father worked in a factory about a mile and a half from his home, and every day the boy carried him his dinner across a wide piece of meadow land.

One keen frosty day he found the snow on his meadow nearly two feet deep, and no traces of the little foot-path remaining. Yet he ran on as fast as possible, plunging through drifts, keeping himself warm by vigorous exercise and brave, cheerful thoughts. When in the midst of the meadow, fully half a mile from any house, he suddenly felt himself going down, down, down! He had fallen into a well! He sank down into the dark icy water, but rose immediately to the surface. There he grasped hold of a plank, which had fallen into the well as he went down. One end of this rested on the bottom of the well, the other rose about four feet above the surface of the water.

The poor lad shouted for help until he was hoarse and almost speechless, but all in vain; as it was impossible for him to make himself heard from such a depth, and at such a distance from any house. So at last he concluded that if he had to be saved at all he must save himself, and begin at once, as he was getting extremely cold in the water. So he went to work.

First, he drew himself up the plank, and braced himself against the top of it and the wall of the well, which was of brick and quite smooth. Then he pulled off his coat, and taking out his pocket knife cut off his boots, that he might work to greater advantage. Then, with his feet against one side of the well and his shoulders against the other, he worked his way up, by the most heartful exertion, about half the distance to the top. Here he was obliged to pause, take breath, and gather up his energies for the work yet before him. For harder was it than all he had yet gone through, for the side of the well being from that point completely covered with ice, he must cut with his knife grasping places for his fingers, slowly and carefully all the way up.

It was almost a hopeless attempt, but it was all that he could do. And here the little hero lifted up his heart to God, and prayed fervently to help him, feeling he could never get out alone. Doubtless the Lord heard his voice calling from the deep, and pitied him. He wrought out miracle to save him, but breath'd into his heart a yet larger measure of calmness and courage, strengthening him to work out his own deliverance. It is in this way that God oftenest answers our prayers when we call upon him in time of trouble. After this, the little hero cut his way upward inch by inch. His wet stockings froze to the ice and kept his feet from slipping, but his shirt was quite worn from his shoulders ere he reached the top.

He did reach it at last, crawled out into the snow, and lay down to rest, panting out his breath in little white clouds on the clear frosty air.

He had been two hours and a half in the well! His clothes soon froze to his body, but he no longer suffered with the cold as, full of joy and thankfulness, he ran to the factory, where his good father was waiting and, wondering.

The poor man was obliged to go without his dinner that day, but you may be sure he cared little about that while listening, with tears in his eyes, to the thrilling story his son had to relate to him. He must have been very proud of the boy that day, as he wrapped him up in his own warm overcoat and took him home to "mother." And how that mother must have wept and smiled over the lad, and kissed him, and thanked God for him. Grace Greenwood.

BEAUTIFUL THOUGHTS.

Beautiful thoughts! how they come and go,
Like the ocean's ceaseless ebb and flow;
Billows of thought come rolling in,
Bearing the ruins of what hath been:

Wavelets of thought on Time's vast shore
Strewing its surface o'er and o'er
With many a pearl and costly gem,—
While we hardly stoop to gather them:

Wrecks of the beautiful, vanished past,
On the shores of life are mouldering fast;
And Memory sits by my side to-day,
Gathering the treasures that time flings away.

She brings back my childhood's rosy hours,
My heart filled with joy,—and my hands with flowers;
Which childhood's joy from my heart had shed,
And its flowers lay withering by my side.

She holds to my eager clasp once more,
The loved who have passed to the other shore;
The same sweet eyes—the same loved tone—
She hath given me back again my own.

Glorious visions of bygone days,
Are ever and ever before my gaze;
Beautiful memories throng my brain—
Bringing the past to life again.

Beautiful thoughts! awake, and in dreams
They come all tinted with golden gleams—
Gleams that were borrowed from heaven's light:
Shining the brighter because it is night.

Beautiful thoughts of my home on high,
Fadeless and sinless beyond the sky;
Where sighs and tears are never known
To mingle around our Father's throne.

I thank my God for this boundless store,
Of thoughts that come to me o'er and o'er;
That come to me ever awake and asleep,
Free as the ocean—if not so deep.

THE MONGOLIAN BOY.

The following narrative is from one of the recent publications of the London Religious Tract Society:

Years passed among the Mongolian Tartars, and no one came to the missionaries to inquire what he should do to be saved. At length a youth named Bardo came and sat down in a mission school. He was ignorant of the letters of the alphabet; but he soon got on, and in a short time could read and write very nicely, and also had committed to memory a catechism, and many passages of the Scriptures. He then gave up the worship of his gods, and told the children of the family with whom he lived that he now believed there was only one God, and one Savior, Jesus Christ.

From this time he felt more of the state as a sinner, and was often seen to retire that he might pray in secret. He began also to hope that he had found mercy through the Lord Jesus Christ, who died to save sinners. When mixing with his own people he told them what he felt, and invited them to come and hear the gospel for themselves, for that if they died trusting in gods that could not save them they would perish forever.

The Tartars place their idols on a table opposite the doors of their tents, and every person as he enters is expected to bow before them. When they saw that Bardo did not bow as he passed, they ill-used him, and tried to force him to worship their gods; but finding they could not prevail, they turned him out of their tents. One day a lama, or priest, beat him severely on the head, which brought on violent pains and fever. The fever continued for several weeks, and he grimly wasted away. Pain in the chest and a cough followed so that poor Bardo was brought very low. His friends fearing he would die, began to talk of using some of their heathenish rites to save his life; but he would not consent to this, and begged his friends to carry him to the missionaries. The Tartars also placed upon the wall, opposite to where he lay, some of their charms, that he might look upon them; but Bardo turned his back to the wall, though he had to place himself in a painful position, that his eyes might not behold the sinful folly of his friends.

On the morning of the day on which he died he was asked, "Should you die now, whither would your soul go?"

"To heaven."

"Who will receive it there?"

"God."

"On what Saviour do you put your trust for salvation?"

"If God had not in his [illegible] Jesus Christ to learn about that Saviour, what would have become of you?"

"I should have lived in sin, and gone to hell when I died."

He said he was not afraid to die; yet he would rather live, if it were God's will, that he might honor and take care of his parents.

His breathing became softer, and like falling into a gentle slumber he fell asleep in Jesus. Thus died the first convert among the Tartars—one who may be still to have fallen a martyr, for there is little doubt that the blows of the lama were the chief cause of his death. His school-fellows carried his body to the grave, and there it rests until Christ shall call it to eternal life, in the resurrection morning.

HEROISM OF A MISSIONARY.

The Rev. R. C. Father related the following incident, in an address to a missionary meeting in London:—When the fort of Agra was about to be invested by the mutineers, (during the last rebellion in India,) the entire population, both of the city and in the cantonments, took refuge in the fort. There were 850 native Christians in the town, who fled towards the fort, and expected to be admitted with the rest, but to their astonishment they were told that they could not come in. There were at that moment in the fort upwards of 1000 Hindoos, and some 250 Mohammedans, who afterwards deserted the English, yet these 850 Christians could not be admitted, but must remain outside in danger of losing their lives.—When it was stated that the native Christians had been refused entrance into the fort, Mr. French, the agent of the Church Missionary Society came forward and said: "My blood shall flow with theirs; if they are not admitted into the fort, I will go out to them." Here was a man that was truly worthy of the name of a missionary—one that was determined rather to perish with his brethren, than that they should be left outside. I am happy to add, that, in consequence of that statement of Mr. French, the Governor ordered the gates to be thrown open to the native Christians, and they were admitted into the fort.

A SAILOR'S FAITH.

"Show me thy faith by thy works." A Swedish sailor came into the office of the secretary last week and introduced himself by saying: "I have just come up from the 'Seaman's Retreat' on Staten Island, where there is a sick sailor, a countryman of mine. I want to get a few tracts from you to send home;" and so saying, he took from his pocket a memorandum-book and opened it, in which it was apparent that little blank space remained. He went on to say: "I wrote down what he wished me to write, to his mother as his dying words for we were fellow townsmen at home—and I thought I would get the pastor to copy it for me, as I am not a very good writer, and then I could send it home to his mother with the tracts; and the letter and the tracts would be read all through the neighborhood, which is a very wicked one, and the Lord might make them a blessing." This story was told with such affectionate earnestness, that my gaze fixed upon the plain man with admiration and gratitude, which were much increased as he proceeded, asking: "Can't you tell me where I can get an artist to go down and take his likeness?" He was converted eight months ago, and is very happy in God. I would be glad to get his likeness and put it in the letter to his mother, that she may look upon her dying boy." We told him this would be attended with expense, especially if he had to take an artist with his apparatus from the city down there. "O," said he, without the least hesitation, "I don't care for the expense if I can only get it and send it to his mother." This sailor had stopped at the Bethel Ship on his way up from the Island to see the pastor, but not finding him the pastor had himself gone down to see the dying seaman. He came up to our office, intent on leaving nothing undone to serve his dying shipmate and his surviving mother. Both these men are fruit of the Bethel Ship.

It is now seriously suggested by some European writers that the Jews should be restored to the Holy Land under the auspices of the Christian Powers. They would be better inhabitants of Syria than the Mahommetans. Faber, in his prophecies, predicted their restoration in 1866.

Obituaries.

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

GEORGE M. JENKINS died at his residence, Yaz county, Miss., on the 29th October, 1860, aged 25 years. During his illness, about two months, he said but little on the subject of death; but being interrogated as to his feelings on the subject, replied, "I fear not death if it is the Lord's will to take me away." He has left a wife and one little son, a father and mother, and four brothers and four sisters, with many relatives and friends, to grieve, but not as those without hope.

J. P. JENKINS.

SAMUEL MERIDY McNEELY, son of Brother and Sister N. G. McNeely, died near Bellewood, La., November 27th, 1860, aged 4 years and 2 days.

C. C. PRESTON.

EDUCATIONAL.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—Corner St. CHARLES and LAFAYETTE STREETS, Entrance, 20 St. Charles street. (Established in 1850.)

OPEN DAY AND EVENING THE ENTIRE YEAR.

Book-keeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, the French and English Languages, practically taught. Catalogues, containing full information, sent free to all who wish.

Nov. 20, 1860. 3m

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.—THE next term of this Institution will open on Monday, the first of October, 1860.

FACULTY.

REV. JOHN P. MILLER, M.A., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
REV. W. H. SCALES, M.A., Professor of Mathematics.
REV. JOHN J. WHEAT, M.A., Professor of Greek.
GEORGE H. WILEY, M.A., Professor of Latin.
A. R. HOLCOMBE, B.A., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. J. F. SUNSTROM, M.A., Professor of Modern Languages.
REV. A. H. MILLER, M.A., } Principals of Preparatory Department.
W. N. POTTER, M.A. }
R. D. NORWORTHY, M.A., Tutor.
LEWIS FITZHUGH, Tutor.

Tuition per Session of five months, payable in advance:
In Preparatory Department.....$21 50
In College Department.....30 50
Matriculation Fee on entering College Department.....6 00
Sizing, extra.....5 00

Boarding can be obtained at the Steward's Hall, or in private families at prices varying from ten to fifteen dollars per month. This institution having an able Faculty, extensive buildings, large library, well fitted and apparatus, commends itself to all desiring a thorough classical or scientific education.

Centenary College is located at Jackson, La., twelve miles East of Clinton.

For information apply to Rev. T. C. Ridgeley, No. 142 Camp street, Dr. John C. Keener, New Orleans, or to the undersigned, Jackson, La.

JOHN C. MILLER, President.

Aug 25 1860. 1y

COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE.—COLUMBUS, Miss. The Fifteenth Annual Session of this Institution will open on MONDAY, the 1st day of October, 1860.

THIS IS NOT A SECTARIAN SCHOOL.

Tuition and Board not higher than at other Southern Female Colleges. The Teachers are all experienced in their profession. The location is remarkably healthy, and the society moral and refined.

Columbus is accessible from various directions by daily stages, trains, and by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, a branch of which terminates only a few Squares from the College buildings. Pupils should endeavour to be present at the opening of the Session.

MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY:

Rev. R. F. LABRANCHE, M.A., President.
J. W. M. SHATTUCK, M.D., Secretary.
Rev. W. T. H. SCOTT, M.A.; Professor A. PERLMAN, M.A.; Mrs. L. E. EAGAN, Mrs. A. PERLMAN; Miss C. R. SHARKEY, Miss E. S. BERNARDY, Miss L. STOKES; Miss M. A. WITHER; Miss R. E. TUCKER, Miss E. H. SHATTUCK.

BOARDING DEPARTMENT.—Mr. Labranche and family, and Dr. Shattuck and family, reside with the boarders, and have charge of that Department.

For further particulars apply for a Catalogue.

Sept 29th, 1860. 3m

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE, Located Seven Miles east of CANTON, has recently received a new and elegant Philosophical Apparatus; and is prepared to give young Ladies a thorough Course in Natural Sciences, Languages and Mathematics, also in Music, French and Embroidery, and the various primary and Collegiate branches of English education. Lessons in Vocal Music, gratis.

Board $8 per month; Washing and Lights, extra. Tuition, from $12 to $22 per Session, of five months. Payment due in advance.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, President.

Nov. 7, 1860. 3t

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, BRANDYWINE, Lawrence county, Mississippi. Rev. J. P. LEE, A.M., President, assisted by competent teachers.

The EXERCISES of the Second Collegiate Year, will begin September 12th, 1860, and end June 19th, 1861. Friday, June 14th, Annual Examination begins.

Sunday, June 16th, Commencement Sermon.—17th and 18th, Examination of Classes. Night Concert.—Wednesday, June 19th, Commencement Day.

For further particulars apply to

Rev. J. P. LEE, President and Secretary.
Rev. M. J. WHITWORTH, Proprietor.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.—The Exercises of the Institute will be resumed on Wednesday, 10th October. As the numbers of Pupils is necessarily limited, those who wish to secure places will do well to apply as early as practicable.

W. H. S. MAGRUDER

Aug. 5, 1860. 1y

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE.—The Twenty-Third annual Session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, OCTOBER 1st, under the superintendence of the following incumbents:

Rev. J. L. Bowell, President, and Professor of Modern Science, Rhetoric, &c.
Rev. C. W. Smith, Professor of Mathematics.
Rev. F. H. Forster, Professor of Ancient Languages.
Rev. W. C. Bliss, Professor of Natural Sciences.
C. Schwartz, Professor of Modern Languages and Painting.
Miss M. F. Barkdull, Assistant in Academical Department.
Miss C. M. Semple, Assistant in Primary Department.
P. Guttenberger, Senior Professor of Music.
W. S. S. Matthews, junior do.
Miss Guttenberger, and Miss M. A. Matthews, Assistants in Music.
Mrs. S. Schwartz, Teacher of Ornamental Branches.

$20 will cover the general expenses of a Student for board and Tuition, (no extra studies, be it seen. The expense of furnishing a room varies from $10 to $12.

In addition to the regular College classes, there will be henceforth an Academical and a Primary Department, all under the charge of the same general faculty.

Letters of parental business should be directed to Professor C. Schwartz, Assistant of the Faculty, on all other matters, either to Rev. [illegible]

Aug. 28, 1860

BASCOM FEMALE SEMINARY, Grenada, Miss. This Institution, with a neat Boarding Department and superior educational facilities will commence its next Session, Sept. 24th 1860.

Rev. S. D. OGBURN, President.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy for Young Ladies will open its thirty-second annual session on the 1st Monday in October next, number of pupils last session, 100. A new building now in course of erection will be ready for occupancy early in October, with accommodations for thirty additional boarders. A room has been erected for Gentlemen, with appurtenances for scientific physical training, which gives beauty, grace and health.

The College is furnished with Maps, Charts, Globes, a Cabinet of Minerals, Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, a full corps of efficient and faithful teachers, and we offer to young ladies desiring an education a high order of advantages.

Terms per session of forty weeks, board and tuition in English branches, from $70 to $100. Music, Languages and ornamental branches at moderate extra charges.

Catalogues, with full information, can be had by addressing sep12 REV. B. JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

GREENSBORO (ALA.) HIGH SCHOOL.—A Select School for Boys.—Rev. J. W. N. MEARS, A. M., M. D., Principal and Proprietor.

SIX boys from ten to fifteen years of age can board with the Principal. The whole expense of board, tuition, washing, fuel, lights, and books and stationery, except books of reference, per scholastic year, $300. s12-3m

READYVILLE SEMINARY, BATON ROUGE, LA., will commence its next session on October 10th. The patrons of the school are earnestly requested to have their daughters and wards present to enter classes at that time.

Sept 12 3m* MRS. M. W. READ, Principal.

Feliciana Female Institute, Jackson, La.—The regular exercises of this institution will be resumed on Monday, October 1st. The grounds have been made to the buildings and premises. With good discipline, thorough teachers, complete apparatus, and newly furnished apartments, superior facilities are afforded for a thorough female education.

Sept. 12, 1860. THOS. W. BROWN, President.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAMES' J. HUTCHISON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Livingston, Alabama. Practices in Sumter and the adjoining counties. [au24

J. E. FLAM, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, BATON Rouge.

REFERENCES.—Henderson & Hyde and Cuddy & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and Slatter....., Baton Rouge

FORTIA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Canton, Louisiana, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana and east Baton Rouge.

References—Payne & Harris, Flynn, Vance & Co., W. and C. Peckford and Co., Broadwell, Haynes and Pritchard & Flower, New Orleans. mar 7 1y

W. P. WINANS. J. T. HEARD.

WINANS & HEARD, ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELLORS AT LAW, Shreveport, La., Marksville, La. We practice in the several Parishes of Rapides, Bossier, Claiborne, and Shreveville.

C. SPENCER MAY, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Harrisonburg, La., will practice in the courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Carroll and Tensas Parishes.

J. C. & T. H. LEW, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, will practice in the Parish of Catahoula, Ouachita, Union, Lincoln and Morehouse. Office at their residence, Harrisonburg, La. Oct 27 1y

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

A. H. MAY & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No. 61 Gravier street, New Orleans. [au25

J. C. PAINE, J. P. HARRISON.
H. B. EDMINSTON, W. H. HARRISON.

PAINE & HARRISON, COMMISSION MERCHANTS No. 61 Union street, New Orleans. ly

FRANCIS PASH. P. L. LAURANS.

EDWARD PASH & CO., COMMISSION MERCHANTS, and Dealers in Wool Produce, 61 Magazine street, New Orleans. 1y

JOHN P. WYCHE & CO., COTTON FACTORS and Commission Merchants, 78 Common street, New Orleans.

JOS. W. CARROLL, W. H. KIMBALL,
JAS. HOY, J. S. SAYERS.

CARROLL, HOY and KIMBALL, Cotton Factors, No. 38 Perdido street, Packers Row, New Orleans. july 10, 1860. 12 m's

MOORE & BRIMWEDE, Successors to Moore and Vanculin, Commission Agents, and Cotton Factors, No. 44 Carondelet street, New Orls. ly 16, 1860

LANE, SALTER & CO., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS, No. 128 Common st. Oct 17, 1860.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CUDDY, BROWN & CO.—HAVING CLOSED THE office of MILES OWEN & CO., the first day of January, 1857, my business connections in future in this city will be with Messrs. Cuddy, Brown & Co., 38 Camp street. MILES OWEN.

L. SAWYER, DEALER IN WOODEN-WARE, PAPER, Brooms, Matches, Cordage, Twines, Scales; and DEARBORN'S CELEBRATED BALANCES for Weighing Cotton, Sugar and Tobacco., No. 60 MAGAZINE STREET New Orleans. ap20

J. H. KELLER, SOAP MANUFACTORY, CORNER of Howard and St. Andrew streets, New Orleans. A good supply constantly on hand, and all orders promptly filled.

PRINTERS' ROLLERS.—T. BEAULIEU IS READY to supply Printers' Rollers on the best quality upon reception of orders either from city or country, at short notice. It is just as foolish for each pressman to cast his own rollers as it is for each man to make his own shirt. Work warranted to be of the best kind.

Address, T. BEAULIEU,
Office of the Christian Advocate,
112 Camp st., New Orleans.

PH. P. WERLEIN, PUBLISHER AND DEALER in SHEET MUSIC and MUSIC BOOKS. Dealers will be supplied at the regular Board of Trade prices. The PIANO FORTES are of the best manufacture, and sold at Eastern prices. MELODEONS of the celebrated George A. Prince & Co., "the best in the world." (Home Journal,) all other kinds also and retail. HARPS, VIOLINS, GUITARS, and all other instruments tuned and repaired.

Call at the Music Store, No. 6 Camp street PH. P. WERLEIN.

ISAAC T. HINTON, BOOK AND JOB PRINTER, 27 Commercial Place, New Orleans, executes with neatness, Pamphlets, Cards, Billheads, Circulars, Labels, Bills Lading, Checks, and every description of Plain and Fancy Printing

FASHIONABLE CLOTHING.—T. H. JACKSON & CO. No. 82 Common street, keeps supplied by frequent arrivals from New York, a well assorted stock of CLOTHING and Gents' FURNISHING GOODS of every description, which we will sell low for cash.—Also, a good assortment of TRUNKS, CARPET BAGS, VALISES, SILK and GINGHAM UMBRELLAS, &c., &c.

All on reasonable terms. T. H. JACKSON & Co.,
Jan 31 No. 82 Common street, 2 doors from Camp street.

P. H. WILLARD, COAL MERCHANT, IN EXCHANGE Place, opposite the Post office. Those desirous of purchasing Coal or Wood, can be supplied at short notice at the City Coal Office, where is constantly kept on hand Pittsburgh, English and Cannel, Anthracite and Lower Ohio Coal, Faunlas, Hotels, Cotton Presses, Steamers, &c., &c., supplied at the lowest market prices. ap22 1y

THE BROOKS HOUSE, 155 CAMP STREET, NEW ORLEANS, next door to Odd Fellows' Hall, fronting Lafayette Square. A delightful situation for business men, or recruiting travelers; every accommodation as good as able as the city affords.

TWO MERCHANTS AND PLANTERS,—MANUFACturers' Commission House, Large stock of BOOTS, SHOES and HATS. Call and examine the stock, at No. 58 Magazine street opposite the Arcade, New Orleans.

nov 11 R. W. HAYNS.

THE HAIR SCRAPER.—The most simple, light, handy and useful hair-tonguing implement yet known, as the metal scraper, attached to the top of the plow in a peculiar manner, can be so regulated as to be set to the depth of any soil, and scrapes the hard, dead ground from the moist soil be

NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

PUBLISHED WEEKLY BY A COMMITTEE OF MINISTERS FOR THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, SOUTH—C. C. GILLESPIE, EDITOR.

VOLUME X.—NUMBER 52. WHOLE NUMBER 515.

NEW ORLEANS, WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1860.

$2.00 A YEAR, IN ADVANCE. OFFICE—115 CAMP ST.

LOUISIANA CONFERENCE REPORTS.

REPORT ON SUNDAY SCHOOLS.

The Sunday School Committee find themselves limited in the expression of their views to a mere comparison of statistics between last year and this, and such reflections as are legitimate therefrom. It has been usual to supply this Committee with material proper for such a report, but by some means we have been neglected, not because the sentiment and practice of either preachers or people are indifferent to a cause meriting the deliberation and careful attention of a specially appointed Committee by your body.

It is much easier and more likely that the institution may be underestimated than ever rated. Aye! Not without a carefully directed attention and close application of thought will we be able to detect the intimate relations and interflow of influence, of sympathy, and life between the Sabbath School and the Church; not until the streams of young, fresh and vigorous life which these unsuspected fountains supply, are turned into the channels of the Church, will we be able to approximate an estimate just to the real value of the Sabbath School.—There are certain habits of individual character which readily discover even the hidden plans of the man's heart, and often shows the plodding, silent worker to be possessed of a sublime idea, and grasping the salient points of a glorious destiny. In such cases the agencies and materials employed by him have been deemed useless by others. Study him and learn with what felicitous enthusiasm he enters into and comprehends the sublime plans of Jehovah.

Such is our estimate and conception of the minister of our holy religion, it matters not where his lot is cast, how obscure and unpromising his field, who comprehends the value and the beauty and promise of childhood. It is not the humanity of the man, but the glorious faith of the preacher, who breathes his soul's richest compassion upon the germs of a coming generation, and the infant members of an ever progressive Church. God bless the preacher whose heart is so fully in the Church as to make her future even as her present, who, in the midst of an adult and dying membership, enlarges in the Sabbath School the circle of successive membership. He, after toil that others shrink from, and after labor that others dread, at last from a commanding point, even the mountain's top, behold the scene, the mystery, the issues of human life; he traces the fountains which supply the fertilizing and beautifying streams that glide down the mountain's side, and meanders through the vale, whose borders are fringed with the hopes, the beauties and the sweets of life. He, with tremulous voice, essays thus early to ascend the scale of that grand diapason with which Heaven and earth are preparing to close the history of redemption. Without pursuing further thoughts which invite us, we present to you the comparative statistics.

Summing up the whole matter and reducing it to practical reflection, the New Orleans District shows a handsome gain throughout, except in the case of officers and teachers, where one less is shown than last year. The Opelousas District shows a loss of 8 schools and 501 volumes from the library. Monroe District improves slightly upon the figures of last year. The indications are that no field will yield a richer harvest to the industrious and inventive preacher.

The Homer District sustains a loss throughout, except in the case of pupils and Sunday School Visitors—Why this falling off? Can anything suggest more painful and humiliating reflection than the depreciation of institutions which lie so near the heart of the Church?—We know not the difficulties under which the preachers labor in this District; still we cannot repress a desire to know the cause, nor a sense of regret for the loss we have sustained, and the other losses which they suggest.

The Shreveport District keeps up her figures except in the instance of the Sunday School Visitor; 48 less have been taken than last year. Wherefore this falling off? Did we not promise to increase our efforts to circulate the children's paper? We have taken the pains to bring under our view all the parts of the Sabbath School that our statistics present, in order that our brethren may see where improvement is possible, and by the effects of the comparison, be stimulated to renewed and persistent endeavors to advance the Sunday School cause in the Louisiana Conference.

In behalf of the Committee.

This Report having been concurred in by the Committee of the Whole, in Lay Session, they recommend to you its adoption, with the following resolutions:

1. Resolved, That the Publishing Agent be requested to issue an edition of the Sunday School Visitor, with the imprint of New Orleans, for distribution throughout the State.

2. Resolved, That the Superintendents of Sabbath Schools in the Louisiana Conference be requested to present each scholar who regularly graduates in the catechetical series of our Church, with a certificate bearing the seal of the Church.

3. Resolved, That our Superintendents of Sabbath Schools offer to all their teachers, as well as their pupils, the discretion of a regular course in our catechisms.

4. Resolved, That within a month of each annual session of our Conference the Superintendents make a report to the Chairman of the Committee on Sabbath Schools in the Conference, which report shall contain the accurate statistics of the Schools, with the time and place of their annual examinations, the number of certificates conferred and the full name of each graduate.

5. Resolved, That the Conference appoint a Committee to secure the means necessary, and have prepared and published, a suitable certificate of graduation, and have them kept in full supply at the Depository in New Orleans.

REPORT ON TEMPERANCE.

Your Committee to whom was referred the subject of temperance, beg leave to report, That we deeply deplore the prevalence of intemperance in our land. Therefore,

1. Resolved, That we will continue to give our entire influence, by example and counsel, to the promotion of temperance.

2. Resolved, That we will prudently, yet firmly, administer our discipline on this subject.

3. Resolved, That we discontinue our committee on temperance.

N. A. CRAVENS, Chairman.

CAPRERA.

Incredible as it may be thought, all accounts agree that Garibaldi is gone or going to Caprera. The spell of the romantic story of Italy liberated loses much of its fascination with the disappearance of its hero; but, as we are only at the end of the second volume, he will surely present himself again before the last chapter is written of a tale which is wilder than fiction and truer than history. Will it all end happily with the wedding-bell, or in a dirge? Journalistic reviewers of the story, which comes out in parts, cannot skip from the preface to the "finis," or certainly divine the catastrophe. For awhile we must be content to miss the chief character, who, while emperors and kings were but the machinery of the plot, was its soul and center. Draw a line from Genoa (where Francis II. is biding his time to run away), westward across the Tuscan Sea, and it will nearly graze the rocky islet of Caprera, on the Italian, by no means on the French side, of the Strait of Bonifacio. They could not make the chief a subject of Louis Napoleon when they gave away Nice, and even in his retirement here, on an advanced post, as it were, of the Island of Sardinia, his presence is a more effectual bar than all Lord John Russell's diplomacy to the cession of that Island to the man with no idea. There is no Sabine farm, no spot of land on the peninsula, to which the dictator could prudently retire; he therefore goes into voluntary exile, but still within the dominions of the monarch whom he has created king of Italy, to this obscure hermitage.

"There he whose lightning pierced Stellilao flues
Now focus his quinquinx, and now ranks his vines;"

—that is, if there are trees and vineyards in Caprera; what we read of as the actual produce of Garibaldi's stony farm would have been much too vulgar for the muse of Twickenham, though perhaps she did not always despise them at dinner-time—artichokes and turnips! Garibaldi may plant and sow, but when he reaps, on what field will it be, and with the sickle or the fallchion? He bids his comrades hold themselves ready to follow him again next spring. "Look forward six months," was the advice of Count Cavour, which Garibaldi interprets as meaning that the cause of freedom in Europe will then want a million of defenders in arms.—This is his way of figuring the sum in round numbers.—Strong of hand, true in heart, the hero is not always great in administration or prudent in speech. He will have leisure to revise his conceptions during the winter. The dictator's trust was well and truly discharged when he made way for the king. The two Sicilies had been conquered by him, and the last of the Bourbons fled from the capital to make room for the liberator. By Garibaldi's soldiers the battle of the Volturno had been won, and to them Capua had surrendered. The royalist army had lost a third of its number by these latter operations, and more than half the remainder, pretending want of confidence in our own generals, had escaped across the boundary into the states of the church, where a few months before they would have been joyfully welcomed as allies, but had now to be scandalously disarmed as fugitives, and then to be fed from the bankrupt exchequer of Pius IX., who is himself reduced to ask for his "penny" in France, where the government denounces its collection as an unworthy tribute to Rome, and from "the faithful" in these realms; for the Pope has become the most needy, the least deserving, and the most exacting beggarman since O'Connell's time. The Garibaldino being passed by the Piedmontese, and nothing but a French interdict preventing an attack upon Mola and Gaeta from the sea as well as by land, the hunt was up. Meanwhile the people had accepted their new sovereign, not only in Southern Italy, but likewise in Umbria and several districts and towns of the papal territory which were in the occupation of the French. It remained only that the European powers, one by one, since there could be no congress, should recognize the new order of things.

To England will belong, we hope, the honor of being the first to do this. Thus, perchance, by the moral force of her example, may the physical contest, the tremendous campaign looked for next spring, be averted. She who accepted the will of France, when that will was another Napoleon, must in consistency with herself ratify the happier choice of Italy. The recent dispatch from the foreign office prepares the way for this step, which our imperial ally must follow or be untrue to himself. The one afflicting thought is that Garibaldi, as he retires into the background lest he should divide with his sovereign the attention and admiration of beholders, carries a wounded spirit into the magnanimity of his exile. It is said that some stupid order from the head-quarters, implying that he was placed as a subordinate, under the command of a Sardinian marshal, extorted from the noble chief a tender of his resignation, which Victor Emanuel had too much sense and feeling not to refuse. Though this arrow was plucked out of the dictator's noble breast, there are others which have left their barbs behind, but none that will rankle and fester there. Never was there a warrior so remorseful for every drop of blood shed in a civil war: never an adventurer, a "filibuster," who overturned thrones and created a kingdom with means so slender; never a soldier so idolized by his troops, or a leader so reverenced by the people. Still he had weaknesses—generous, and leaning to virtue's side, but yet weaknesses—which conspired with his very strength and his greatness to disqualify him for lingering longer on the scene. The time came when he must have perceived this, and must have said to himself, Tempus abire tibi est—"There's not a friend or foe of mine but wishes I were away." Only on the condition of supplanting him had the Sardinian King been permitted by the French to overrun the Roman Marches and to enter the territory of Naples. He knew this and went home, not with airs of "savage grandeur," but in pure, self-sacrificing disinterestedness. The end of it all, for the present—and it is a noble and fitting end or pause—is Garibaldi at his rocky farm in Caprera, and Victor Emanuel proclaimed King of Italy.—London Watchman.

PRAYER OF THE CHINESE REBELS.

Rev. Otis Gibson, one of the Methodist missionaries at Fuh-Chau, China, sends to the Northern Christian Advocate, a description of a remarkable book written by King Kan, one of the leaders of the Chinese Rebels. In it occurs the following form of prayer, prepared for public and private use by the insurgents:

"Kneeling on the earth, we (or, I,) little children, praise the great supreme Ruler, the Tribune, the Heavenly Father, the Heavenly Elder Brother, and the Holy Spirit. O God, thou art omniscient, omnipotent, and omnipresent, most just, and most kind. In the beginning, in six days, Thou madest heaven and earth, hills and seas, and all things. Still by the wind and sunshine, by the rain and dews, Thou producest all things, and preservest and nourishest all mankind. Proof of thy sustaining and preserving favor.

"But no man knows gratitude or gives thanks for Thy favors, O God. Thus forgetful of kindness, and rebellious to their root, fell by Heaven, and yet treacherously imposing on it, men are indeed sinners (undeserving) of heaven and fit materials for hell, and deserve to be punished at once thereto, to be exposed to the worm that never dieth and the fire that is not quenched, forever to endure unexhausted inexhaustible misery.

"In this case, O our God, if Thou wouldest utterly destroy them, the kindness of Thy heart would not bear it; and if Thou wouldest not destroy them, Thy just and righteous law would be made of no effect. In this difficulty, Thou wast constrained to reduce and send from heaven to earth Jesus Christ, Thy first begotten Son, most honorable and noble—He was born from the womb of the Virgin Mary, was in the world thirty and three years, called to Himself twelve disciples, and instructed them, according to Thy holy will, to save the world, to urge men to repent and to turn from their errors, that they might receive His redeemed grace. Afterwards, He was indeed nailed on the cross by wicked men, receiving a thousand indignities and ten thousand miseries, and poured out his precious blood, an atonement for the sins of the brethren and sisters of all nations under heaven, so that all who believed and were baptized might be saved, and ascend to heaven to enjoy happiness, while they who did not believe should suffer the perdition of hell.

"Afterwards, He was buried, and on the third day He rose again, and after forty days He ascended to heaven, where now He is seated at the right hand of Thy power, O God. All who sincerely pray to Thee for pardon and happiness, Christ, the Heavenly Elder Brother, intercedes with Thee for them, and Thou, O God, wilt regard His merit, and accord to them the forgiveness of their offenses, and bestow Thy Holy Spirit to renew their hearts, to open their obstructed understandings, to give them intelligence and strength, so that they shall sincerely believe in Thee and the Saviour, and fight with and overcome the evil devil (or, devils) our enemy, and make him flee away.

"Such, O God, is Thy love to us sinners, mean and insignificant! The grace and the goodness, the glory and the happiness, are higher than heaven, thicker than the earth, and deeper than the sea. Though we should give our bones to be dust, and our flesh to be torn to pieces, we could not repay Thee one hundred millionth part.

"But until now, alas! the fervent believers are few, and the followers of the devil are many. On this account, O Heavenly Father and Heavenly Elder Brother, ye consulted, and sent our lord, the Heavenly king, to be born in China; in the year Ceen-yew, (1837,) ye called him again to ascend to heaven, where in soul he saw Thee, O Heavenly Father, and Thou didst instruct him what he should do. And so, at the present time, we brethren and sisters, by the favor and majesty of Thee, our Heavenly Father, have been led and brought all the way, till we are here in his capital.

"O Heavenly Father, O Heavenly Elder Brother, is it that now ye no longer love us? Thou mayest indeed not love us, this multitude of little ones, but how can thy kind heart, O Heavenly Father, bear to be thus (perhaps bear to see our misery?) O Heavenly Father, O Heavenly Elder Brother, Thou hast said that Thy will shall be done in earth as in heaven. Thou hast said also, that where two or three agree in heart and mind, whatsoever they ask, shall be done for them by Thy Father in Heaven. We now, the multitude of little ones, take firm hold of these words of promise from Thee, O Heavenly Elder Brother. The things which belong to our pardon and happiness must be given us, and then will we rest a little. If they are not given, brothers and sisters, ye will weep day and night, and cry aloud, (lit., clamor) to our Heavenly Father.

"We beseech our Heavenly Father and our Heavenly Elder Brother, to open wide their heavenly grace, and preserve and help our lord, the Heavenly king, and our young lord. May the empire soon be settled. May the gospel have speedy course, till through the eighteen provinces, the people shall all be the good sons of the Heavenly Father, the good brothers and sisters of the Heavenly Elder Brother, the good subjects of our Heavenly kingdom;—in this world having glory, and in the life to come everlasting happiness."

"Our parents, our brothers, our children, and all our relations, whether they are far or near, in foreign lands or in China,—we commit them all in the powerful hand of our Heavenly Father, praying Him to preserve them, and give them peace. To grant them clothes and food, to keep them from calamity and hardships, to receive their souls to heaven. All that we ask is in dependence on the great merit of the redeeming death of Christ, our Heavenly Elder Brother on the cross. May He intercede with the Heavenly Father, that His holy will may accord to us forgiveness and happiness, world without end, and bless the empire of our lord for myriads and myriads of years. Amen."

THE HORRORS OF THE PAPAL PRISONS.

The Florence Nazione presents us with the summary of a little work, entitled the "Prisons of Paliano." It is the record of the experience of several political prisoners, written in the Pontifical dungeons of Paliano. These tombs for the living are now, thanks to recent events, empty. One prisoner writes:

"In the fort of Paliano there are about two hundred political prisoners, dressed like the criminals condemned to the galleys, and, like them, shaved. They are divided into five sections. Those condemned for life are shut up in cells, about nine spans wide and about sixteen long, including the little table of brickwork. Other cells, about three spans wider, contain three prisoners; and others not much larger, have seventeen all huddled together. In the first of these there is a small grating over and opposite the door, through which the food is introduced. The other cells have one window, and sometimes two, with an opening of about four spans in breadth and one in height, and through this the prisoners are fired upon if it be necessary to keep them quiet. The food and hospital arrangements are villainous. The patients are neglected and ill-treated. The medical attendants will hardly ever send a patient to the hospital, and when they do send him, they always keep him on strict diet.

"Perhaps they have a secret understanding with those who contract for the food. One day, when some complaints were made on account of the bad soup in the hospital, the person who made the complaint was taken by two keepers, and by dint of blows and kicks, was forcibly thrust along into the darkest dungeon, and there detained many days by order of the governor. When some prisoner is at the point of death refuses to receive a confessor, he is removed into a solitary cell, and there after having heaped on him a thousand outrages, orders are given to one of the lowest thinkeys to kill him by suffocation. The fact is known from the confession of the turnkey himself, who, on one occasion, refused to be a party to this barbarity. The corpse is interred in the interior of the fort, and the governor is present at the funeral. Sometimes he gives a kick to the head of the corpse, and commits similar outrages.

The following is the testimony of another victim of Papal infamie.

"Whilst I was an inmate of this den of horrors, a wife with her little boy obtained permission to see her husband. It was ten years since the Papal government had torn her husband from her embrace; the boy had never known his father, for he was born after the arrest. Neither the prayers of the afflicted wife, nor the tears of the tender child, nor the sobbings and despair of the unhappy father, could induce the governor to allow them but one embrace—to let them mingle their tears together. It would be impossible to describe the rigors and the tortures, always new and increasing, which have been invented to augment the sufferings of the prisoners after the last fatal attempt at flight. In order to prevent the political prisoners from holding the slightest communication with the outer world, recourse was even had to the very strange and absurd expedient of forbidding the physician (although an individual completely subservient to the government) from personally visiting the sick in prison. He was to treat them on the report of a creature who but a short time before had been in the galleys, and was transferred thence to perform the office of an hospital attendant.

This liberated galley-slave felt the pulse, made his diagnosis, drew his conclusions, and the physician, meanwhile waited in the room of the governor for the report of the attendant, and, according to the character of that report, prescribed remedies for the patients whom he had never seen. Representation on representation was necessary before the Papal government could be induced to abandon this singular mode of proceeding; and it was only after some time that the physician obtained permission to approach the bed of his patients; but even then only in the company of the turnkeys, who were placed as spies over his movements, his words, and the very expression of pity which his countenance might betray. One of the patients, a certain M——, of Bologna, begged to see the governor, to implore in the name of his companions, the permission to have the period for exercise extended for half an hour. [illegible] weighing eighty pounds, and thrown into the tower. The tower, situated in the centre of the citadel, is the most horrible of prisons—damp, isolated, with an opening at the roof, leaving the prisoner exposed to all the inclemency of the weather.

He it sunshine or winter, the inmate of the tower has no bed save the bare ground—no coverlet save his own apparel—no food save bread and water. When I left the fort to be conveyed as an exile across the frontier, a poor prisoner had just died in consequence of illness caused by the repetition of this punishment, from which more than one prisoner had died whom the government perhaps wished to get out of the way. A certain P——, of Ascoli, on returning from the chapel to his cell, happened when he reached the court-yard of the fortress, to salute a condemned prisoner belonging to another section, who was looking through the grating. For that offence the head jailor, after beating him, had the usual chains put on, and then sent him to the tower. It was in March, on an Easter Sunday. After three days of suffering he was found stretched on, almost frozen, on the ground. Then he was removed to the hospital, and, thanks to a strong constitution, after some time he recovered. Many amongst the political prisoners, in consequence of the treatment they had received, from the moral and physical tortures endured, have become insane.

They howl in their prisons, sometimes mingling with the other victims, at other times alone, but without any difference of treatment. One of these wretched maniacs committed one day an insane act. The head-jailor beat him so cruelly as to leave him almost lifeless on the ground. Young C——, who was in the same cell, indignant at the outrage, called out that they were murdering the man. Thereupon the jailor departed, but immediately returned with a band of turnkeys, who at once fell upon the youth, removed him to another prison, and there with sticks and ropes, mercilessly belabored him.—Another poor fellow, whose intellect was temporarily wandering, having made some complaint about his food, was kicked and thrashed back to his old cell—there left without attendance, without the visit of the physician, and with the coarsest diet. He recovered from his mental illness, but now, owing to the length of the imprisonment, of the suffrings endured, and to the treatment to which he has been subjected, his health has suffered to such an extent that his friends have no hope of ever seeing him on this side the grave.

CHURCH STINGINESS.

It is beyond question that the crying sin of Israel today is covetousness; stinginess in the Church is a prevailing epidemic. We can hardly think of another evil so huge and monstrous as this, which exists in well nigh every congregation. It paralyzes faith, imprisons charity, and nullifies hope. It is the real, hard, obdurate heresy with which God's ministry is obliged to contend. It hinders all evangelical efforts at home and abroad. It cripples the exertions of pastors in their every attempt to do good. It renders the growth of personal piety impossible in its victim. A stingy church-member will let his heart go after its covetousness, while listening to the most animating discourse, and his tight fist will choke his conscience, even while it is grasping for a breath of vital air. He may admire his minister, and feel an attachment for the church in which he is wont to worship; and yet, the moment he is required to show his love for Christ by proper works of benevolence or charity, he straightway takes counsel of his stinginess, and is seized with a spasm of economy, which shuts up his heart as closely as a vault, from which the light of day is excluded.

Many professors are perhaps unconscious of their meanness in religious matters. If they were, no doubt they would repent, and do works meet for repentance.—But until they can be shown, and made by the grace of the Holy Spirit to feel how great their sin in this regard truly is, there can be little hope of reformation.—Let us, therefore, propose a few questions which professors may ponder, with a view of ascertaining whether they are indeed guilty of covetousness, and chargeable with inexcusable stinginess:

1. Do you believe that you and all you possess belong to Christ? Were you saved by the precious blood of redemption; only that you might the more indulge your own selfishness, or that you might no longer live for yourself, but for Him who died in your stead? A careful and honest answer to this enquiry will go far towards determining your duty with respect to religious efforts for the salvation of others.

2. Are your gifts for church purposes a single tithe of the amount of your expenditures for luxuries in your own home? If you have sufficient means to comply with the demands of fashion, or with the claims of an increasing business, can you give these as reasons for diminishing or withholding your contributions for religious purposes? It is an indisputable fact, that many professors expend so much upon dress, and furniture, and other luxuries, that they have little to bestow in charity. Will are they blameless? Is this course consistent with the claims of an enlightened Christian conscience?

3. Do you place yourself in debt in order to grow richer than you now are; and then plead that because you are in debt you have nothing to give? This is a subterfuge very commonly resorted to among farmers. They add farm to farm, and while the gains are all the while increasing, still they grow more and more reluctant to aid religious efforts. If there is a little debt on the church, they are unable to help in removing it; if the parsonage needs repairing, it must remain untouched until individual greed has done its perfect work; if missions want assistance, or charitable interests plead for aid, they must be sent empty away from him, who offers in excuse the existence of debt, which is, in fact, but a real advance towards increasing wealth. Every pastor knows very well how the subtle devil of covetousness entrenches himself in the human heart under the above-named pretexts.

4. Have you made it a principle to live for others as well as for yourself? If you have, then you will find little difficulty in so managing your affairs as to save a portion of your weekly gains for the service of God. If you have not, then beware, lest you fall into the error and condemnation of Balaam, the son of Beor, who loved the wages of unrighteousness.—Christian Intelligencer.

THE BIBLE IN DIFFERENT COUNTRIES MANY YEARS SINCE.

After the establishment of the British and Foreign Bible Society, on the 7th of March, 1804, one of the earliest efforts of the committee was naturally to provide an edition of Welsh Bibles and Testaments.

An eyewitness thus describes their reception: "When the arrival of the cart was announced, which carried the first sacred load, the Welsh peasants went out in crowds to meet it, welcomed it as the Israelites did the ark of old, drew it into town, and eagerly bore off every copy as fast as they could be dispersed. The young people consumed the whole night in reading it, and laborers carried it with them to the fields, that they might enjoy it during intervals of their labor."

Mr. Charles, with whose memory we connect these Welsh Bibles, was travelling, in the autumn of 1799, over a mountain in Merionethshire, one frosty night, and had his hand frostbitten, no illness followed, and his life was in danger. Under these circumstances, his friends met to pray for his restoration, and one person, alluding to the fifteen years added to Hezekiah's life, of old entreated God to spare Mr. Charles's life also fifteen years: "Fifteen years, O Lord! add but fifteen years to the life of thy servant! Spare him for fifteen years more to thy Church and thy people!" Mr. Charles heard of this prayer, and it made a deep impression on his mind. He mentioned it to several friends, during the last years of his life, for his death did occur just at the close of the fifteen years. It was during this period of fifteen years that the most important acts of his life took place—the most valuable of his works were written, &c.

In Ireland at this time not more than a third even of the Protestant families possessed a Bible, while among Roman Catholics, far more numerous, a Bible was probably not to be found in more than one out of five hundred families. In 1813, most zealous and successful exertions seem to have been made in Ireland, for the circulation of the Scriptures. The number of Bibles and Testaments issued was forty thousand, their previous need of the Scriptures may be gathered from the following anecdote. A young man, bred a Catholic, having learned to read, had a New Testament happening to lie neglected in his master's house, it became the constant companion of his leisure hours. His apprenticeship to his master, a linen weaver, being finished, he begged the New Testament as a reward for his faithful services.—The master refused to give it to him unless he served six months longer. The young man, thinking that a New Testament might be obtained on easier terms at Castlebar, declined this and made diligent inquiry at all the shops to find one. Alas! not a Testament was for sale at that time in the principal town of [illegible] in despair, as he thought, he dreamed of nothing else; and finding no rest, he returned to his master, and agreed to serve him for the Testament six months more.

A gentleman of respectability in Ireland vouches for this as a fact, in a letter dated 21th December, 1811.—He adds that the young man became a steadfast and exemplary Protestant.

A correspondent in 1813 says: "The times are trying to the poor; yet many who come to Derry market, to buy food for their children, came to my house, and said in my hearing, 'We will buy a little less meal, and take home the Word of God with us, as we may never get Testaments for seven pence each again.'"

At Nuremberg, an imperial city of Germany, a Bible Society was formed in 1814, to co-operate with that in London. This auxiliary proved "the cradle of our continental greatness."

But it was now a time of war all over Europe. Among the French and Spanish prisoners of war, the Bible Society occupied itself in distributing the Scriptures in their native languages. A correspondent says: "Many sought the books with tears and entreaties, and received the words of eternal life; since which I have witnessed the most pleasing sight that my eyes ever beheld, nearly one thousand poor prisoners sitting around the prison walls, reading the Word of God, with an apparent eagerness that would have put many professing Christians to the blush." From time to time an exchange of prisoners was made, and thus the Word of God crossed the water with the returning soldiers. Several of these stray Bibles were known to have led to the foundation of Protestant churches, and some of the present colporteurs have been powerfully aided in their mission by men who were formerly prisoners of war in England.

The attention of the Bible Society was first drawn towards China, by the notice of a manuscript in Chinese existing in the British Museum of the chief part of the New Testament. It was at first proposed that the Society should print it; it was found, however, that owing to the intricacy of the Chinese characters, this could only be done at the expense of two guineas a volume, and the intention was relinquished until a future day.

In the meantime the indefatigable Dr. Morrison went to work in his cellar at Canton, on a fresh translation, to which, however, the former was of some service.—When Cary, Marshman, and Ward sat down to render the word of God into the fifteen polished languages of India, with its millions of souls, that Word existed only in the Tamil, the translation of Schultze the missionary.

Meanwhile, over the Islands of the Pacific and the Indian Archipelago lay the veil of deep darkness. The state of Africa was that of unexplored ignorance, except that here and there the margin of the South was illuminated by Bibles in Holland. The only region in which the light of revelation could be said in any degree to shine was the Northern line, where Arabic is spoken.

America in her Northern regions fared more generously; the colonies of England were partially supplied. The Bible constituted the inheritance of the magnificent Union of the States: the pilgrim fathers had conveyed it in the "Mayflower," in the year 1620; Oglethorpe bore it to Georgia, and thus it was embalmed in the memory of the people.

CHEERING NEWS FROM INDIA.

A letter from the Rev. Dr. Campbell, dated Saruhanpur, October 1st, 1860, says: "You are already aware of the call from the Rajah of Kapurthala, who, if not altogether, is certainly almost a Christian prince, for the services of Mr. Woodside as a missionary at the capital. To this all the brethren in the whole mission gave their most cordial consent. And as a special and gracious providence seemed to be manifest in the whole affair, Mr. Woodside cheerfully consented to leave his pleasant and prosperous station at Dehra and remove to Kapurthala. The Rajah is now building him a very comfortable residence near to his own palace. He pays his salary and all the incidental expenses, and gives him every opportunity and assistance to prosecute his missionary labors among his people. The Rajah has also invited Dr. J. Newton, Jr., to labor at his capital as a medical missionary, and also pays his salary. The Rajah is married to a Christian lady; he has thrown away all the trammels of caste that enslave so many, professes himself to be a Christian, reads his Bible, and keeps family worship in his palace regularly, attends public worship on the Sabbath, investigates Christian doctrines, and gradually, as he acquires light and knowledge, gives up such of his former practices as he knows to be wrong. He now proposes shortly to receive Christian baptism and to become a professed follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. A more humble and teachable man I have never seen.—There is no pride or meanness about him. I trust he will yet become a burning and shining light in the midst of the moral darkness resting upon his people, and exert a happy influence among the princes of India. Mr. Woodside is just the person to occupy this most important and influential post, and I believe he has a high prospect of usefulness before him. Let Christians pray earnestly for the Rajah of Kapurthala, and for the success of the mission established by him. So far it gives good promises of success. At that place there are two native church members and about twenty-four nominal Christians in the service of the Rajah, to whom the gospel is preached regularly."

SECOND VISIT OF THE AMERICAN AMBASSADOR TO THE COURT OF THE TYCOON.

The New York Tribune publishes a letter from Japan, dated on the 5th of September. The writer says:

His Excellency Minister Harris, whom some Shanghai letter-writers killed off, as we see by late mails from America, is alive and well, and bids fair so to remain for some years to come, as we hope he may. He had an audience with the Emperor on the 20th ult., which passed off to his entire satisfaction. All the ceremonial marks of respect were paid him, the lack of which at his audience last year gave occasion of offence to all the foreign Embassies. This was the first audience granted since that time. Mr. Harris was escorted to the palace, or the building now occupied as such since the fire, by a large and imposing retinue of Japanese officials. The streets were crowded with many tens of thousands of people to witness the procession. They were restrained from pressing upon the cortege by ropes stretched along the route, and the utmost order prevailed. Mr. Harris was attended by the customary insignia of high rank, sword bearers, spear bearers, plumes of duck's feathers on tall poles, preceding the norimon in which he rode. His horse, handsomely caparisoned, followed the norimon led by grooms. Norimons containing Mr. Heusken the interpreter, and Mr. Dorr, Consul for Kanagwa, with horses led in like manner, followed the Ministers. Arrived at the palace, the three gentlemen were ushered into an ante-room, where the two gentlemen en suite waited, while Mr. Harris proceeded through an adjoining apartment in which were high public functionaries and dignitaries attendant upon the Imperial presence to the third or audience chamber.

At the remote end of this room the young Emperor sat in a chair of Japanese construction, vermillion lacquered and gilded, upon a dais raised a foot from the main floor. The room was devoid of furniture, its floor covered with mats, and the walls with a handsome gilt figured paper. Members of the Gorojo or Council of State of Five, were present in the audience room. Approaching with salutations to within a few mats width of the Imperial presence, Mr. H. delivered his address appropriate to the occasion. The Emperor responded. Mr. H. again bowed and left. The same cortege accompanied him again to his residence, and shortly after a messenger arrived from the palace, bearing a royal gift of confectionery. The Minister of Foreign Affairs also called to inquire if all had been done to our minister's satisfaction; and on receiving an assurance affirmatively, invited Mr. H. to a state dinner, to take place two or three days subsequently. The same week minister Alcock had an audience, and this week the French Consul General had his. I had the pleasure of seeing the Imperial bonbons at the Kanagawa Consulate, whither they had been sent. They were contained in a box of two feet in length, by one and a half in width and height, of unpainted pine deal. They were arranged in four trays that just filled the box. The arrangement was made with good taste as to the distribution of forms and display of colors. There were various confections of sugar, and sugar and hero flour, or sugar and rice flour, and sweet cakes that looked tempting to the eye, while, as for taste, a pound of Smart's "Steam refined" candles would have been worth the whole of them.

There was one feature of this audience worthy of note. Our Minister very properly alluded to the Embassy then in the States in a manner calculated to draw forth a response; but no, his Majesty deigned no allusion in reply, and at all times the Government maintained a marked reticence on this subject. What is this Embassy, made up of men bearing a home rank about equal with a New [illegible] by birth and royal [illegible]. The feeling is universal among Americans, who have been in Japan the longest, and may be supposed to know something of the Japanese character, that Brother Jonathan, as usual, has overdone the matter. The Japanese, who love order and quiet in the first place, will be disgusted with the public show made of them, and the tumult and disorder that followed them, and being proud and arrogant as well, will consider the adulation bestowed upon them as so much tribute money paid to their great and powerful realm.

THE RIGHT SORT OF RELIGION.

A writer in the Congregationalist, who evidently believes, with the apostle James, that faith without works is dead, thus describes the kind of religion which the times require:

We want a religion that goes into the family and keeps the husband from being spiteful when the dinner is late, and keeps the dinner from being late—keeps the wife from fretting when the husband tracks the newly-washed floor with his muddy boots, and makes the husband mindful of the scraper and the door mat—keeps the mother patient when the baby is cross, and keeps the baby pleasant—amuses the children as well as instructs them—wins as well as governs—projects the honey moon into the harvest moon, and makes the happy hours like the eastern fig tree, bearing in its bosom at once the beauty of the tender blossom and the glory of the ripened fruit. We want a religion that bears heavily, not only on the "exceeding sinfulness of sin," but on the exceeding rascality of lying and stealing—a religion that banishes small measures from the counters, small baskets from the stalls, pebbles from the cotton bags, clay from paper, sand from sugar, chickory from coffee, otter from butter, beet juice from vinegar, alum from bread, strychnine from wine, water from milk cans and buttons from the contribution box.

The religion that is to save the world will not put all the big strawberries at the top, and all the bad ones at the bottom. It will not offer more baskets of foreign wines than the vineyards ever produced bottles, and more barrels of Genesee flour than all the wheat fields of New York grow, and all her mills grind. It will not make one half of a pair of shoes of good leather, and the other half of poor leather, so that the first shall redound to the makers credit, and the second to his cash. It will not put Gonvin's stamp on Jenkin's kid gloves, nor make Paris bonnets in the back room of a Boston milliner's shop, nor let a piece of velvet that professes to measure twelve yards, come to an untimely end in the tenth, or a spool of sewing silk that vouches for twenty yards, be nipped in the bud at fourteen and a half, nor the cotton thread spool break to the yardstick fifty of the two hundred yards of promise that was given, to the eye, nor yard wide cloth measure less than thirty six inches from selvedge, to selvedge, nor all delains nod all linen handkerchiefs be amalgamated with clandestine cotton, nor coats made of old woolen rags pressed together, be sold to the unsuspecting public for legal broadcloth. It does not put bricks at five dollars per thousand, into chimneys it contracted to build of seven-dollar materials, nor smuggle white pine into floors that have paid for hard pine, nor leave yawning cracks in the closets where boards ought to join, nor daub ceilings that always ought to be smoothly plastered, nor make window blinds with slats that can not stand the wind and paint that can not stand the sun, and fastenings that may be looked at, but on no account to be touched.

The religion that is to sanctify the world, pays its debts. It does not consider that forty cents returned for one hundred cents given is according to Gospel, though it may be according to law. It looks upon a man who has failed in trade, and who continues to live in luxury, as a thief. It looks upon a man who promises to pay fifty dollars on demand, with interest, and who neglects to pay it on demand with or without interest, as a liar.

BUSINESS A MEANS OF GRACE.

We often hear Christians complain of their leanness and emptiness, and attribute it all to their business. If they are correct in the cause of their want of religious enjoyment, then, either they are engaged in a wrong business, or they are pursuing it in a wrong manner. No lawful business—and a Christian cannot engage in any other—pursued in a proper manner, will injure the enjoyments of the child of God. He that has the love of God in his heart, and does his whole duty each day, toward God and man, will never have occasion to charge the blame of his leanness to his business. The true Christian who does all that he does to the glory of God, is never more happy than when full of business. Let him connect his business with God; let him work for God every day in the week, and consecrate all his income to the furtherance of His cause in the earth, and he will find that his business, instead of being a hinderance, will be a help—a real means of grace to him. Instead of letting his business swallow up his religion, his religion will swallow up his business.—American Presbyterian.

MAN'S DUTY TO WOMAN.

Let him learn to be grateful to woman for this undoubted achievement of her sex, that it is she—she, far more than he, and she too often in despite of him—who has kept Christendom from lapsing back into barbarism—kept mercy and truth from being utterly overborne by those two greedy monsters—money and war. Let him be grateful for this, that almost every great soul that has led forward or lifted up the race has been furnished for each nobler deed, and inspired with each patriotic and holy inspiration, by the retiring fortitude of some Spartan or more than Spartan—some Christian mother.—Moses, the deliverer of his people, drawn out of the Nile by the King's daughter, some one has hinted, is only a symbol of the way that woman's better instincts always outwit the tyrannical diplomacy of man. Let him cheerfully remember, that though the sinewy sex achieves enterprises on public theatres, it is the nerve and sensibility of the other that arm the mind and inflame the soul in secret. "A man discovered America, but a woman equipped the voyage." So everywhere; man executes the performance, but woman trains the man. Every effectual person, leaving his mark on the world, is but another Columbus, for whose furnishing some Isabella, in the form of his mother, lays down her jewelry, her vanities, her comfort.

Above all, let not man practice on woman the perpetual and shameful falsehood of pretending admiration and acting contempt. Let them not exhaust their kindness in adorning her person, and ask in return the annullation of her soul. Let them not assent to her every high opinion, as if she were not strong enough to maintain it against opposition; nor yet manufacture opinion for her, and force it on her lips by dictation. Let them not cruelly her emotions, nor ridicule her frailty, nor crush her individuality, nor insult her dependence, nor play on mean jests upon her honor in convivial companies, nor bandy unclean doubts of her, as a wretched substitute for wit; nor whisper vulgar suspicions of her purity, which, as compared with their own, is like the immaculate whiteness of angels. Let them remember that for the ghastly spectacles of her blasted charity, they are answerable. Let them multiply her social advantages, enhance her dignity, minister to her intelligence, and

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

New Orleans Christian Advocate.

Terms—$2 00 per annum, in advance.

NEW-ORLEANS:

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 26, 1860.

PREACHERS' POST-OFFICES AND THE ADVOCATE.

We hope all our preachers who may desire to have the Advocate changed to other post-offices, will write us immediately. Give us the names of both the old and the new post-offices. And as soon as you can learn them, send us a list of all the post-offices in your respective charges. All preachers who receive an appointment from the Bishop, and those who are employed by presiding elders, are expected to act as agents, and will receive the paper gratis. No paper will be sent, or changed, unless it is ordered.

We ask the brethren to remember the resolution passed by the Mississippi Conference, calling upon the other patronising Conferences to unite with her in raising the subscription list to 10,000 subscribers this year, in order that the paper may be enlarged and improved. We wish to enlarge just as soon as possible—at the beginning of the year, if we are sufficiently encouraged.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

This body met at Montgomery, Ala., on Wednesday, Dec. 12, and closed on Friday afternoon of the following week, having been in session ten days. Bishop Andrew presided. His health, we are sorry to say, was not vigorous. He was evidently worn by his recent tour to the Texas Conferences. He also had heavy work at the Alabama Conference. To station the preachers of such a large Conference, with sixteen Presiding Elders' Districts, and over two hundred and fifty appointments, is no light matter. The Bishop went through it all faithfully, till the close of the address to the preachers, when he was compelled to retire, and leave the appointments to be read out by Rev. T. J. Kŏger. He presided to the entire satisfaction of the Conference, and entire harmony and good feeling prevailed throughout the session. He often spoke of his increasing years and infirmities, and of the probability, at no distant day, of being called from labor to rest. We never saw him more spiritually minded. Let the Church pray for her Bishops.

Bishop Soule was present at the Conference. His venerable form had a hallowed influence. His frame and voice were feeble, and he spoke but seldom. The Conference passed a resolution of thanks to God that his life had been spared to visit them once more, and prayed for the continuance of health, happiness, and the blessing of God, to him. He responded in a touching, wise, and patriarchal address, full of tender and thrilling memories, and of good and affectionate counsel. It was a time of tears. The Conference, and the whole audience, were deeply moved. They wept at the thought that they should probably see his face no more. When he has passed away, we shall not soon look upon his like again. We are glad to be permitted to say that, when the report on the New Orleans Christian Advocate came up, he said that the paper "deserved twenty thousand subscribers." Hear it, ye five hundred agents.

The preachers were generally in good health, and nearly all of them present. Four of them had died during the year—three members and one probationer, viz.: John Foust, R. R. Dickinson, Jos. T. Abernethy, and Peter J. Walker. Twenty-five preachers were admitted on trial: A. D. M'Voy, A. M. Jones, J. W. Peavy, J. J. [illegible], [illegible] Baker, H. B. Cottrell, J. W. Ellett, P. K. Brindley, E. S. Smith, T. K. Armstrong, [illegible] Withers, R. B. Crawford, W. H. Morris, J. A. Pace, J. Wood, J. F. Evans, G. Watson, J. Parker, H. Young, W. Moore, C. W. Smith. Seven were re-admitted: J. G. Rush, T. F. Mangham, B. Smiley, J. P. M'Ghee, A. Watson, S. J. Kelly, S. H. Cooper. Fifteen were continued on trial, and fifteen admitted into full connection. Five located: J. C. Brogan, J. Williamson, J. C. Bricklin, J. J. Pickett, and M. M. Graham.

The Alabama Conference still bears aloft the banner in the Missionary Cause. At her last session she resolved to raise $40,000 during the year, and nobly did she redeem the pledge, bringing up a collection of $40,637 50. Nothing daunted by the pressure of the times, she promises to bring up $40,000 next year.

The size of the Conference, and its rapid increase in numbers, has gradually reconciled the majority of the preachers to a division. At the last session, a committee was appointed to consider the subject, and, if they recommended division, to report a line of separation.—The committee reported, recommending division, marking out a line, but recommending delay of action until the next session, the last before the General Conference.—The report was adopted. It was generally understood that the line was agreeable to all parties.

The membership of the Church in the bounds of the Conference amounts to 74,459—including white and colored, in full connection and on probation. The increase for the year has been 2,515.

The political tide runs high in these parts, and pervades the Conference. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by rising vote, and ordered to be published in the New Orleans Christian Advocate. With the exception of names of Conference and States, they are similar to those passed by the South Carolina Conference.

Resolved, That the Alabama Conference, while they feel that the great work of the Christian Ministry demands, and should ever receive, their faithful and devoted attention, and should forever absolve them from any active participation in the strifes of the political arena, nevertheless can never forget the high allegiance which they owe to the claims of their country, the land of their birth.

Resolved, That while we deplore the necessity that exists for a separation from Federal Union, yet in view of all the history of the past, the perils of the present, and the threatened wrongs of the future, we feel bound by honor and duty to move in harmony with the South in resisting Northern domination.

Resolved, That as faithful sons of the South, and with the States of Alabama, Mississippi and Florida, (a part of whose territory we occupy as a Conference,) we shall ever pray for the guidance and blessing of the God of Providence and Grace, who has so long exercised His gracious protection over the homes of our fathers here—and that this Conference tender to the States whose names their encouragements, their sympathies, their affections, their interventions with Heaven in their behalf, their all, subject only to the paramount claims of God upon them.

Before this, however, and in consequence of the belief that the Conference would take no action, about a hundred of the preachers held a meeting in Estelle Hall, which was attended by an immense audience. We take an account of it from the Advertiser.

At the call of a number of the members of the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, inviting all those members "who are in favor of giving public expression to their views upon the present crisis of our country," to attend a meeting at Estelle Hall, on Wednesday evening, the 19th inst. According to said notice, the meeting was called to order by Rev. W. P. Harrison, and on motion, Rev. F. G. Ferguson was elected Chairman, Rev. J. D. Fisher and Rev. D. Carmichael, Vice Presidents, and J. W. Harmon, Secretary.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Rev. Luther L. Hill, of the Protestant Methodist Church.

The President explained the object and intent of the meeting in an appropriate speech, and then introduced the Rev. P. P. Neely to the large, intelligent and overwhelming audience present. For one hour the Doctor entertained and delighted the audience with an eloquent and telling address, eliciting rapturous applause.

It was a calm, lucid, compact and powerful argument, vindicating the South against the oppressions of the North.

At the conclusion of his speech, Rev. W. P. Harrison introduced the following preamble and resolutions, supporting them with a solid argumentative speech, which was frequently applauded:

WHEREAS, We, ministers of the Alabama Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, having, under ordinary circumstances, no disposition to intermeddle with the politics of our country, as being foreign to the great work in which we are engaged, but regarding the present perilous condition of our common country as a crisis in public affairs calling for unity of action among the people of the South; and whereas, we conceive it our duty, as well as our privilege, to give expression to our views: therefore,

Resolved, That we believe African slavery, as it exists in the Southern States of this Republic, to be a wise, humane, and righteous institution, approved of God, and calculated to promote, to the highest possible degree, the welfare of the slave.

Resolved, That the inauguration of any political measure which looks to the overthrow of this institution, or provides in any manner, or at any time, however distant, for the removal of this servile class out of a dependent relation, which is their true and normal state, into one of whose duties and responsibilities they are incapable, cannot be dictated by a blind fanaticism, which will not listen to reason, but madly destroys those whom it attempts to aid.

Resolved, That, as in the Providence of God, several millions of the African race have been committed to our care as a people, we should be recreant to that trust if we did not defend our right to their service against any and all enemies now and forever.

Resolved, That the election of a sectional candidate to the Presidency of the United States, upon the plain advocacy of principles utterly subversive of our rights, can only be considered as a declaration of hostility, on the part of a dominant majority toward the people of the South, a declaration, which in fact, if not in form, dissolves the compact of Union between the States, and drives the aggrieved party to assert her independence, and maintain her rights, at all hazards, and to the last extremity.

Resolved, That our hearts are with our brethren of the South, and should they ever need our hands to assist in achieving our independence, we shall not be found wanting in the hour of danger.

Resolved, That we place our lives and fortunes upon the altar of our State, content to abide in her prosperity, to share her adversity, and determined, as far as in us lies, to preserve her honor unsullied.

At the conclusion of his speech, Rev. J. B. Cottrell was then called upon, and made one of his bold, characteristic speeches, full of sound logic, inimitable humor, biting irony, sparkling wit, and sledge-hammer blows, that brought forth peal after peal of hearty laughter and rounds of applause.

On motion of Rev. J. E. Newman, the Preamble and Resolutions were unanimously adopted.

On motion the Secretary was authorised to publish the proceedings in the Advertiser, Mail, and Post newspapers in Montgomery, and in the New Orleans Christian Advocate.

On motion the meeting adjourned with the benediction by Rev. E. Y. Ramsey.

THE CHINESE REBELLION.

In a letter to the Sacramento Union, by J. Lewis Shuck, the writer, referring to the Chinese rebellion, says: The originator of this rebellion, and founder of the new dynasty of Tai Ping, was born about thirty miles from Canton city, and his real name is Hung Sew Tsuen. His parents, though reputable, were poor, and he being an uncommonly bright youth, his relations determined to educate him by subscriptions among themselves. He succeeded in all his studies, and took honors at each literary examination in his own district, but failed repeatedly at the examinations at the provincial Capital. Failing in his last determinate effort to succeed, his want of success so preyed upon him that his mind for a time became slightly unhinged. While in this dreamy state some Christian tracts in the Chinese language fell into his hands. He was then a village schoolmaster. The perusal of the tracts so impressed him that he determined to disseminate throughout his country the doctrines they taught. Soon he had followers, and he felt emboldened to give the Government officers trouble in retaliation for defeating him at the literary examinations. There are certain aboriginal tribes among the hills of the Province Kwang Si which have never been subdued by either the Chinese or the Manchus. These aborigines have been supposed by some to be the same people as the Burman Karens. To this people application was made to unite in opposing the tyranny and idolatry of the Government.—This new movement of Hung Sew Tsuen was decidedly offensive to the Mandarins, and collisions began, the details of which no foreigners have ever yet been enabled to secure. About this time this leader vis-à-vis named Roberts, with an American religious teacher, were interchanged and the doctrines of Christianity twisted over. Meantime Yun San, one of the active coadjutors, had secured two or three thousand followers, and Hung Sew Tsuen having rejoined him, the next thing we hear was that they had captured the ancient Capital of China, Nanking, and fully inaugurated there a new dynasty called Tai Ping, with Hung Sew Tsuen as the regularly installed Emperor. Their successes have been mysterious and positively wonderful. I do not think, from any data within my reach, that Hung Sew's original design was a national revolution; but the unexpected sympathies of the peasantry, and the glaring weakness of the Government, aided by religious fanaticism, emboldened him to push forward his successful achievements.—The religious element seems to be a marked feature in in all the movements of the Tai Ping army—something like the religious inspiration which so wonderfully influenced the troops of Cromwell. They cherish deadly hatred toward every phase of idolatry, and make a clean sweep of all idols and temples which they meet in their onward march. The Roman Catholic Churches in China are filled with images, as they are in any other country, and these images, too, the rebels demolish with unsparing hands, just as they do other idols.

It has now been about twelve years since this rebellion commenced. Among the leaders are some men of truly great minds and noble purposes. Hung Sew Tsuen himself is said to be a man of great powers of oratory and argument, and sways a mighty influence over others. He is described as "a man of good stature, of commanding appearance and dignified address." Hung Jin is Prime Minister of the new Government at Nanking, and from all accounts he appears to be a man of highest mental culture, of generous impulses, a ready writer, and is exerting a wonderful influence in subduing fanaticism, correcting abuses, and in shaping the religious element in conformity to the Christian Scriptures. He is an ardent student of Christianity, and I regard him as one of the most extraordinary men of this day on the Asiatic continent. A nation of four hundred millions of people is about to feel his potent influence for good. He is a firm believer in Christianity, and already commands the confidence of millions. He is at present engaged in writing a work on "Foreign Governments," and will urge the adoption of their polity upon the new dynasty. He has throughout shown himself a warm friend to foreigners. Among other things, his new book will advocate the establishment of Post Offices, the liberty of the press, and the Christian Calendar. He aims to break up the old exclusiveness and bigotry of the Empire."

The religious character of these people must be regarded with thrilling interest by all believers in the Christian religion. Mr. Hartwell gives in Chinese an abstract of their doctrines, a form of their prayer, the Doxology, and copy of the blessing they ask at table, all of which are truly Christian. By the very latest accounts from China this revolution is rapidly extending, having really attained gigantic proportions. My hope is that if the English and French fail again at the Peiho, they may feel it to be their true policy to negotiate with Tai Ping Wong, for he bids fair at present to sweep away the Manchu dynasty and seat himself firmly upon the ancient throne of China. The present rulers of China are foreigners, Manchu Tartars who usurped the Government about 1664. All the leaders of the revolution are regular Chinese, and in politics and religion are anti-Tartars; hence the wide-spread sympathy of the people with them. They now cover an immense extent of the Empire, inhabited by tens of millions of people. They have lately captured the great cities of Soo Chow and Hang Chow. Pekin, the Capital, is the first city in the Empire in point of population and wealth; the next in order are Soo Chow and Hang Chow. The great renown with which these two captured cities have been regarded may be gathered from the fact that there is an old Chinese national proverb which runs: "Above there is but one heaven; on earth we have Soo Chow and Hang Chow."

RELIGIOUS AWAKENING ABROAD.

From The Home and Foreign Record, we learn that in London and the leading towns of England, there is deepened seriousness, and that the populous island of Islay has been visited with an extraordinary religious awakening.

In France a great revival has taken place recently among Roman Catholics near Vesoul. In two or three villages nearly a thousand souls have left the Roman Catholic church, and turned to evangelical Protestantism.

In Prussia, matters are encouraging. The minister for religious affairs, Herr von Bethmann Hollweg, is a man of deep personal piety, as well as a distinguished statesman. The influential offices in the church are, by his means, being filled with men of decided evangelical views. The new church constitution, moreover, promises to further the diffusion of evangelical religion in the kingdom. It provides for the representation of the private members in every congregation, while heretofore in the six eastern provinces, the government, the pastor, and the private patron possessed an absolute and exclusive control over all the affairs of a congregation.

Bohemia is a deeply interesting land. There the light broke a full century before the Reformation. The land of John Huss, and Jerome of Prague, is re-awakening. A religious movement is going on in it, most marked in its cities, and many conversions are said to have taken place. The movement is helped on by some of the priests, who have become obedient to the faith, and preach the Gospel to the people. There is a loud demand for the celebration of worship in the vulgar tongue, and a ready sale for the Bible. The seed sown by the old Bohemian martyrs is springing up. Huss and Jerome are speaking from their graves.

In Wurtemburg, where numerous missionaries of the Methodist church, and others, traverse the country and announce the Gospel of salvation, the number of awakened is counted already by thousands.

A new spirit of courage and zeal is entering into the Protestants of Hungary. Tidings from Italy trouble their oppressor, the house of Hapsburg. The terror of revolution is extorting from him what justice and sworn promises could not prevail upon him to grant.

In the murky sky of Bavaria there is a feeble dawning of light. The Protestants in the army demand exemption from the order to pay military honors to the Popish symbols, and their demand is likely to be listened to. This may be the precursor of more important concessions, and is encouraging as indicating a revival of the Protestant spirit in that deeply Popish land.

As regards Belgium, a few years ago there was but one Protestant or evangelical church in it. Now there are between thirty and forty; and a Protestant population of at least ten thousand, gathered, to a man, almost out of the Romish church. This is the result of missionary efforts commenced only some fifteen years ago, and quietly yet zealously prosecuted. There is room in that land for far more laborers than are likely to be obtained.

Turning northwards into Russia, we find a movement towards a higher and better order of things. Old Russia is passing away, and the warm breath that is beginning to revive the world is felt even in that northern region. Important reforms are in progress, such as the emancipation and education of the serfs, the authorized circulation of the Scriptures, ecclesiastical reforms, all of which are favorable to the interests of religion. These changes will not come alone; greater will follow.

RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE.

The second session of the Rio Grande Conference convened in the city of San Antonio on the 29th November, and closed December 3rd. Owing to the non-arrival elected President. The Doctor presided over the chair, mild and graceful manner, until the Bishop arrived, who took the Chair on Friday morning. A correspondent of the Texas Advocate writes:

Bro John, the Bible Agent, came over with the Bishop and took part in the exercises. He read a communication from Bro. Moelling, the Editor of our German paper, which enchained the attention of the whole audience, many of whom will testify that their sides ached from prolonged cachination, occasioned by its serio-comic style. Yet withal it was no trivial thing, it possessed weight and depth, truths that well demand the attention of his American brethren. During the entire session, nothing occurred to give the least offence, or occasion of ill-feeling to any one. During Conference, a glorious work commenced and is still being carried on. Mourners for several nights have been crowding the altar. Conference has adjourned, yet these meetings are increasing in interest. May it continue to deepen and spread until all these people are saved. Will not this the joyful news to those who are anxiously looking, for tokens of good from the Pioneer Conference? One of the first missionaries to Texas, Rev. Jesse Hord, was present; he is a member now of Rio Grande Conference. In fervent soul-stirring language he warned us of the danger of omissions of duty and the necessity of firm, unyielding faith in God. May his abound tree flourish for many years, to remain as a landmark to those who are just starting on the campaign. On Sunday night, Bro. John preached a funeral sermon in memory of Father Haynie and Alexander A. Smithwick. The next session will be held in Corpus Christi.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION IN SPAIN.

It is with the deepest regret that we have to state to the friends of the Spanish Evangelization Society that persecution has broken out against the Spanish Protestants in Granada, and is extending to different cities in Spain. Some of these have been cast into prison, and others have been obliged to flee from their homes to different parts of the interior, and to Gibraltar. The circumstances of those in prison are most distressing, as they are either cast into a dungeon, or placed with the criminals in the common prison. The families, both of those who are imprisoned and of those who have fled are also placed in the most distressing circumstances. The business of the persecuted is destroyed for the present, and their wives and children are left without the means of procuring subsistence. The refugees themselves are thrown among strangers, entirely destitute of support.

The cause of this sudden outbreak of persecution was the arrest of a Spaniard, not connected with the Scottish Society, in whose possession were found many letters and documents, from various protestant Spaniards, which have implicated a large number as furthering the Protestant movement in that country.

The Daily Union Prayer Meeting, at No. 82 Camp street, is fuller and more lively this week. Why should it not be crowded every day? Why not count its happy converts to the Christian faith every day? Why not spread its revival influence to all our Churches, and kindle the holy flame of light and love in every heart?—Surely there has never been a time when such an influence was so much needed in our city. Let the Daily Prayer Meeting be full—aye, run over; then it may reach our Churches.

The Syrian missionaries agree that the prospects of the missions are likely to be improved by the recent outrages. Rev. Mr. Calhoun keeps up preaching services at Abeih and Aramun. The congregations are larger than before the war. The common schools at both places have been re-opened at the urgent request of both Christians and Druses.

AUTHORS AND BOOKS.

New York, Dec. 19, 1860.

While we had the Prince of Wales "in our midst" we were too much taken up with feasting him to inquire who he is in reality. But recently some ingenious and industrious writer has traced him back; and it appears that his Royal Highness Albert Edward is the descendant of a tanner! Here is the very pedigree: He is the eldest son of Queen Victoria, who is the daughter of the Duke of Kent, who was the son of George the Third, who was grandson of George the Second, who was the son of Princess Sophia, who was the cousin of Anne, who was the sister of William and Mary. Mary was the daughter, and William the son-in-law of James the Second, who was the son of Charles the First, who was the son of James the First, who was the son of Mary, who was the granddaughter of Margaret, who was the sister of Henry the Eighth, who was the son of Henry the Seventh, who was the son of the Earl of Richmond, who was the son of Catharine, the widow of Henry the Fifth, who was the son of Henry the Fourth, who was the cousin of Richard the Second, who was the grandson of Edward the Third, who was the son of Edward the Second, who was the son of Henry the Third, who was the son of John, who was the son of Henry the Second, who was the son of Matilda, who was the daughter of Henry the First, who was the brother of William Rufus, who was the son of William the Conqueror, who was the bastard son of the Duke of Normandy, by a tanner's daughter of Falaise."

What may be the yearly salary and pocket money of this son of a tanner is not discovered, as his mother makes him an allowance during his minority. When he comes of age he will step into the comfortable income of $260,000 per annum, from his Duchy of Cornwall alone, besides the pickings elsewhere. For the present this $200,000 per annum falls to the Queen, who has besides a yearly shot from Parliament, a salary of $1,625,000; a further yearly sum of $300,000 by way of pin-money, and sundry other little pickings which make up the neat and very comfortable amount of $2,245,000 per annum, on which this Royal lady keeps house. Besides this, however, her husband and her children are furnished with pocket money by the nation to the amount of another annual million. It does not seem to be such a bad thing to belong to a Royal family.

Dr. Coggswell, of the Astor Library, has recently returned from Europe, and has brought with him some literary prizes, which are now being exhibited under glass in the library, being too precious to be submitted to the ordeal of profane touch. Among them are the following curious volumes:

"Cicero De Officiis"—the offices of Cicero; in small folio, printed at Mayence, by Johannes Fast, in 1466.—This is the second edition of the work, and came from the printing press of the veritable Dr. Faustus himself. As a specimen of printing it is equally remarkable, and this book, printed nine years after the invention of printing, can challenge comparison with its fellows of nearly four centuries later.

"Biblia Pauperum;" a block book printed in Holland and improperly supposed to have been intended for the use of the poor; the great length of time and the amount of labor required to produce this work, must of necessity have placed it at a price only suitable to the purses of the very wealthy. This work was executed, it is supposed, about the year 1432, long before the invention of printing. The fac-simile at the library was made from a copy in the British Museum, which was formerly in the library of George III.

"Le Fevre, Recueyell des Histories de Troye, Cologne, 1471:" A few leaves of the first book, printed by Caxton, the founder of English printing. But few copies of this work are known to exist, and a perfect one has been sold for $1,000; it was printed three years before he printed in England.

printed by Caxton, in fac-simile of the first work rude wood-cuts illustrating the game.

"La Fleur des Histories de la terre;" a MS. on vellum; beautifully illuminated; written in 1307, and a beautiful specimen of the writing and illumination of that period.

The "Journal and Correspondence of Lord Auckland," which is just published in England, seems likely to be a very important and interesting contribution to the history of the latter part of the last century. There are hitherto unpublished letters from William Pitt, the statesman, Charles James Fox, Edmund Burke, Storer, the witty correspondent of George Selwyn, Moore, Archbishop of Canterbury, M. Huber, the friend of Necker, French minister, Lord Carmarthen, Sir Joseph Yorke, Lord Gower, Adam Smith, The Marquis of Hertford, Lord Thurlow, Lord Malmesbury, the Duke of Dorset, Josiah Wedgwood, Sir Sidney Smith, the Duchess of Marlborough, Lord H. Spencer, William Wilberforce, Lord Grenville, Sir Grey Cooper, Lord Glenbervie, Lord North, Lady Auckland, and the Duke of Portland. And speaking of letters puts me in mind that in the autobiography of Mrs. Delany we are to have some hitherto unpublished letters from John Wesley; besides a mass of narratives, and letters from and to old Mrs. Delany, who was highly connected, and for the greater part of her life lived in the very air of the English Court, and knew and corresponded with all the great people of England for about half a century. The whole will make, it is said, a most interesting picture of the Court of England and of literary and fashionable society, from a very early part of the eighteenth century nearly to its close; with personal reminiscences of King George III. and Queen Charlotte.

There comes again, and for the 4thousandth time since the days of Pliny, a story of the existence of a race of men with tails. A Dutch journal, Verenigning Christelijke Stemmen for September, contains a lengthy account of the native population of Borneo. The writer asserts that the Poonangs, a race inhabiting large tracts in the interior of the island, are all adorned with tails. A Mr. Van Hontrop, while in the Borneo province lately, saw and examined three of these Poonangs. He came to the conclusion that their caudal appendages, which are described as from three to five inches in length, hard, still, and nearly immovable, are neither a natural deformity, nor the result of disease, but a genuine and general characteristic of the race. Some are to be caught and sent to Holland.

The stereoscope is so popular a parlor-table toy, that it is now to be had at all prices from fifty dollars to fifty cents. Meantime, a close observer has remarked, that if we close one eye and bring the other opposite the centre of a photograph, and tolerably near to it, the picture usually starts out with almost stereoscopic distinctness. The effect is finest in architectural photographs. A similar result, in a feebler degree, is produced by looking at drawings and paintings in the same way.

Messrs. Sheldon & Co., of this city, have just published a new and very fine edition of Macaulay's Essays, in six volumes, and with a very complete index; and an essay on Macaulay's genius, by E. P. Whipple, the Essayist. Here are these celebrated Essays in the order in which they were written, and exactly as they were written; illustrated by an admirable likeness of their author, and by an adequate biographical and critical introduction; with the last discovered and uncollected Essays—all superbly printed at the Riverside press, on beautiful type and paper—forming the most desirable standard dilettante volumes, for library, boudoir, drawing room, study, gifts, companionship, instruction, and entertainment.

Messrs. Ticknor & Fields announce Bruin: or the Young Bear Hunters, by Capt. Mayne Reid.

Messrs. Rudd and Carleton will soon issue A Book about Doctors, by J. C. Jeffreyson; The Curiosities of Civilization, by Andrew Wynter.

Messrs. Appleton are about to publish Allison's Civilization; Francis on Change of Climate; The Discovery of Carthage, by R. N. Davis; and Roughing it with Alice Bailee.

Among recent English works are A History of the Church from the Edict of Milan, A. D. 313, to the Council of Chalcedon, A. D., 451, by W. Bright.

In Cava; or Recollections of the Neapolitans; Andersen's Tales for Children, translated by A. Wehnert; and Patronymica Britannica, a Dictionary of the Family Names of the United Kingdom, by M. A. Lower.

Among English announcements are Women of the Reformation—their Lives, Faith and Trials; Legends from Fairy Land, by Holme Lee, The Scholastic Directory for 1861, to comprehend full lists of English and foreign, public and private schools, by Mr. Crockford; a second series of Horæ Subsecivæ, by Dr. Brown; and The Story of the Mission Fields, by the Rev. Thomas Smith, for many years a missionary in India, and, for a time, the editor of the Calcutta Review.

Dean Ramsay has in preparation a supplementary volume of Reminiscences of Scottish Life and Character.

Among recent French issues are materials for the History of Margaret of Austria, Duchess of Savoy and Regent of the Netherlands, by the Count de Quinsonas; Chateaubriand and his Literary Group under the Empire, being lectures delivered at Liege, by M. de Sainte Beuve; Memoirs of Mme. Elizabeth of France, sister of Louis XVI., by M. de Barghen Fort-Rhion; and a sketch of General Pinodan, being a continuation of M. Hippolyte Castille's Historical Portraits of the Nineteenth Century.

Among recent German issues are the initial volume of Professor Kortumi's History of Europe in its Transition from the Middle Ages to Modern Times; the second volume of Chrysander's Handel; Mommsen's History of the Roman Coinage; and a volume of hitherto unpublished letters, written by Gustavus Adolphus to one of his generals in the years 1630-33.

LETTER FROM REV. R. ABBEY.

Columbia, S. C., Dec. 12, 1860.

Mr. Editor—At five this morning Bishop Paine and myself arrived at this, most beautiful landscape city.—We left Salisbury, N. C., at nine last night, only a few minutes after the adjournment of the North Carolina Conference.

If I knew what good it would do to do so, I would be very willing to say that the session of the Conference in the old North State was a very "harmonious" one. It has become a kind of fashion with letter writers and Conference reporters, to say that the session of a Conference was "harmonious." That, I should think, ought to be presumed. I have attended, with one or two exceptions, all the Conferences in our Church—some of them several times; in all, perhaps fifty, and, with perhaps a single exception or two, I never saw a Methodist Annual Conference that was not harmonious. Sometimes a spirited debate springs up about a college or a something else, but it is a spirited, harmonious debate among christian gentlemen, all aiming at the same end.

The North Carolina Conference is one of our old, settled, mature ecclesiastical wings. It is not a very large, but is a strong Conference, with strong men and strong purposes. They are maintaining the country and their religious position well. I do not know that I have met more talent and genuine respectability anywhere.

They have, as yet, as a Conference, done but little in the way of circulating religious literature, beyond the publication of the North Carolina Advocate. This was a well designed and praiseworthy enterprise, and has been prosecuted with talent, industry, and effect.

The reason why they have not as yet set on foot any efficient measures, under the law of the General Conference, to furnish the people with moral and religious reading, is the want of their people with moral and, or lack of enterprise in the premises. Two years ago they commenced measures for the establishing of a Conference Depository; but the plan of operations did not meet their expectations after a sufficient trial, and it was expected that at this present Conference they would give it such remodelling as it might need, and set themselves to work in the enterprise. But just now the financial condition of the country was such, and the uncertainty of almost everything so great, that I advised a postponement for another twelve months, when, there is every reason to believe, they will bring forward this important enterprise with effect.

At this present writing I am domiciliated with our old friend President Longstreet; and if I was ever more pleasantly homed, away from home, I do not remember the occasion. Albeit, there is one abatement to that remark, and that abatement presents no inconsiderable difficulty in the way. The Judge's family are not at home; and a house without a lady to preside at the table, is, at the very best, but half a house. And so, while here, I am compelled to be rather a philosopher than a man. But the venerable and accomplished Doctor, or Judge, or President, which ever title you choose to use, is here in all the mental and physical buoyancy and elasticity of forty, as pleasant as a companion and as wise as a philosopher.

This is one of the handsomest cities I ever saw; certainly it will compare well with any other in—I was going to say the United States, but I know not exactly what to say, for I know not exactly what or where the "United States" is just now.

The South Carolina Conference convenes to-morrow morning. This is my first visit to either the North or South Carolina Conferences. I anticipate a pleasant communication with the preachers of this old and venerable portion of our ecclesiastical sisterhood. And thee, the Lord willing, I hope to be permitted to attend a conference with my family, from whom I have been absent nearly all the time since the first of September. Meanwhile I have travelled no little through Kentucky, Missouri, Louisiana, Texas, Mississippi, Tennessee, Georgia, and North and South Carolina. If deprived of other enjoyments, I certainly get enough of the Conferences of the Church.

And I reckon that all these things are sufficiently compensated in the satisfaction it gives me to inform you that, in all the parts I have been, our Church is in a peaceful, prosperous, growing, strengthening condition.

R. Abbey, For. Sec.

SECOND QUARTERLY REPORT OF THE CHINA MISSION FOR THE YEAR 1860.

Rev. E. W. Sehon, D. D., Missionary Secretary of the M. E. Church, South:

My Dear Brother—Yours of April 23, containing the proceedings of the Missionary Board in reference to the China Mission, has been received. We are thankful for the prompt and liberal manner in which our wishes in all particulars have been met by the Board. The appropriation made for the coming year will enable us to carry on our work without embarrassment. We heartily join you in the China Mission. Our prospects have never been so encouraging as at present, notwithstanding the unsettled state of the country. Our native church is prospering and there are nine candidates for baptism, or, in Methodist phraseology, nine probationers. We observe now the good old rule of six months' trial, before admission to full membership. It works well, as does every other regulation of Methodist economy, when properly administered among the Chinese. "Christianity in earnest," with its class-meetings, love-feasts, itinerancy, etc., etc., is the very thing for China; and if Methodism fails to maintain itself in the front rank here, it will be the fault of your missionaries.

Our dear brethren, Wood and Allen, with their wives, reached Shanghai on 13th inst., after an unusually long voyage, of one hundred and seventy-five days from New York to Hongkong. They will report to you the particulars of their voyage, etc. It is not necessary to say we rejoiced to see them, Brother Wood is boarding with me. Brother Allen is preparing to keep house in the eastern half of Dr. Jenkins's house. Brother Wood and Sister Allen were seriously ill after leaving Anger, but medical aid and kind friends at Hongkong, with God's blessing, restored them, and they are now quite well, I hope. Thank you for these fellow-laborers to this great harvest field. Can you not send us two such families every year? They are there, and the Church has the means, and the Lord has need of them here; why not send them? It is true, the country is in a very disturbed state, but never mind that; look not at the clouds or heed the winds, but obey the Saviour's command. O that we could all walk more by faith and less by sight. We want strong-hearted young men and women here. You may keep all your "feeble folk" at home; send us those who have brave hearts to do or to suffer, as the Master may appoint. The conflict will not be long—the crown is sure. It is a glorious work.

The Nanking Insurgents have taken Chang-chow, Suchow, and other large and important cities not far from us, within the last few months, and are kept away from Shanghai only because English and French bayonets guard the gates. The interior of the country south of the great river is chiefly in the hands of Insurgents. Several missionaries have visited the camp at Su-chow, and accounts of which you will see in the North China Herald. They present many curious and hard questions for our solution. The question, whether we should recognize them as Christian brethren, has been publicly discussed by the missionary body at Shanghai. Some regard them as Christian Patriots striving to deliver their country from the dominion of the devil and Tartars; while others look upon them as robbers and murderers. It is hard to say at present what they are. We do not know enough about them to authorize an expression of opinion. It is easy to denounce them as robbers, etc., and perhaps some of them do rob, but it is not certain that the leaders are not earnestly striving to better the condition of their country, and we must consider them a power, and one with which our duties will sooner or later bring us in contact. A band of foreign hirelings, at the head of which is a man who was with Walker, is now engaged in fighting the Rebels. This may exasperate them against all foreigners, and thus cause us much trouble. We hope, however, for the best. I will furnish you, in a few weeks, a detailed account of the Nanking Insurgents, so far as we know anything about their movements for the last three or four years.

The people of Shanghai, a most cowardly race, filled with the greatest consternation from their homes on the arrival of the news that the capital of this province, and especially when they heard that Su-chow had fallen into the hands of the Nanking Insurgents. The city of Su-chow remains an empty shell. Of course our schools in the city were broken up, and our congregations much reduced in numbers. All is now comparatively quiet, notwithstanding the Rebels are said to be near us. The English have engaged to protect the city of Shanhai, and the Chinaman, slow of heart as he is to believe any good of a foreigner, knows that this promise will be kept. This inspires confidence. We would have nothing to fear from the insurgents. They are anxious to be on friendly terms with us.

There are at this time a great many strangers in Shanghai—many from the north, and northwest, who are interesting to observe with what attention they listen to preaching, and how earnestly they inquire after the new doctrine. It shows that, contemptible as we may appear in the eyes of some, we are being observed by the people, and that our work is attracting attention beyond the limits of our immediate labors. What the good seed will in this way be scattered far and wide!

The reports of the brethren, which accompany this, will sufficiently acquaint you with the details of our individual work, and thus with the whole work of the mission. The present system of making reports, if properly carried out, is admirably adapted to furnish the Board and the Church with a true and satisfactory account of missionary operations, as conducted by us. If our people knew more about our work, they would feel more interest in it. No one can fail to be interested in reading the simple story of a good man's life for the salvation of others, and in the case of the foreign missionary there is much to enhance the interest. I hope you will find these quarterly reports always full of good news.

With sentiments of high regard for the Board, and yourself personally, I am, etc.

W. G. E. Cunnyngham.

LITERARY NOTICES.

Travels in the Regions of the Upper and Lower Amoor, and the Russian Acquisitions in the Confines of India and China. By Thomas W. Atkinson, F.G.S; F.R.G.S. With a Map and numerous illustrations. 8vo., 438 pp. New York: Harper & Brothers. 1860. For sale in New Orleans by J. White, 105 Canal street.

Rich as the last ten years have proved to contributions to the science Geography, it is not saying too much to affirm that the author has fully equalled the honors and the success of any modern traveller. One is startled at the developments made in this work as to the silent and vast requisitions which Russia has made to her territories within a very recent period. The writer presents a field of surpassing interest to the statesman, to the man of science, and to the man who lifts up his eyes to see where the sickle of the missionary can thrust and the Gospel preached. The style of the writer is easy and fascinating, and the work is elastic with startling incident and anecdote.

Home Life.—Even as the sunbeam is composed of millions of minute rays, the home life must be constituted of little tendernesses, kindly looks, sweet laughter, gentle words, loving counsels; it must not be like a fierce blaze of unnatural excitement, which is easily quenched, but like the serene, chastened light which burns as well in the dry east wind as in the stillest atmosphere. Let each bear the other's burden the while—let each cultivate the other's confidence, which is a gift capable of increase and improvement—and soon it will be found that kindliness will spring up on every side, displacing constitutional unsuitability, want of mutual knowledge, even as we have seen sweet violets and primroses dispelling the gloom of the gray sea-rocks.

The Coming Year.—The year 1861 will be like the 660th Olympiad. There will be an annular eclipse of the sun on the 11th of January, another on the 7th of July, and a total eclipse on the 31st of December. There will also be a partial eclipse of the moon on the 17th of December.

To do justly, love mercy and walk humbly with God; to be diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord; to be afraid of a little sin, thankful for a little mercy, and mindful for a little duty, are nine excellent properties of true piety.

Twelve thousand eight hundred miles of submarine telegraph have been laid in various parts of the world, only 1200 of which are in working order.

Better is the poor that walketh in his uprightness, than he that is perverse in his ways though he be rich.

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

DECEMBER 26, 1860.

APPOINTMENTS OF GEORGIA CONFERENCE

AUGUSTA DISTRICT.—Joshua Lewis, P E; Augusta, St John, W H Potter; Asbury mission, D S Means; St James, W F Cook; Trinity mission, to be supplied; Savannah, Trinity, Jno J Caldwell; Wesley chapel, W S Baker; Andrew Chapel, Jas T Lowe; Isle of Hope, Chas M Smith; Springfield, Francis D Dayles; Sylvania, T S L Harwell; Bethel and colored mission, Miles W Arnold, Ed Williamson; Waynesboro', R B Lester, one to be supplied; Burke colored mission, David W Calhoun, one to be supplied; Louisville and colored mission, John W McGehee, N D Mimeliouse; Columbia, James M Austin, one to be supplied; Richmond and colored mission, Robert A Comer, H D Murphy; Warrenton, Wm A Florence; Glassrock mission, Samuel A Clark.

ATHENS DIST.—James O A Clarke, P E; Athens, Joseph S Key; Athens colored mission, Cicero A Mitchell; Watkinsville and colored mission, P F Reynolds, John R Parker; Factory mission, Henry Crawford; Madison, William M Crumbly; Morgan and colored mission, James Jones, M H Hubbard; Greensboro', Albert Gray; Lexington and colored mission, Tyre H Harben, W C Lankford; Washington, John T Norris; Wilkes and colored mission, James M Dickey, one to be supplied; Broad River mission, W T Norman; Lincolnton, Goodman Hughes, one to be supplied; Elberton and colored mission, John H Grogan, R H Murrah; Madison Female College, James L Pierce, President; Wm R Foote, Professor.

DAHLONEGA DIST.—Robert W Bigham, P E; Dahlonega, A M Thigpen; Dahlonega circuit, Samford Leek; Cumming, Robert A Senie; Clarkesville, John A Reynolds; Hallsville and Morganton mission, M H Huntly, T P Neese; Hiwassee mission, to be supplied; Ellijay, Britton Sanders; Canton, M F Maltby, John M Lowrey; Gainesville, James Gillian, Wesley Lane; Carnesville, Joseph Chambers; Clayton mission, David F Starr.

ROME DIST.—J W Glenn, P E; Rome and colored mission, W Hinton, one to be supplied; Cave Spring, Joseph J Singleton; Etowah, Robt H Johnes; Cedar Town, Geo G Smith; Cassville, Daniel J Myrick; Eatonton mission, Geo L W Anthony; Calhoun, C A Crowell, M G Jenkins; Spring Place, Wm Brewer; Dalton, John W Turner; Whitfield, Benj F Breedlove; La Fayette, John W Brady; Ringgold, H H Porter; Summerville, Jas D Anthony; Crawville Female College; B Arbagast, President.

ATLANTA DIST.—John W Yarbrough, P E; Atlanta, Wesley chapel, W J Scott, A Means, superintendent; Atlanta colored mission, L J Darley; Atlanta, Trinity, John C Simmons; Atlanta, city mission, James H Payne; Fulton, Richard J Harrold, Decatur, John H Mashburn; Covington, Thomas F Pierce; Oxford, Wm H Evans, Geo W Yarbrough; Lawrenceville, W W Odlin, Jas L Fowler; Monroe, John E Sentell; Marietta, Alex Graham; Alpharetta, Daniel Kelsey; Cowler Spring, Andrew Heavons; Dallas mission, John M Bright; Emory College, W J Parks, Agent.

LAGRANGE DIST.—J Blakely Smith, P E; LaGrange, Caleb W Key; Troup, E F Birch, one to be supplied; West Point, Wm A Simmons; Greenville, Lewis L Ledbetter; Coweta, Jno M Marshall; Newnan, Chas A Follwood; Franklin, W H C Cone; Houston, John J Morgan; Carrollton circuit, James L Lape, one to be supplied; Palmetto, Wm M D Bond; Campbellton, Thos J Embry; Sandtown mission, James T Ainsworth; Haralson mission, Moses A Leek; LaGrange Female College, G J Pearce, President. Missionary to China, Young J Allen.

GRIFFIN DIST.—Walter R Branham, P E; Griffin and colored charge, Wesley P Arnold; Zebulon, John W Knight; Fayetteville, Richard H Waters; Jonesboro, Peter M Ryburn; Thomaston, Walter Knox, Thos H Stewart, superintendent; Upson, James Hairis; Barnesville, Lemuel G R Wiggins; Jackson, Jno W Reynolds; Monticello and colored mission, M A Chantz, W F Holland; McDonough, Robert W Lovett; Griffin Female College, W A Rogers, President. Chaplain U S Navy, Charles W Thomas.

MACON DIST.—James E Evans, P E; Macon, Vineville and colored mission, Alfred T Munn, James H Reese; City mission, Wesley P Prestger; Milledgeville and Bethel, H J Adams; Sparta, A G Haygood; Hancock, Thomas T Christian; Colored mission, W W Tidwell; Eatonton, Alex M Wynn; Putnam and colored mission, Wm G Allen, John Murphy; Clinton and colored mission, John B Mellichpe, T A Pharr; Perry, John W Talley; Fort Valley, George C Clarke; Colored mission, one to be supplied; Everett mission, one to be supplied; Culloden, Wm J Colter; Culloden and Knoxville mission, Morgan Beilah; Forsyth, Geo G N MacDonell; Forsyth circuit, Robert W Dixon; Hawkinsville, Ed J Rentz; Wesleyan Female College, John M Bonnell, President; E N Fuster, Professor; Book, and Tract Agent, John W Burke; Southern Christian Advocate, E H Myers, Editor.

COLUMBUS DIST.—Chas R Jewett, P E; Columbus, St Luke, H H Parks; Columbus colored mission, W W Robinson; Girard and Pierce chapel, Thomas H Jordan; St Paul, Ammons Wright; Factory mission, Isaac N Craven; Talbotton, Geo H Patillo; Hamilton, John H Harris; Whiteville, Jackson Rush; Ellaville, B O Driscoll; Buena Vista, Ed A W McGehee, Y F Tignor, supernumerary; Butler, A J Dean, G C Andrews; Cusseta and colored mission, R H Rogers, one to be supplied; Centreville, Leonard Rush; Harris, Columbus W Howard; Bellevue, Henry P Pittifford; Muscogee, James M Armstrong, M H White, superintendent; Agent to Sunday Schools, Lovick Pierce.

AMERICUS DIST.—Joseph T Tucker, P E; Americus and colored mission, E W Speer, W W Stewart; Sumter, David Hallock, Jesse Richardson; Dawson, Wiley B Parks; Fort Gaines, James R Jackson; Randolph, James R Stewart; Cuthbert and Emmaus, Samuel Anthony; Lumpkin and Green Hill, Daniel H Fox; Stewart, W C H Perry, L R Redding; Weston, Robert H Jones; Chattahoochee mission, Wm H Wardlaw; Starkville mission, John R Wardlaw; Talbot, John H Bissell; Kalebo, Thomas Ogletliorpe and Traveler's Rest, J P Duncan; Georgetown and colored mission, E N Roland; Andrew Female College, Morgan Calloway, President.

SANDERSVILLE DIST.—Lewis B Payne, P E; Sandersville, W S Flynn; Wrasington and colored mission, P Q Allen; Irwinton, John F Berry; Jeffersonville, John Dudley, James Dunwoody; Dublin, Chas A Moore; Jacksonville and Pulaski mission, Josiah Hadley, R N Andrews; Bellsville, David R McWilliams, W F Conley, supernumerary; Mount Vernon mission, R N Cotter; Hineseville and colored mission, W M Watts; Darien, to be supplied; Ray in and Canoochee mission, Thos H Lamar; Reidsville, colored mission, to be supplied; Central, Amos M Parks transferred to Texas Conference.

APPOINTMENTS OF RIO GRANDE CONFERENCE.

SAN ANTONIO DIST.—J W De Vilbiss, P E; Alamo College and S A Female College, Jesse Boring; San Antonio, N H Boring; Medina, W W Whitley; Uvalde, J K Harper; Eagle Pass and Fort Clark, to be supplied; Kenerville, T M Price; Columbo, W R D Stockton; Pleasanton, J M Stringfield; Sutherland Spring, J S Gillett; Sandos Circuit, R Gillett; Colored Mission, R H Mangum.

BOERNE DIST.—Ivy H Cox, P E; Palme Female Institute, R H Belvin, Pres.; Gedral, J L Harper and Jesse Hord, superintendent; Helena, E Y Seale; Canton, J W Cody; Kickapoo Mission, Thos. Myers; St Mary's, W O Shively; Corpus Christi, H G Horton; Nueces Bay, J T Gillett; Oakville, T F Rainey; Ingleside and Padre Island, F F Cocke; Brownsville and Rio Grande City, Q B Adams.

NEW BRAUNFELS DIST.—F Vordenhimen, P E; San Antonio, F Vordenhimen; New Braunfels, J A Schaper; Llano, Aug Engel; New Fountain, Gustavus Elly; Fredericksburg, J J F Brunow; Yorktown and Gohlad, Aug Talupke; R P Thompson, Agent for the American Bible Society in Texas.

WEEKLY SUMMARY OF NEWS.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

METHODIST.

CONFIRMATIONS.—Rev. E Stanley, of the Methodist Episcopal church, stated at the Virginia Conference, that "he had confirmed a number of persons;" and, on inquiry, explained that "he followed the usual mode of confirmation, by the imposition of hands, after baptism." Some ministers objected to the practice, but no action was taken.

ALABAMA.—Bishop Paine of the Methodist church, said in one of the recent conferences, that "Alabama is Virginia revised, corrected and beautified."

The Rev. Dr. Rosser, at the recent session of the Methodist Episcopal Virginia Conference, resigned his position as editor of the Richmond Christian Advocate.

It is stated that the South Carolina Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, has some forty or fifty missions among the colored people, principally in the low country. Against this missionary work there was at first considerable opposition; but now the planters encourage and aid the missionary, by their counsel and authority.

PRESBYTERIAN.

SALE OF SPIRITS PROHIBITED.—A Presbytery of the United Presbyterian church adopted the following action: "Whereas, we learn from various sources that there are some members of the U. P. church, within the bounds of this Presbytery, who are engaged in the sale of intoxicating liquors as a common beverage; and whereas, in the judgment of this Presbytery, such a practice is contrary to the letter and spirit of the gospel: Therefore, Resolved, 1st. That the sessions under whose inspection such members are, be directed to expostulate, in the spirit of brotherly love, to desist from such business. Resolved, 2ndly, That if these who are engaged in such business refuse to abstain it, the sessions be directed to suspend them from membership in the church."

The Rev. P. D Gurley, D D, of Washington City, has declined to accept the office of Corresponding Secretary of the Board of Education of the Presbyterian church to which he was lately elected.

PENNSYLVANIA.—In the state the Old School Presbyterians report 62,328 communicants, (though many of the congregations fight adjacent states;) the New School, 12,720.

PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE IN OHIO.—The three Old School Presbyterian Synods of Cincinnati, Ohio, and Indiana, have agreed to concentrate their energies upon one college, which they have located at Springfield. The people of that city have subscribed about thirty-five thousand dollars, which the Synod expect them to raise to fifty thousand; and the Synods resolve to raise two hundred thousand more to make the endowment complete. It is proposed to purchase the property of the Wittenberg College, located in that city.

BAPTIST.

BAPTIST CHRONOLOGY.—Rr. Sprague, in his Annals of the American Baptist Pulpit, gives the following as the date of the origin of the Baptist Church in the several States: Rhode Island, 1638. Massachusetts, 1663. New York, 1683. Maine, 1682. South Carolina, 1683. Pennsylvania, 1684. New Jersey, 1688. Delaware, 1703. Connecticut, 1705. Virginia, 1714. North Carolina, 1727. Maryland, 1742. New Hampshire, 1755. Georgia, 1757. Vermont, 1765. Tennessee, 1780. Kentucky, 1781. Ohio, 1790. Illinois, 1796. District of Columbia, 1802. Indiana, 1802. Missouri, 1807. Mississippi, 1807. Alabama, 1810. Louisiana, 1812. Michigan, 1822. Iowa, 1836. Wisconsin, 1837. Texas, 1840. Florida, 1842.

REVIVALS.—The Arkansas Baptist reports a revival at Bluff Woods church, 15 added. The Missouri Baptist reports revivals at Unity church, 13 added; Mt. Shiloh church, 24 received on baptism; Elm Grove church, 25. The Journal and Messenger reports a revival at Kalida, Ohio, 17 baptized.

PEW IN THE FREE PLACE.—The Second Baptist church, Hartford, which is now vacant, gives up the whole forenoon of the Lord's day to the session of the Sunday School, reserving the afternoon and evening for pulpit preaching. The Methodist Episcopal church of that place, though it has a pastor, has adopted the same custom.

SUNDAY SCHOOLS.—At the recent anniversary of the Southern Baptist Sunday School Union, Louisville, it was announced in the report of the Board of Managers, that at least a thousand schools have been organized as the result of its labors.

PIONEER CHURCH.—There is a Baptist church at Prattsville, Minnesota, fifty miles west of any Methodist minister in that State. So writes a correspondent of the N. Y. Examiner.

The Rev. L. H. Woolfolk has retired from the editorial department of the Baptist Standard, of Nashville, Tenn.

EPISCOPAL.

ANOTHER HIGH CHURCH SECTION.—The Union, the organ of the extreme High Church party in the Establishment, denounces the practice of clergymen of the Church of England entering into the holy estate of matrimony, and advises that when they thus show their contempt of "Catholic principles" they should not advertise the fact in the newspapers.

A NEW DOXOLOGY.—In St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Philadelphia, at the close of the exercises on Thanksgiving day, the organist struck up, and the congregation joined in singing, the national anthem, "The Star-Spangled Banner."

MISCELLANEOUS.

CANTON.—Rev. Mr. Turner, an English missionary in Canton, says that the facilities for propagating religious truth in that city are almost as great as can be desired. The preacher can proclaim the gospel to listening crowds in the open places, and every where finds those willing to converse upon the new doctrines. Hearers will come to the chapels, children can be collected into the schools, the hospitals are popular, and religious books are eagerly received.

FIVE HUNDRED "PILGRIM'S PROGRESS" FOR ITALY.—At a late meeting of the Committee of the American Tract society, in response to an application for Italy, a grant was made of three hundred copies of "Pilgrim's Progress" in Italian. A benevolent gentleman of the city of New York purchased two hundred additional copies, and they were all forwarded in the same ship. Italy is now an inviting field for the wide distribution of evangelical truth. It means are furnished, the society might do much in that country.

WALES.—Rev. Mr. Vean, of the English Episcopal Church, estimates the clear increase to the various orthodox religious bodies in the Principality, during the recent revival, at not less than 100,000, or about one-twentieth of the whole population, while the defections from profession are not greater than in ordinary times.

PROTESTANTISM AND ROMANISM IN CANADA.—In 1851 there were in Lower Canada 111,376 Protestants and 716,668 Roman Catholics; and in Upper Canada 754,429 Protestants and 487,261 Roman Catholics, making in all Protestants, 925,805; Catholics, 911,275; majority of Protestants, 14,530. Since the census was taken, the Protestant majority has largely increased.

MINISTERIAL STIPENDS.—The salaries of the Protestant clergy of Bohemia are variously stated at from $100 to $200 per annum.—only three or four obtaining the latter sum. It is stated that several widows of deceased Protestant professors are in a deplorable condition from poverty.

The Christian Union says, a few years ago there was but one Protestant or Evangelical church in Belgium. There are now between 30 or 40 such churches, and a population of at least 20,000 professed Protestants.

There are now seven daily prayer-meetings sustained in New York city. In all of these a good and earnest spirit prevails, and in nearly all, cases of conviction occur almost daily, and conversions are frequent.

A new religious sect has begun to develop itself in the northern part of Denmark; its believers claiming that there are five Gods in one, and calling themselves Pentamans.

A Protestant reading-room, well furnished with journals, pamphlets and books, in different languages, was opened on the 1st of November, in Paris.

DOMESTIC.

From the latest telegraphic dispatches to this city, we are in possession of the following intelligence:—

The Secession Movement.—The announcement of the actual secession of South Carolina, was received with great enthusiasm in Memphis (Tenn.), Augusta (Ga.), Mobile, New Orleans, and other leading southern cities. In Charleston, the telegraph informs us, the excitement of the people was unbounded. Processions, illuminations and speeches were the order of the day. Senator Toombs has telegraphed to the people of Georgia that there is no possible hope for compromise; that the Black Republicans regard any and all concessions; and he recommends Georgia to secede at once as the only hope of safety. Senator Crittenden's propositions to the Committee of Thirty-three were lost. Dispatches have been received in Washington stating that South Carolina was about to take possession of the forts in the neighbourhood of Charleston. The Cabinet, with several prominent Senators, convened in extra session on the 22d inst., and it was thought probable that a fleet would be dispatched forthwith to Charleston, in defence of the Forts.

President Buchanan has issued the following:—

A RECOMMENDATION TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.—Numerous appeals have been made to me by pious and patriotic associations and citizens, in view of the present distracted and dangerous condition of our country, to recommend that a day be set apart for humiliation, fasting and prayer throughout the Union. In compliance with their request and my own sense of duty, I designate Friday, the 14th day of January, 1861, for this purpose, and recommend that the people assemble on that day, according to their several forms of worship, to keep such a solemn fast. The Union of the States is the source of our unexampled prosperity and the only sure foundation for our future greatness. Let this be the day on which we will humble ourselves before Almighty God to remove from our hearts that false pride of opinion which would impel us to persevere in wrong for the sake of consistency, rather than yield a just submission to the misfortunes or weakness by which we are now surrounded. Let us with deep reverence discuss how to restore the friendship and good will which prevailed in former days among the people of the several States, and adopt all lawful means for the restoration of mutual confidence. Let our fervent prayers ascend to the throne that He would turn the hearts of the people of these States to each other, and preserve our Constitution and our Union, the work of their hands, for ages yet to come. An Omnipotent Providence may overrule existing evils for permanent good. He can make the wrath of man to praise Him, and the remainder of wrath He will restrain. Let me say to every individual, in whatever sphere of life he may be placed, to feel a personal responsibility to God and his country for keeping this day holy, and for contributing all in his power to rebuke our sinful and impending calamities.

The following we gather from our exchanges:

ALABAMA.

MORE BIRTHS.—We learn from the Atlanta Intelligencer that sixty boxes of tallies, for Alabama, passed through that city on the 10th inst. They are probably safe in Montgomery by this time.

MILITARY.—There are now seventy companies belonging to the volunteer corps of Alabama, created by the last Legislature. No company is admitted without having 11 men on its roll, which would make 770 men, but some let the companies have as many as 70 men.

KENTUCKY.

THE TALL MAN IN KENTUCKY.—John M. Fisher, of Hanesville, Caldwell county, is the tallest man in Kentucky. He stands seven feet eight inches, weighs two hundred and forty pounds, and is twenty-three years old.

The whole family of Rev. William Nast was poisoned, recently, at Covington, Ky., by eating peaches put up in self-sealing cans. Prompt medical assistance saved them lives.

The population of Kentucky according to the returns of the U. S. Marshal, is 1,150,000, which is an increase of 15 per cent. on the last ten years.

FLORIDA.

The Newnansville (Fla.) Dispatch states that fifty negroes, belonging to the estate of Jesse De Bault, of Columbia county, were recently sold at an average of over $1200 each.

We learn from the Pensacola Observer, that the lawyers in the middle and eastern portions of Florida have refused to institute suits upon claims from the north against merchants of that state.

During the session of the Florida Legislature a bill was passed chartering a bank to be established in Pensacola with a capital of $100,000.

GEORGIA.

THE COLORED POPULATION OF GEORGIA.—A bill has passed the Georgia Legislature, which provides that every free person of color who has not had the care of fourteen years may choose an owner and go into voluntary servitude for life; that parents may choose owners for their children when the latter are under fourteen years of age, and that all free persons of color found in that State after the first of May, 1862, who have taken no steps to select owners, shall be liable to sale or sold as a slave for life.

SAVANNAH STEAMSHIP LINE TO EUROPE.—The committee to whom the special message of his Excellency the Governor of Georgia, in relation to the establishment of a weekly line of steamships from the port of Savannah to some important commercial port in Europe, has been referred, profoundly impressed with the importance of the measure suggested by him in commercial independence as political freedom, reported favorably.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE PROCEEDINGS OF THE STATE CONVENTION.—The Convention met in Charleston on the 21st inst., pursuant to adjournment. Prayer was offered, beseeching Almighty God to unite the people of the south in the formation of a Southern Confederacy. A motion was made that a committee be appointed to invite the Governor, Secretary and Treasurer of the State to be present, which, however, was temporarily postponed. Mr. Maxwell Bryan, Chairman of the Committee, presented an address to the Southern States; a long and able paper, reviewing the injuries done South Carolina during her connection with the Union. The Convention refused to issue the address until its final adoption; ma le the special order of Saturday. Judge Warshow made a report by ordinance, amending the Constitution of the United South Carolina. Other important business was transacted, when the Convention went into secret session, excluding all but members.

SECESSION FROM WEST POINT.—The Charleston Courier records the return home of R. S. Earley, James Hamilton, and George N. Reynolds, Cadets from that State, from the U. S. military academy at West Point.

The Governor of South Carolina, has received a letter from the commander of the Baltimore National Volunteers, thirteen hundred strong, saying that the document has unanimously resolved to support with their lives, any States's rights in secession, and tendering their services in the event of coercion.

A new style of cockade is remarkable as appearance in Charleston. It is made of palmetto leaves, plaited with a border of blue ribbon. At the centre a pattern of scarlet rosette, with a steel button in the centre.

STRANGE OMEN.—On the 21st inst., (thanksgiving day) at Charleston, the American Sunday School Union unfurled a white banner bearing upon it the picture of a Palmetto tree, five stars and an open bible, and the inscriptions: "South Carolina dares resist oppression," and "In the name of our God we set up our banner."

ARKANSAS.

LEGISLATIVE.—On the 17th ult. Hon. E H English was unanimously elected Chief Justice of the Supreme bench, and H. F. Fairchild, Associate Justice. John L Stirman was elected Secretary of State. On the same day in the Senate, a resolution was introduced recommending the Constitution be so changed as to confer the election of Secretary of State, Auditor and Treasurer, upon the qualified voters of the State.

EARTHQUAKE.—On the night of the 24th ult., at 10 o'clock, a pretty severe shock of an earthquake was experienced in Helena and vicinity. It apparently came from the southeast and passed to the north west, and was preceded by a loud, rumbling noise.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE KANSAS FAMINE.—A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune writes from Atchison, Kansas, under dateof December 9: I reached this city yesterday morning. On landing at the levee from the railroad I first beheld the first objects to be seen were a long string of wagons, with numbers of gaunt and hungry oxen standing near. I was told they were from the interior, driven here to be loaded with the provisions sent for the relief of the people. I was immediately plied with questions to know how the people East were sustaining the effort made to relieve the destitution. I gave all the information of which I was possessed, and in return was told that the destitution had been underrated entirely. The Rev. Mr. Baldwin said that there were 50,000 who must be sustained for some months. Dr. Ayres, one of the most intelligent and well educated citizens of Linn county, said that at least 10,000 must be kept from starving for six months to come. These gentlemen I knew and have every confidence in. I walked up to the office where it is transacted the business of the relief. It was crowded with the men in charge of the teams, standing in the streets and on levee. As I came along, I counted twenty-three, and was told that at least fifty were in town. Such a scene! Great, stalwart men, gaunt, lean, hungry looking, weary, sad, tired and dispirited, goodly clad, and in all respects filling one with the conviction of suffering patiently borne and long repressed often, some of whom I recognized, and all of whom bore the unmistakable character of simply misfortune and independence combined to our Western Pioneers. To look upon these teams and read the sad tale of suffering within, told the story far more forcibly than my feeble words can.

POST OFFICE.—According to official data there were 28,586 offices in the United States on the 30th of June 1854. In 1858 the whole number was 28,498. The actual expenditures in the Post Office Department for the last year were nearly $14,000,000 dollars, and the actual revenue over $9,000,000 dollars.

CENSUS ITEMS.—The census shows that the annual increase in the population of the United States since 1790 is about three per cent. In 1715, the population of the colonies was 482,000, of whom 58,850 were negro slaves. The present population is about 30,000,000, of whom about 4,000,000 are negroes. Our public schools are attended by 4,000,000 of children; we have about $250,000,000, of which $50,000,000 are held by foreigners. It takes 7,00 paper mills and 2000 steam engines to supply our publishers and newspapers with printing paper at a cost of $37,000,000 per annum. The entire population of Massachusetts is 1,231,065, which shows a gain of 247,017 in ten years, and 99,158 in five years. Boston contains 177,902 inhabitants now against 160,586, in 1850. This does not include the outlying suburbs of Cambridge, Roxbury, Charlestown, and Chelsea, which would increase the total population to 250,000. The population of Kansas is 107,161, besides about 70,000 at Pike's Peak. The population of Georgia has increased 150,000 during the past ten years. It now numbers 1,070,377. The population of Wisconsin is ascertained to be 777,777, being an increase in ten years of 173,570. The population of Baltimore has increased more than 14,000 since 1850. The population of Ohio is 2,300,187, an increase of 377,858 in ten years.

A MIDDLE CONFEDERACY.—It is reported that a strong movement is progressing in the border States for the formation of a great Middle Confederacy, including the North-west, New Jersey and Pennsylvania on one side, with Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, Missouri and Kentucky on the other. Men high in position and influence favor the project.

CALIFORNIA CROPS.—A correspondent of the New York Times says that the census of California will not much exceed 600,000, where a year ago it was supposed that the State contained one-half million. The population of San Francisco, which has been set down at 80,000, will not much exceed 60,000. In Placerias county, the whole population is returned at 16,215, of which 9216 are foreigners, and of them 3669 Chinese. In Klamath every third man was a Chinese. The agricultural counties have the largest proportion of females. In some of them, the voters are to the white people as one in five, while in some of the mining counties more than one-half of the population are voters.

We observe from the Yale College Catalogue, just published, that there are forty three Southern students in that institution. Of these 10 are from Maryland; four in Delaware; Texas sends 5; Florida 3; Missouri 3; Kentucky 3; Mississippi 2; Louisiana 2; North Carolina 2; District of Columbia 2; and one each from Arkansas, Texas, Virginia and Georgia. This is but a fraction of the entire number of students, which is 613.

Arkansas and Texas have doubled their population within the last ten years. Statistics show that all the South-western States have made steady progress within the last decade.

CORN OIL.—It is said that Indian corn produces a clear fluid which burns without odor, without smoke and is inexpensive, affording a good light in an ordinary kerosene lamp, for half a cent an hour.

A FAMILY OVERTAKEN BY A PRAIRIE FIRE.—Randel Sweringen, a farmer, going from Muscatine county, Iowa, to Fort Dodge, Iowa, while crossing the prairie near the latter place, on the 2d inst., with his wife and four children in a wagon, was overtaken by a prairie fire, and all except the latter perished. The Nevada Advocate says: Without other warning than a moment's sensation of heat as felt through the cover of the wagon, in which they were all traveling in limited, security, they were overtaken by fire on the prairie. Before any measures of protection could be taken, the wagon cover was in flames from around the bedding and other inflammable material was on fire, and before Mr. Sweringen could make his way out of the wagon, through the flames, his clothing was on fire. Unfortunately, as he fell out of the wagon, he was kicked by one of the horses, and for a time, stunned, and lost ability to help the others. He revived in time to see his wife and all from the wagon burned to death, and to drag from the flames one of his children, already dead. His own clothing was burned entirely from his body, and he is badly burned, especially in the head, face and hands. He is at present sightless, helpless, wagon, oxen, and all are a charred mass but the skull; the other a charred mass in which was no trace of humanity left. One of the horses was burned to death in the harness; the other succeeded in freeing himself, but is badly burned.

The Pacific knitting company at Main street, Conn., has failed; have not only sunk the entire capital of $100,000, but, drawing heavily on the personal property of the shareholders.

In New York city the valuation of the personal property of residents is $163,636,675, upon which there is a tax of $2,454,167 50. The valuation of the personal property of non-residents is $15,912 to 2, upon which there is a tax of $238,268 02. Total $2,692,374 12.

STATISTICS OF GAS.—There are in the United States 181 gas companies, with an aggregate capital of $47,091,215; in the Provinces 23 companies, with a capital of $2,322,010, and in Cuba, Mexico and South America 10 companies, with a capital of $6,500,000; in all 214 companies and an aggregate capital of $56,223,225.

Full of hope and happiness a young couple were married on the Fourth, at Burlington, Ill., and started at once for their destination in Minnesota. On stepping on board the Steamer Lacrosse, the bride groom's foot slipped, and falling into the river he was drowned.

Metz Meyer, a German brewer, leaning over a large vat of lager beer on Sunday, was suffocated by inhaling carbonic acid gass from the mixture.

Margaret Price, an emancipated negress, after ten years trial of freedom, applied for the privilege of again becoming a slave, at Richmond Circuit Court, and chose her master.

It is expected that Chicago will receive 20,000,000 bushels of corn of the crop of 1860.

Mr Van Buren met with a shocking accident at Gateville, N. J., on the 21st ult., his horse becoming frightened at the train, he was thrown on the track, caught by the engine, and dragged three hundred yards, his feet, both cut off, and his head completely scalped.

General Hunting, who has written for publication a letter on the present crisis and the right of secession. The Generals, of course, with the South in prefix. In reply to the inquiries of former companions in arms and others, he announces that he will be one of many to carry a musket or saber in defense of the first seceding State against which coercion shall be attempted. General Hemmingsen also pledges the services of his stepson, John M. Berrien Pughelly, of Bell county, Tex., now nineteen years old, and at present a member of a Northern Military Institute—in the same cause.

CLOSED DEPARTMENTS.—It is estimated that at least thirty thousand free negroes, now in South Carolina, Virginia and North Carolina, will be sent North within a short time. Other Southern States, it is thought, will pursue the same policy.

SURVIVORS OF THE REVOLUTION.—A late letter from the United States Commissioner of Pensions says that there are now but eighty-nine survivors of the army of the Revolution whose names are placed upon the rolls for pensions.

WILLIS RETURNING.—It is stated, as a singular fact, that for the first time in twenty years wolves are now showing themselves in the Adirondack region, Mr. Pierson to the contrary notwithstanding.

SINGULAR.—Miss Bradshaw, resident of Warren, R. I., has been deprived of sight and the power to articulate a single word for the last fifty-five years. About three weeks ago she recollected it, without any exertion on her part, and began to converse, and now holds a conversation with all who visit her. Miss Donshaw is now 74 years old, and became dumb when she was twenty years of age.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD.—The Memphis Appeal states that Dr. Peebles has just received letters from a French banker who has entered into a contract for the completion of this enterprise, on the part of an association of capitalists and contractors of Paris, the ratification of which was to be completed at fixed dates—a step only away of the sanction of an absent potentate daily expected. Jobs will be let to Americans, and from 30 to 50 thousand.

LIBRARY OF YALE COLLEGE.—In 1790, Yale library contained only 10 volumes; in 1800, 1,000; in 1810, 3,000; and in 1850, 30,000. Adding to this last number, the Linonian, the Brothers, the Law and the Medical libraries, in the same building, make a total of 57,000 volumes under the care of the College. There are also about 7,000 unbound pamphlets. The oldest printed book in the collection is a copy of the tracts of St. Augustine, printed in Zurich in 1497.

THE TORONTO FUGITIVE SLAVE CASE.—The Court of Queen's Bench decision in the extradition case of the fugitive slave Jones, alias Anderson, was rendered on the 15th inst., in favor of giving up the prisoner to the United States authorities, one of the Judges dissenting. An appeal has been made. The prisoner is strongly guarded. No attempt at rescue was made, but much excitement prevails.

NEW NORTH AMERICA CONFEDERACY.—It is said, on the authority of the Court journal, that the Duke of Newcastle, since his return to England from this country, has devoted considerable attention to a plan for consolidating the North American colonies into one confederation.

A passenger car on the Beaver Meadow (Pa.) Railroad train was precipitated into the Lehigh river on 24th inst. Four of the passengers and the conductor of the train were drowned. The car contained twenty-eight persons. The accident was caused by the breaking of a rail, and occurred near Bear Creek Dam, where the water is about fifteen feet deep. The rescued passengers were saved by breaking through the top of the car before it sank.

Captain Montgomery, the commander of the Kansas outlaws, is a native of Kentucky, and a Campbellite preacher.

The Washington Monument received $837,56 contributed at the polls in San Francisco on election day.

The individual council of the Choctaw Indians have passed an ordinance to purchase 65,000 bushels of corn for the relief of each of their people as are suffering by reason of the severe drought of last summer.

The imports at Boston, in November, were $2,568,430; exports, $1,245,235.

The Memphis jail is now doing a pretty brisk business, there being 62 on the chain-gang, 60 State prisoners, and 7 runaways—making 135 in all!

FOREIGN NEWS.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. Dallas, the American Minister, and Mrs. Dallas, have been on a visit to Windsor Castle as guests of Queen Victoria. The event was regarded as a conference, knowledge of the hospitality extended to the Prince of Wales, at Washington, and the enthusiastic reception which was accorded to him throughout the United States. During the stay of Mr. Dallas, at the castle, Lords Palmerston and John Russell were likewise guests of Her Majesty.

The total expenses, so far, of the English expedition to China, according to parliamentary returns, are £4,324,128, or $17,-296,512.

The Ragged School children of London number about 25,000.

FRANCE.

By the late French reports we learn that the population in the French colonies is as follows: Martinique, 137,414; Guadeloupe and its dependencies, 141,902; French Guiana, 17,143; Reunion, 164,141 (inclusive of 74,175 immigrants from various countries); Senegal and its dependencies, 20,804; French establishments in India, 24,302; Mayotte, 24,307; Saint Pierre and Miquelon, 21,000. These numbers are exclusive of the civil and military functionaries and their families, the garrisons, aborigines, foreign immigrants (with the exception of La Reunion) and floating population.

The French Government is about to bring into France, for interment, the remains of Empress Maria Louisa. The remains of the Duke of Reichstadt will then be the only ones of the Imperial family outside France, and will no doubt be transported, in their turn, to the Imperial vaults in Paris.

RUSSIA AND AUSTRIA.

The Czar of Russia entertained all sorts by a decree to take effect January first 1861.

At last accounts it was reported that the Emperor of Austria was about to annul the recently concluded Concordat with Rome. The crisis in the Ministry of Austria is passed. It was reported in political circles that the Austrian cabinet at Vienna had discussed the expediency of declaring martial law throughout Hungary.

CHINA.

PIRACY IN THE CHINA SEAS.—The Patriot contains the following communication has been received by the French Consul at Shanghai from the priest in the District of Daimer, near the mouth of the river Yangtzee, to the effect that an American bark had been chased by pirates, was supposed to have been captured, and all the crew murdered excepting one man, who was lying at the above place badly wounded; five bodies had been found and buried. The name of the bark is not given.

THE WAR.—The city of Pekin was surrendered to the Allies on the 13th of October. A new rebellion had broken out at Shanghai. Foreign office telegrams say that the Allied forces had taken possession of the city of Pekin. The Emperor's summer palace was sacked of immense spoils. The Emperor himself had fled to Tartary.

ITALY.

PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.—The Paris Patrie, of the 27th, has the following important dispatch from Turin:—"The greatest activity reigns in the arsenals, and preparations for the war are made all over Italy. One hundred and ten regiments of infantry will in succession be organized. The Neapolitan officers will be incorporated in the regiments now under formation. By means of those forces and other troops the Italian army will be able to muster 300,000 men on the field in May next. War is then looked upon as unavoidable at that time if the progressive party triumphs, which cannot be doubted if we consider the state of the public mind." This party being in a majority in the next Parliament is, it is said, going to propose to the Assembly the proclamation of his Majesty Victor Emmanuel, now King of Sardinia, as King of Italy, and to declare that Venetia forms a part of the provinces of the Italian Kingdom. This declaration being once made, will be sustained by the force of arms.

MISCELLANEOUS.

THE JAPANESE EMBASSY.—The United States steam frigate Niagara, with the Japanese Embassy on board, arrived at Britannia, on the 30th September, en route for Japan, having made the passage from London, a distance of 8,000 miles, in forty-six days, without stopping.

The Prussian Government says that four hundred persons have died in Southern Russia, and Kieva from the puncture of a description of poisonous fly, which made its way from Asia.

Baron Alphonse Von Rothschild has recently been named Prussian Consul General at Paris. This is the first time that the Prussian Government has ever appointed a Jew to a similar office.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Reynolds' life of Calhoun is being rapidly put through the press. The author, a Carolinian by birth and familiar with Calhoun, Hayne, McDuffie and the great men who clustered around the central sun of the Palmetto State, has spent several years in preparing this work for publication. It is to be one volume of Randall's life of Jefferson.

A new edition of "Hours with Mystics," by Robert A Vaughan, has just been published in London. The young author died soon after the issue of the first edition. The revision of this new edition devolved on his father, Dr. Robert Vaughan, the editor of the British Quarterly Review. The work is advertised for reprint by Messrs. Blanchard, of Philadelphia, in connection with "Essays, Reviews, and Memoirs" of the authors.

"History of Italy from the Earliest Time to the Period of its Decline" is about to be brought out in England, under the best auspices. The translation is executed by the Rev. R. S. Davis, with the selections and latest corrections of the author, and the co-operation of Dr. Schmitz, of Edinburgh, by whom an Introduction will be prepared to Volume I., which is to appear in London during the current month, and will be reprinted in this country by Messrs. Appleton & Co.

Auguste Bibli[illegible] has sent the proof sheets of his new Life of Bacon to Messrs. Tecknor & Fields, who will publish it here on the same day it appears in London.

Sir Archibald Alison is severely criticized in the last number of Frazer's Magazine for his gross plagiarisms from—Adam Smith, Dr. Arnold and other writers.

COMMERCIAL.

We condense the following statement from the New Orleans Price Current of the 22d inst:—

The week opened with quite an

THE NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Children's Column.

THE DYING PENNY.—A CHRISTMAS STORY.

It was Christmas eve, and the snow lay deep in the streets of Seeberg, a small mining town in Germany; but the neighboring peasants came down from their mountain homes, and sought to forget the rigor of the season in innocent festivity. Family groups assembled together, the cheerful song and of childish merriment resounds from every humble house, and preparations are being made for a general illumination.

Veronica Madel had, for some time past, supported her blind father and a little brother by lace-making. Once they had known better days. The father had been a slater, an industrious man, but had lost his eyesight from the effects of a conflagration, which he had bravely helped to extinguish. His wife did not long survive this calamity, but died, partly of grief, partly of over-exertion, committing her blind husband and her infant boy to the care of her daughter Veronica, herself still a child.

Veronica's might, however, had been prematurely ripened by the care and sorrow which had so early fallen to her lot; and she well fulfilled the charge committed to her by her dying parent.

On this Christmas eve of which we speak, the young girl had been seated before her lace-pillow, working without intermission from early morning till night closed in; then, poor child, she was forced to pause in her labors, for she could not afford a light. She made, however, a good fire in the stove to warm her blind father; and having placed him in his easy-chair close by its side, she gathered to her little brother's entreaties that she would take him out to see the illuminations.

The two children accordingly set forth together. Already the whole town was astir. Miners, in their characteristic costume, marched along in groups, with bands of music preceding them; and ever and anon they paused before the door of some wealthy citizen, and caroled forth their Christmas greetings. Then the door of the house so honored might be seen to open, and the master himself would generally step forth and reward the leader of the serenade by presenting to him some small gratuity. Children, following the example of their elders, wandered also in little bands from door to door, singing their Christmas carols; and seldom were the young singers dismissed without some trifling present, accompanied by a kindly word.

As Veronica passed on her way, holding her little brother by the hand, and gazing on these varied groups, a new thought suggested itself to the mind: "Why should she not seek to win some trifling Christmas gifts for her poor blind father?"

Timidly, and with a beating heart, the poor child bent her steps toward a part of the town where she was but little known. The character she was about to play was very new to her; and her heart well-nigh failed her when it came to the point. But love to her father nerved her to the task; and, drawing her hood closely around her, she stepped close under the window of a house of lowly aspect, and sang, in a very clear, though subdued tone the following verse:—

"Cheer up, ye miners bold,
Nor let your courage flag!
For earth her wealth untold
Yields to your patient toil;
Then joyous dig beneath the soil,
And still be your gathering-cry,
Cheer up, brave hearts, cheer up!"

Veronica's voice was tremulous with fear, when she began these simple lines; but she gained courage as she proceeded, and she repeated the burden of the song with spirit and energy. She then paused, and anxiously awaited the result of her efforts. Two or three minutes elapsed: the time seemed long to poor Veronica; she felt humiliated and confused, and was about to withdraw: but at last the door turned on its hinges, and a woman came out and placed in Veronica's trembling hands a small cake and a two-penny piece.

The poor child could scarcely contain herself for joy. "Oh, my dear little George!" she exclaimed, "see what a happy beginning I have made. You shall have the sugar-plum; but the cake and money are for father, that he too may be able to keep his Christmas feast."

The night was far advanced; and Veronica thought she would make but one trial more before she turned her steps homeward. This time she determined on trying her chance at the door of a rich man, an inspector of some mines.

Clear and firm her young voice now rose through the still midnight air; and, when her song ceased, the window on the first floor of the house opened, and an arm was stretched out, holding a slender pair of tongs by means of which a piece of money was deposited in Veronica's open hand. But scarcely had she received the Christmas gift ere a cry of pain escaped her lips, a cry which was responded to by a laugh of insulting mockery from the heartless wretch who was still standing in the open window. The penny which he had handed to the poor child had been drawn red hot from the fire. Veronica hastily flung the gift, and with many a bitter tear,

When Veronica returned to [illegible] him of the gifts she had brought, it cost the poor girl a severe struggle to conceal her sufferings and speak to the blind man in cheerful tones. He, unconscious of the pain she was enduring, asked her to sing for him once more before she retired to rest; and then he kissed his darling, and bestowed on her his Christmas blessing: but Veronica's hand pained her much, and she went to bed with a heavy heart.

In the mountain districts of Germany, the schools are very large, one master not unfrequently having charge of two hundred children. Under these circumstances, he can scarcely be expected to have any particular acquaintance with the disposition or tastes of each individual scholar, unless some casual occurrence chances it to bring to his notice.

"Is not your hand healed yet?" one day inquired M. Rossel, the parish schoolmaster, addressing his pupil Veronica Madel.

Veronica unfastened the bandage, which she dally tied on as well as she could with her left hand; and the worthy schoolmaster, seeing the inflamed state of the wound, became very indignant when he learned how it had been produced.

"Shameful," he exclaimed, "thus to injure a child singing her Christmas carol! Will you let me bear your song, my little maid? I love music well myself. You know I am the parish precentor, as well as the schoolmaster?"

Veronica timidly obeyed. The schoolmaster was to her a formidable auditor; but the good man's kindness soon set her at ease; and she sang with so much expression that M. Rossel was not only surprised, but deeply moved.

"Who taught you to sing thus, my child?" he inquired, when the young songstress paused.

"No one," she replied; "my father is blind, he often finds the day very long, and I sing to him to amuse him. It is almost the greatest pleasure he has, and I am so glad of that, for we are poor, and he cannot afford himself many other pleasures."

"But the melody itself, and the method—where did you learn all that?" inquired the schoolmaster.

Veronica looked perplexed, but, after a moment's reflection, replied: "I have often heard miners sing that air."

"My child," said M. Rossel to the little girl, "I see how God often overrules the wickedness of man for his own wise purposes. The burn you received on your hand has caused you much suffering, and has prevented your working at your lace to earn money for your father; but if it had not been for this accident, I should have never noticed your voice, which will, I hope, prove to you a mine of wealth, and enable you to procure more comforts for him than if you had been working night and day at your pillow."

Veronica did not well understand the good man's meaning, but she felt grateful for his kindness, and anxious to do her best to please him. From that day forward M. Rossel gave her regular instruction in the art of singing whilst, at the same time, he contrived to interest several benevolent people in the fate of this deserving family; so that the blind man's wants were fully supplied, and his little daughter was thus enabled to pursue her studies with a cheerful heart.

Twelve years passed away. It was a fine autumn evening, and the wealthier inhabitants of Seeberg might be seen in full toilet, flocking to the town hall. An event-ful in this somewhat secluded region, has set the whole town astir. The first singer of the capital, one who enjoys a European celebrity, is about to give a concert, in conjunction with her brother, for the benefit of the poor of Seeberg.

At the entrance of the hall might be seen the old schoolmaster and precenter, M. Rossel, who was filling the office of cashier on the occasion. His eyes beamed with delight as the money accumulated on the desk; and when he recognized an acquaintance amongst the numerous arrivals, it was with no small pride that the good man produced a gold snuff box, and, offering his friend a pinch of true Virginian, at the same time whispered in his ear, "This is a gift from a grateful pupil. See! it is engraved upon the lid; and when it was given to me, it was full of gold pieces. And look at this, too," he added, drawing a handsome repeater from his fob; "this, too, is the gift of my former pupil."

"You are celebrating your triumph to-night, M. Rossel," observed one of the new-comers.

"Yes, it is a day of triumph for me and for the town of Seeberg, too," rejoined the school-master, "for she was born amongst us here, and I was her first teacher."

At last all the company had arrived, the hall was thronged to the door, and at the appointed hour, Veronica Madel appeared upon the platform, accompanied by her youthful brother, and with her blind father leaning on her arm. A burst of enthusiastic plaudits greeted the young cantatrice as she gracefully courtesied to the assemblage. A band of mountain musicians supported their parts admirably, and exerted to the utmost to do honor to their countrywoman. George Madel accompanied his sister on the violin, to the admiration of all present, and Veronica herself sang as she had seldom been heard to sing before; her voice reached every heart and charmed every ear.

All the pieces named in the programme had been performed, a moment's pause ensued, and, after repeated acclamations, the assemblage was about to disperse, when, suddenly, young Madel touched his violin: A familiar air arrested every ear, and Veronica, with a voice as pure and clear as in her childish days, commenced the verse so well-known to all the miners of Seeberg—the same she had sung on that eventful Christmas eve. At this moment the whole of the assemblage present started to their feet as one man, the band of musicians laid down their instruments, and every voice joined in the chorus:

"Cheer up, brave hearts, cheer up!"

The celebrated cantatrice was, for a moment, forgotten; and Veronica Madel was only remembered as the young mountain peasant, the dutiful daughter, the loving sister, the obedient pupil. The good old schoolmaster's oblivions of his dignity, rushed to the platform, and, with tears in his eyes, folded to his heart the pupil who had so far surpassed his utmost expectations. Veronica, turning toward the assemblage, with a simple grace and humility of manner which touched every heart, owned that to this good old man, under God, she owed all her success.

The very worthy citizens of Seeberg had prepared a banquet in honor of the young cantatrice, but, during the interval which elapsed between the concert and the banquet, M. Rossel drew his former pupil aside, and speaking to her in the familiar tone of early days, he said, "Will you come with me, my good Veronica, for one half hour? This money you have intrusted to my care is weighing down my pocket. I should like to distribute some of it this evening, and to dispense the remainder of the sum in safety at my house."

Veronica, though somewhat wearied after the excitement and excitement of the day, could not begin to refuse her old master's request, and committing her father to George's care, set forth, under the escort of the very kind-hearted schoolmaster. The darkening shades of evening prevented the young singer from distinguishing surrounding objects; and she allowed Rossel to guide her as he pleased, unconscious whither he was leading her.

"I should like you," observed the old man, "to see some, at least, of those on whom your bounty is to be bestowed. On the ground floor of the house we have now reached, we shall find a family in very deep distress."

Entering a dark passage, the precentor, followed by Veronica, lifted a latch, and passed into a spacious, but gloomy apartment, lighted by a single candle, and offering a striking contrast to the brilliant concert hall they had just quitted. A pale, careworn woman, miserably clad, was pacing the room, vainly striving to lull her infant to rest. Two other children, about three or four years of age, lay sleeping on a tattered mattress in one corner of the room; whilst on a pallet, near the stove, lay a sick man, supported by straw pillows. The two strangers were received by the unhappy wife and mother, with that cold indifference which is so frequently the close companion of despair.

"Is your husband asleep?" inquired M. Rossel.

"Asleep! oh, no!" replied the woman. "I know not what will become of us!"

The schoolmaster then approached the sick man's bed, and addressing him kindly, said: "How are you to-day, Kunkel?"

"Just as I am always," replied the sufferer; "and so long as I feel that piece of money tramping in my throat, I shall never get any better."

"Cannot you dismiss the delusion?" interrupted Rossel. "The doctor and I have told you a hundred times that that burning sensation in your throat is a natural result of your disease and what is the use of indulging a fancy which only aggravates your malady?"

"I ought to know what I feel better than either you or the doctor can tell it to me," rejoined the sick man rather impatiently; "and I know that I feel one hard, burning spot in my throat, just as though I had tried to swallow a piece of red hot copper. No water can cool that spot; it is always the same, always burning."

Veronica's thoughts reverted to the suffering she had experienced when her hand was burned, and the pity for the poor man redoubled.

"Well, Kunkel," replied the schoolmaster, "I can only repeat what I have said before; this is all a figment of your own imagination. How in the world could a piece of burning money find its way into the centre of your throat?"

"Oh, I know it! I know it well!" exclaimed the sick man. "It was last Christmas eve that I felt for the first time that burning spot."

"You felt it on that evening because the ulceration of your throat had just become more acute and widely spread."

"Oh no! no! there was another reason than that," groaned the unhappy man. "It was on a Christmas Eve, twelve years ago—stop! do you hear that cry under the window? It was just such a cry as that the poor child gave as when I rewarded her Christmas carol by dropping a piece of burning money into her hands. Oh, I deserve my sufferings richly, I too well know!"

As Veronica heard these words a cry of dismay burst from her lips. It seemed as if the retributive justice of God had fallen upon this unhappy man before her very eyes. It was to her a solemn and overpowering emotion, and the young singer covered her face with her hands and burst into tears.

The old schoolmaster, deeply moved, turned toward Veronica.

"Kunkel," said the schoolmaster, in a tone of deep solemnity, "here is the very hand which, twelve years ago, you were so cruel as to burn—this hand is now to be held out to you in token of forgiveness: and see! on its trace remains of the wound you then inflicted; and no wonkind thought harbors in the bosom of her who has now come to minister your wants."

The sick man raised his head, and looked at Veronica. "No! the lady cannot be she whom I so cruelly injured twelve years ago. You are mocking me, M. Rossel."

"Believe me, Kunkel, what I have told you is true. Through God's goodness that burning penny has turned to a mine of gold in the hand of Veronica Madel: and here," added he, laying a pile of crowns upon the table—"here is a share of her gain, which she has brought to you."

Kunkel, with an air of bewilderment, gazed alternately at Veronica, at his wife who stood weeping by his side, and at the money which lay upon the table. "I wish I could believe what you tell me," he exclaimed; "but it seems to me impossible. Do you remember, lady, the song that was sung beneath my window that Christmas eve? That song, and the cry of anguish which followed it, still rings in my ears. If you can repeat it to me, now, I shall believe that what M. Rossel tells me is indeed the truth."

Veronica, with a voice tremulous from emotion, sung the well-known miner's song; and, as she sung, the little infant's cry was hushed, the broken-hearted mother listened in admiring silence, and the sick man, folding his hands across his breast, and raising his eyes to heaven, exclaimed, "God be merciful to me a sinner!"

Veronica seated herself by his side, spoke to him of pardon and of peace, until, at length, a ray of hope beamed from the sufferer's eye. He stretched his weary limbs, as though seeking that repose which had long been denied to him, and then, with a gentle sigh, he fell asleep.

The schoolmaster, familiar by long experience with scenes of suffering and of death, quickly perceived that the vital spark had fled. He laid his hand upon the marble brow of the departed; and, repeating the burden of the miner's song, he said, turning to the weeping widow:

"Cheer up, brave hearts, cheer up."

"I trust, my poor friend, that your husband is at rest after his long struggle; and you and your children shall not be forsaken. Put your trust in the God of the fatherless and the widow, and to-morrow I will come again, and see what can be done for you."

Veronica Madel and her old instructor now quitted the house of sorrow; and it was with very full hearts that they repaired to the hospitable banquet which had been prepared for them by their fellow citizens.

THE INDIAN'S CONSECRATION.

Religion transforms character, and implants new tastes and desires in the renewed heart. Could the most eloquent preacher illustrate this better than a simple-hearted Indian in the following anecdote?

"I understand," said John Sunday, the converted Indian chief, to a congregation which he was called to address at Plymouth, England, in the year 1837, "that many of you are disappointed I have not brought my Indian dress with me. Perhaps if I had it on you would be afraid of me. Do you wish to know how I dressed when I was a Pagan Indian? I will tell you. My face was covered with red paint. I stuck feathers in my hair. I wore a blanket and leggings. I had silver ornaments on my breast, a rifle on my shoulder, a tomahawk and scalping-knife in my belt. That was my dress then. Now do you wish to know why I wear it no longer? You will find the cause in 2 Cor. v. 17: 'Therefore, if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new.' When I became a Christian, feathers and paint passed away. I gave my silver ornaments to the missionary cause. Scalping-knife 'shove away.' That's my tomahawk, now," said he, holding up all the same time a copy of the ten commandments in the Ojibwa language. "Blanket 'shove away.' 'Behold,' he exclaimed in a manner in which dignity and simplicity of character were combined, 'behold all things are become new.'"

REPENTANCE—THE LONGER DELAYED THE MORE DIFFICULT.

AN ALLEGORY BY ONE OF THE FATHERS.

A hermit was conducted by an angel into a wood, where he saw an old man cutting down boughs to make up a burden. When it was large, he tied it up and attempted to lift it on his shoulders and carry it away, but finding it very heavy, he laid it down again, cut more wood and heaped it on, and then tried again to carry it off. This he repeated several times, always adding something to the load, after trying in vain to raise it from the ground. In the meantime the hermit, astonished at the old man's folly, desired the angel to explain what this meant. "You behold," said he, "in this foolish old man, an exact resemblance of those who, being made sensible of the burden of their sins, resolve to repent, but soon grow weary, and instead of lessening their burden increase it every day. At each trial they find the task heavier than it was before, and so they put it off a little longer, in the vain hope that they will by and by be more able to accomplish it. Thus they go on adding to their burden, till it grows too heavy to be borne, and then in despair of God's mercy, and with their sins unrepented of, they lie down and die. Turn again, my son, and behold the end of the old man whom thou sawest heaping up a load of boughs. The hermit looked, and saw him in vain attempting to remove the pile, which was now accumulated far beyond his strength to raise. His feeble limbs tottered over their burden; the poor remains of his strength were fast ebbing away; the darkness of death was gathering around him; and after a convulsive and impotent attempt to lift the pile, he fell down and expired.

FORBEAR

Forbear, whene'er an unjust hand
Shall quickly flash thine eye,
And flush thy cheek with swift desire
To give some sharp reply.

Forbear! wrath only kindles wrath.
And stirs up passion's fire;
While answering softly mildly tends
To check the hitterest ire.

Forbear! though some well meaning friend,
Perchance with good intent,
Should rudely crush some sanguine hope,
Or brilliant plan prevent.

Forbear; their wisdom may be far
Superior to thine own;
They may have built such castles, too,
And seen them overthrown.

Forbear; when sickness claims thy care,
And murmuring accents prove,
Dwindling complaining, fearful tones,
Sad trials to thy love.

Forbear, then may'st not know how keen
The pain which sinks to rest
Relief in fevered wonder, and yet
Means not to be unkind.

Forbear, when childhood's petsy mirth
Disturbs thy throbbing brain;
Which, pressed with many anxious cares,
Seems bursting with its pain.

Forbear! Do not wound their hearts
Because this is oppressed.
By careless or impatient tones,
When they would be caressed!

Forbear; I know I will utter a pang,
And many a fervent prayer,
And mighty efforts, ere thou learn,
In all things to forbear.

A FEW FACTS ABOUT CELEBRATED MEN.

Some literary men make good men of business. According to Pope, the principal object of Shakespeare in cultivating literature was to secure his honest independence. He succeeded so well in the accomplishment of his purpose that, at a comparatively early age, he had realized a sufficient competency to enable him to retire to his native town of Stratford-upon-Avon. Chaucer was in early life a soldier, and afterwards a commissioner of customs, and inspector of woods and crown lands. Spencer was Secretary to the Lord Deputy of Ireland, and is said to have been shrewd and sagacious in the management of public affairs. Milton was secretary to the Council of State during the Commonwealth, and gave abundant evidence of his energy and usefulness in that office. Sir Isaac Newton was a most efficient Master of the Mint. Wordsworth was a distributor of stamps; and Sir Walter Scott was a clerk to the Court of Sessions—both uniting a genius for poetry with practical and practical habits as men of business. Ricardo was no less distinguished as a sagacious banker than a lucid expounder of principles of political economy. Grote, the most profound historian of Greece, is also a London banker. John Stuart Mill, not surpassed by any living thinker in profoundness of speculation, lately retired from the examiner's department in the East India Company, with the allowance of his colleagues for the rare ability with which he had conducted the business of the department. Alexander Murray, the distinguished linguist, learned to write by scribbling his letters on an old wood-card with the end of a burnt heather stem. Professor Moor when a young man, being too poor to purchase Newton's "Principia," borrowed the book and copied the whole of it with his own hand. William Cobbett made himself master of the English grammar when he was a private soldier on the pay of sixpence a day—The edge of his berth, or that of his guard-bed, was his seat to study by; a bit of board lying on his lap was his writing table, and the evening light of the fire his substitute for candle or oil. Even advanced age, in many interesting cases, has not proved fatal to literary success. Sir Henry Spelman was between the age of fifty and sixty when he began the study of science. Franklin was fifty before fully engaged in the researches in natural philosophy which have made his name immortal. Bancroft was thirty-five when he entered upon his literary career; and Alfieri was forty-six when he commenced the study of Greek. Dr. Arnold learned German at forty, for the sake of reading Niebuhr in the original. James Watt, at about the same age, while working at his trade of an instrument maker in Glasgow, made himself acquainted with the French, German, and Italian, in order to peruse the valuable works in those languages on mechanical philosophy. Handel was forty-eight before he published any of his great works. Nor are the examples of rare occurrence in which apparently natural defects, in early life, have been overcome by subsequent devotion to knowledge. Sir Isaac Newton, when at school, stood at the bottom of the lowermost form but one. Barrow the great English divine and mathematician, when a boy at the Charterhouse school, was notorious for his idleness and indifference to study. Adam Clarke, in his boyhood, was pronounced by his father to be a grievous dunce. Walter Dalzell, the celebrated critic, was a dunce, and while a student and dunce he would remain." Even Dean Swift made a disastrous failure at the University. Sheridan was presented by his mother to a tutor as an incorrigible dunce. Chatterton was returned on his mother's hands as "a fool," of whom nothing could be made. Wellington never gave any indications of talent until he was brought into the field of practical effort, and was described by his strong minded mother, who thought him little better than an idiot, as ill only to "be lead for powder."

A MONSTER PRESS.—The Scientific American thus describes a monster steam press, upon which Moses S. Beach, who has just retired from the New York Sun, did not work: "He is even now just completing the construction of a monster steam printing press, by which the sheets are cut from rolls, dampened, printed upon both sides, at the rate of forty thousand impressions an hour, folded up, counted and delivered from the machine, ready for the carrier, and the mail. This machine is as high as a two story country dwelling house, and it will, when finished, fill the expectations of its inventor are realized, constitute a most ordinary specimen of mechanical skill and ingenuity."

PIO NONO A PROTESTANT.—We could not indeed accept the fact on less authority than that of the sovereign pontiff himself. It is thus boldly and impressively announced in his last Allocution: "I protest, and will not cease to protest, in order to maintain entire the civil power enjoyed by the Roman Church." He who protests is unfortunately a Protestant: he who will not cease to protest is a Protestant of the most persistent and hillside stamp. We have his own word for it, therefore, that Pio Nono is a Protestant—a confirmed Protestant.

"THE TEMPER-DISEASE."—The Edinburgh Review says: "There are certain moments before dinner, when most men suffer what the late Dr. Marshall Hall called the temper disease: the amiable become suddenly unamiable, and the best of us snappish: the moral of the individual is entirely altered." The Review pronounces it unpardonable, that this state of things is owing to temporary changes in the blood, acting on the brain until rectified by fresh supplies of nutriment from the stomach.

EARLY IMPRESSIONS.—Bishop Paine of the Southern Methodist church, said at Alexandria: "Give him the children of a town for five years, and he would take the town."

Obituaries:

"Let me die the death of the Righteous."

MISS AUTALIA S. SHELTON died at the residence of her mother, in Morehouse parish, La., on the 25th Nov., 1860, aged 16 years, 3 months and 3 days. Her health had been for some months in rather a precarious condition. But none dreamed of her weeks since, when her last illness prostrated her, it would prove fatal. Her constitution from childhood was frail and very strong, and yet she was a favorite in that social circle in which she moved. She was not endowed with colossal powers calculated to arrest the notice of the mere passerby, or to gain the heart of an utter stranger. Her bluest constant seclusion from society may be accounted for when we consider that a father and sister had been called away only a few short months prior to her own gentle departure, and she preferred to shed her light around her own family hearth-stone, that she might cheer the declining age of a widowed mother. Miss S. was a christian. In the spring of 1858, while on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Walker, in Alabama, she enrolled herself with the M. E. Church; after returning to Louisiana, she joined the M. E. Church at Ilastrop, since which time she has been and only a zealous member of the fold of Christ, but a constant student of the Bible, which has always been her guide, and from whose directions she was never known willfully to depart. The hour of departure came, it is true, "like a thief in the night," when not even her physician was expecting it. But such as she are always ready to go, let the summons come when it may.

J. L. T.

ELIJAH MARIA BRADFORD, son of Abraham Bradford, died at Bell's Landing, Monroe county, Ala., Oct. 20th, 1860, in the 28th year of his age. He was born at Bellasi, Maine, April 10, 1831. Bro. Bradford being of consumptive form, he thought it best to remove from a northern climate to the south; he came to Clarke county, Ala., in 1850, where he was married to Miss Lucy Atkinson. There were born unto them a son and a daughter, who, with their mother, survive him, but sorrow not as those who have no hope, for he certainly gave evidence of an assurance which he had of a better inheritance—an inheritance in heaven. He said to a minister of the Gospel who visited him: "I have found Jesus precious to my soul. I am ready, anxious, waiting for my Redeemer to come and take me to himself." He professed to find the Savior on his bed of affliction; sent for the Circuit preacher, and joined the M. E. Church.

H. B. FARISH.

MRS. SARAH P. OUSELY, wife of Jesse L. Ousely, died in Auburn, Ala., Nov. 23d, 1860. She was born in Hancock county, Ga., in 1796; was married in 1813, joined the Methodist Church in Putnam county, Ga., in 1823. She was a meek, quiet Christian, held in much esteem by her acquaintances. She loved the house of God, and as her infirm health prevented her attendance, she proposed purchasing a house near enough to the Church to hear an occasional word. She died suddenly.

E. J. HAMMILL.

EDUCATIONAL.

SOULE'S COMMERCIAL COLLEGE.—Corner St. CHARLES and COMMON STREETS, Entrance, 56 St. Charles street. (Established in 1856.)

OPEN DAY AND EVENING FOR ENTIRE YEAR.

Book keeping, Penmanship, Arithmetic, the French and English Languages, practically taught. Catalogues, containing full information, sent free to all who wish

Nov. 26, 1860. 1m

CENTENARY COLLEGE OF LOUISIANA.—THE next term of this Institution will open on Monday, the first of October, 1860.

FACULTY.

REV. JOHN C. MILLER, M. A., President and Professor of Mental and Moral Science.
REV. W. H. SEALES, M. A., Professor of Mathematics
REV. JOHN A. WHEAT, M. A., Professor of Greek
GEORGE H. WILLY, M. A., Professor of Latin.
A. R. ROLCOMBE, M. A., Professor of Natural Science.
REV. J. E. SUNSTROM, M. A., Professor of Modern Languages
REV. A. G. MILLER, M. A.
WM. N. POTTER, M. A.
R. D. NORWORTHY, M. A., Tutor
LEWIS FITZHUGH, Tutor

Tuition per Session of five months, payable in advance

In Preparatory Department	$21 00
In College Department	30 00
Matriculation Fee on entering College Department	5 00
Music extra	30 00

Boarding can be obtained at the Steward's Hall, or in private families at prices varying from ten to fifteen dollars per month. The Institution having in its Faculty extensive buildings, large library, cabinet and apparatus, commends itself to all wishing a thorough classical or practical education.

Centenary College is located at Jackson, La., twelve miles East of Bayou Sara.

For information apply to Rev. C. C. Gillespie, No. 112 Camp street, New Orleans, or to the undersigned, Jackson, La.

JOHN C. MILLER, President.

Aug. 5, 1860. 4y

COLUMBUS FEMALE INSTITUTE.—MILLMOUS, Miss. The Fifteenth Annual Session of this Institution will open on MONDAY, the 1st day of October, 1860.

THIS IS NOT A SECTARIAN SCHOOL.

Tuition and Board not higher than at other Southern Female Colleges. The teachers are all experienced in their professions. The location is remarkably healthy, and the society moral and refined. Columbus is accessible from various directions by daily Stage Lines, and by the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, a branch of which is only a few squares from the Colleges building. Pupils should endeavor to be present at the opening of the Session.

MEMBERS OF THE FACULTY.

Rev. R. F. LAGRANGE, M.A., President.
J. W. M. SQUATTICK, M.D., Secretary.
Rev. W. T. H. Neely, M.A., Professor of Languages, M.A., Mrs. L. E. EAGAR, Mrs. A. PORTMAN, Miss L. H. SEARING, Miss E. S. BERNAUDY, Miss L. STORET, Mrs. M. A. WITHER, Miss R. E. ALEXANDER, Miss E. D. SOUTHGATE.

BOARDING IN THE SEMINARY.—Mr. Larrabee and family, and Dr. Shattuck and family, reside with the Boarders, and have charge of that department.

For further particulars apply for a Catalogue.

Sept. 26th, 1860.

SHARON FEMALE COLLEGE, Located Seven Miles east of Canton, has recently received a new and elegant Chickering Piano Forte, and is prepared to give Young Ladies a thorough Course in Natural Sciences, Languages and Mathematics, and in Music, French and Embroidery, and the various primary and College attainments of English education. Lessons in Vocal Music extra.

Board $12 per month; Washing and Lights, extra. Tuition, from $1 to $2 per session, according to studies. Payments due in advance.

W. L. C. HUNNICUTT, President.

Nov. 7, 1860. 8t

WHITWORTH COLLEGE, FOR YOUNG LADIES, BROOKHAVEN, Lawrence county, Mississippi. Rev. J. P. LEE, A. M., President, assisted by competent teachers.

The Exercises of the Second Collegiate Year will begin September 12th, 1861 and end June 19th, 1861. Friday June 14th Annual Examination begins.

Sunday, June 16th, Commencement Sermon.—17th and 18th, Examinations and Addresses. Night Concert.—Wednesday, June 19th, Commencement Day.

For further particulars apply to

Rev. J. P. LEE President of Secretary.
Rev. M. J. WHITWORTH, Proprietor.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE AT BATON ROUGE.—The Exercises of the Institute will be resumed on Wednesday, 10th October. As the number of Pupils is necessarily limited, those wishing to secure places will do well to apply as early as practicable.

W. H. S. MAGRUDER.

Aug. 5, 1860.

WESLEYAN FEMALE COLLEGE.—The Twenty Third annual session of this Institution will commence on MONDAY, October 1st, under the superintendence of the following corps of Instructors:

Rev. J. M. Howell, President, and Professor of Modern Science
Rev. [illegible] Ag.
Rev. C. W. Smith, Professor of Mathematics.
Rev. F. H. Forster, Professor of Ancient Languages.
Rev. W. C. Rees, Professor of Natural Sciences.
C. Schwartz, Professor of Modern Languages and Painting.
Miss M. E. Carleton, Assistant in Academical Department.
Miss C. M. Semple, Assistant in Primary Department.
P. G. Gumbinger, Senior Professor of Music.
S. D. Mathews, Junior do.
Miss L. Gottenberger, and Miss M. A. Matthews, Assistants in Music.
Mrs. A. Schwartz, Teacher of Ornamental Branches.

$240 will meet the annual expenses of a Student, for Board and Tuition, if no extra studies be taken. The expense of furnishing a room varies from $5 to $12.

In addition to the regular College course, there will be henceforth an Academic and a Primary Department, all under the charge of the same general faculty.

Letters on Financial business should be directed to Professor C. Schwartz, the Accountant of the Faculty, on all other matters, either to the President or to

W. H. SEALES, Secretary.

BASCOM FEMALE SEMINARY, Grenada, Miss. This Institution, with a neat Boarding Department, and experienced and faithful Teachers, will commence its next Session, 8 pt. 24th 1860.

Rev. S. D. OGBURN, President.

Aug. 28, 1860.

Port Gibson Collegiate Academy for Young Ladies will open its twenty second annual session on the 1st Monday in October. Number of pupils last session, 100. A new building now in process of erection will be ready for occupancy early in October with accommodations for thirty additional boarders. A room has been erected for Chemical uses, with implements for scientific physical training, which are beauty, grace and health.

The College is furnished with Maps, Charts, Globes, a Cabinet of Minerals, Philosophical and Chemical Apparatus, a full corps of efficient and faithful teachers, and we refer to young ladies desiring an education in a high order of advantages.

Terms per session of forty weeks, board and tuition in English branches, from $162 to $240. Music, Languages and ornamental branches at the usual extra charges.

Catalogues, with full information, can be had by addressing

REV. B. JONES, Port Gibson, Miss.

GREENSHORO' (ALA.) HIGH SCHOOL.—A Select School for Boys.—Rev. J. W. N. SIMMS, A. M., M. D., Principal and Proprietor

This School has been in operation for fifteen years, and is now full, with the exception of a few vacancies. Terms for Boarders and Tuition, $250 per session of five months, payable one half in advance. Board, $12 per month; Washing and Lights, extra. Tuition, from $1 to $2 per session, according to studies. Payments due in advance.

Board and Tuition, $300 per session. Location healthy. Buildings and grounds extensive. Apparatus, Library, Maps, Charts and Globes, and Philosophical Apparatus. Instruction in Vocal Music and French and Embroidery, and the various primary and College attainments of English education. Lessons in Vocal Music extra.

Board $12½ per month; Washing and Lights, extra. Tuition, from $1 to $2 per session, according to studies. Payments due in advance.

Sept. 12, 3m

READYVILLE SEMINARY, BATON ROUGE, LA., will commence its next session on October 15th. The patrons of the school are earnestly requested to have their daughters and wards present to enter classes at that time.

Sept. 12 3m MRS. M. W. READ, Principal.

Feliciana Female Institute, Jackson, La.—The regular exercises of this Institution will be resumed on Monday, October 1st. Large additions have been made to the buildings and premises. With good discipline, thorough teachers, complete apparatus, and newly furnished apartments, a superior facilities are afforded for a thorough female education.

Sept. 12, 1860. THOS. W. BROWN, President.

PROFESSIONAL.

JAMES J. HUTCHINSON, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Covington, Algiers, will Practice in Somter and the adjoining counties. [ap24]

J. E. ELAM, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, BATON ROUGE.

REFERENCES.—Hemenway & Gaines and Chinn & Bolton, New Orleans; W. S. Pike and A. Malta, Baton Rouge.

FUQUA & KILBOURNE, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, Clinton, Louisiana, practice in the Parishes of East and West Feliciana and East Baton Rouge.

References—Payne & Harrison, Byrne, Vance & Co., W. and C. Leichford and Co., Broadwell & Haynes, and Pritchard & Flower, New Orleans. mar 7 1y

W. P. WINANS. J. T. HEATH.

WINANS & HEATH, ATTORNEYS AND COUNSELORS at Law, Shreveport, La. Office—Market street. Will practice in the courts of Caddo, De Soto, Bossier, Claiborne, and Bienville.

G. SPENCER MAYO, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW, Harrisonburg, La., will practice in the Courts of Catahoula, Concordia, Tensas and Franklin Parishes.

J. C. & T. H. LEWIS, ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW, will practice in the Parishes of Catahoula, Caldwell, Franklin, Ouachita and Morehouse, Office at Harrisonburg, La. Oct. 3, 1860. 1y.

COMMISSION MERCHANTS.

A. H. MAY & CO., COTTON FACTORS AND General Commission Merchants, No. 94 Gravier street, New Orleans. au21y

J. C. PAYNE, G. W. HUNTSINGER. J. P. HARRISON, WM. H. HARRISON.

PAYNE & HARRISON, COMMISSION MERCHANTS No. 51 Union street, New Orleans. dec7-1y

LEONARD FASH. F. S. LUCKETT.

LEONARD FASH & CO. COMMISSION MERCHANTS, and Dealers in Western Produce, 61 Magazine street, New Orleans. Oct 24.

JOHN F. WYCHE & CO., COTTON FACTORS and Commission Merchants, No. 116 Common street, New Orleans.

JOS. W. CARROLL, JOS. COY, C. W. G. KIMBALL, J. N. SIVEN.

CARROLL, COY and Co., Cotton Factors, No. 38 Perdido street "Factors Row," New Orleans. July 10, 1860. 12 m's

MOORE & HROWDER, Successors to Moore and Vansuden, Commission Merchants, and Cotton Factors, No. 44 Carondelet street, New Orleans. my 19, 1860.

LANE, SALTER & Co., COTTON AND SUGAR FACTORS, No. 128 Common-St. Oct 17, 1860.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CUDDY, BROWN & CO.—HAVING CLOSED THE office of MILES OWEN & Co., the first day of January, 1857, my business connection in future in this city will be with Messrs. Cuddy, Brown & Co., 38 Camp street. MILES OWEN

L. SAWYER, DEALER IN WOODEN-WARE, PAPER, Brooms, Matches, Cordage, Twines, Scales; and DEARBORN'S CELEBRATED BALANCES for Weighing Cotton, Sugar and Tobacco, No. 89 MAGAZINE STREET New Orleans. ap20

J. H. KELLER, SOAP MANUFACTORY, CORNER of Howard and St. Andrew streets, New Orleans.

☞ A good supply constantly on hand, and all orders promptly filled.

PRINTERS' ROLLERS.—T. BEAULIEU IS READY to cast Printers' Rollers of the best quality, upon reception of orders either from city or country, at short notice. It is just as foolish for each pressman to cast his own rollers as it is for each man to make his Gas-light. Work warranted. He is the only one of the kind.

Address T. BEAULIEU,
Office of the Christian Advocate.
112 Camp st., New Orleans.

oc13

PH. P. WEHLEIN, PUBLISHER AND DEALER in SHEET MUSIC and MUSIC BOOKS. Dealers will be supplied at the regular Board pl. Trade prices. The PIANO FORTES are of the first manufacture, and sold at Eastern prices. MELODEONS of Jourard's wholesale and retail. PIANOS, VIOLINS, GUITARS, and all other articles connected, joined and repaired.

Call at the Music store, No. 5 Camp street. PH. P. WEHLEIN.

ISAAC T. HINTON, BOOK AND JOB PRINTER, 37 Commercial Place, New Orleans, executes with neatness, Pamphlets, Funeral Billheads, Circulars, Labels, Bill Heading, Checks, and every description of Plain and Fancy Printing.

FASHIONABLE CLOTHING.—T. B. JACKSON & CO. No. 821 Gravier street, keep supplied by frequent arrivals from New York a well assorted stock of CLOTHING and Gents FURNISHING Goods of every description, which we will sell low for cash.—Also a good assortment of TRUNKS, CARPET BAGS, VALISES, SILK and BINGHAM UMBRELLAS, &c. &c.

All on reasonable terms. T. B. JACKSON & Co.,
Jan 31 No. 82 Common street, 2 doors from Carondelet.